HOLLYWOOD AND CN

Many celebrities go to Hollywood, live and work there a while, go away and write a "panning" book, article or story about it.

Mae West, of "Diamond Lil" fame, is to reverse the process. According to Paramount publicity, Miss West believes that Hollywood "has a sweetening and cleansing effect upon one's views of life." And in the same story the company declares that the lady will play "one of her TYPICAL stage roles in Paramount's "Night After Night.'" Further on in the press announcement, Miss West is credited with being the proud author of "Sex" and "Pleasure Man," besides "Diamond Lil."

It happened last week in connection with the taking of depositions in New York by Sam Horwitz, in the Cleveland monopoly and conspiracy suit against distributors.

A defense witness refused to turn over records to Mr. Horwitz and the Cleveland attorney suddenly and quite dramatically served summonses for all to appear right away in District Court. Four taxicabs were summoned and the procession started off from the Bar Association Building in the direction of the Woolworth tower. Mr. Horwitz was in the lead going down Park Avenue, and defense witnesses and distributors' counsel, including Gabriel L. Hess, Louis Phillips and others followed closely behind until someone warned a taxi-driver-for-the-defense to stay far away from Mr. Horwitz' cab. "If we hit him," the second driver was warned, "he'll charge us all with conspiracy."

DOWN WITH THE TRAPEZE SHOOTING!

Many Cameramen Are Tired of Riding Dizzy Perambulator Shots But Mamoulian Defends Them

by LEO MEEHAN
Hollywood Staff Correspondent

Cinematographers are in rebellion against trapeze performances!

No, they have not walked out or otherwise defied their employers, but at a meeting of the American Society of Cinematographers (which is the aristocracy of cameramen), the other night in Hollywood, they spoke vigorously on the subject. Actually, it came under the heading of "perambulator shots."

Which has nothing to do with better babies, but a lot to do with camera machinery swinging madly through midair, or on rails, cranes, rockers or what-not. Of course, a cameraman has to be alongside the contraptions to operate them. No wonder insurance companies have jumped rates up 25 to 50 per cent on cameramen! If you'll recall some of those dizzy shots you've seen on the screen, where the camera zoomed all over the place, up and down, backward and forward, and then remember that the poor cinematographer was with it, you'll know why they are kicking about the acrobatic requirements of the profession.

Whenever cameramen and directors get together, which is a quite common occurrence, an argument about moving camera shots is very likely to break out. And Hollywood is loaded with heated opinions on both sides of this subject. There are those who think a camera ought to run all over the scenery like a paint brush. There are more conservative who think a camera's place is on a tripod, where it was born.

Once upon a time, in the good old silent days, a camera did stand on a tripod, and the tripod stood on the floor, and the action was photographed in front of it. The cameraman sat on a stool, in reasonable comfort, and cranked away while he chewed his gum. Then Germany sent over here a picture called "Variety." Having to do with the affairs of a bunch of trapeze performers, the story was considerably up in the air at times. So the director very properly conceived the notion of sending the camera aloft. What that did to Hollywood's camera technique was plenty. And, being inclined to run to excess on any new trick, Hollywood put the photographic equipment on wheels, started it rolling, no matter if it had reason, or not. It is said that the optometrists of America have been reaping a silver harvest fitting people with spectacles as a result of eye strain produced by motion picture perambulator shots. So busy was the spectator at some productions trying to follow the camera that he lost track of the story entirely. One scenarist, anxious to please the boss and the director by inventing a new kind of a moving shot, forgot to put the plot in the script. But what of it, if the perambulating was a success?

But cheer up, something is going to be done about it. At the meeting the other night, attended by several well known directors, Rouben Mamoulian spoke as attorney for the defense. Mr. Mamoulian, far more successful as a screen director than most who have come from the stage, has nevertheless been one of the most consistent users of moving camera shots. Recall "Laughter" as an example. It is his opinion that a director should use a camera as an artist uses his brushes. He believes, and properly so, that often a moving shot can be used to heighten interest and dramatic effect. A fine example is in the very opening sequence of Mr. Mamoulian's production of "Dr. Jekyll & Mr. Hyde." Before we ever saw Fredric March we were, with the camera, put in the position of seeing what March was seeing, moving with him, figuratively using his eyes as he moved about. It is decidedly intriguing. But even Mr. Mamoulian agrees that there should be a reason for moving a camera. The sufficiency of the reason, naturally, lies in the judgment of the director. Not all directors are expert in their judgment on such matters.

A veteran and expert cinematographer, J. A. Dubray, voiced the sentiments of many cameramen when he declared that it was impossible, in most cases, to combine artistic composition and lighting with moving shots. He acknowledged the usefulness of the technique in many cases, but said he believed it was being overdone. He urged that cameramen do all in their power, which is naturally limited, to convince their directors to use such shots sparingly, and only when they were purposeful in advancing and telling the story.

William de Mille, whose directorial service stripes are numerous, recalled the fact that, after all, the use of moving shots was an old story in American production, used long before the Germans started the deluge with "Variety." It was his expressed opinion that a moving shot should be used only to point up or advance the telling of the story.

"If the audience becomes conscious of the fact that the camera is moving, then it is not a success," said Mr. de Mille. "Such technique distracts attention from the telling of a story to a purely mechanical effect. On the other hand, if a moving shot enhances the realism of what is going on in the minds of the audience, then it is distinctly useful in screen story telling."

This seems to epitomize the subject in the minds of those who give serious consideration to the use of perambulators, cranes, zoom lenses and other devices of the kind.

In passing, it may be observed that these days of economy will automatically reduce the number and complexity of moving shots. Generally speaking, they are expensive. One cameraman at the meeting told of a shot which took three days to rehearse and shoot! Sounds implausible, perhaps, but it is entirely within the realm of possibility. The lighting necessary, alone, in many of these shots, is an extremely complicated problem. And the slightest error in photography, movement, reading of lines, renders a "take" useless.

So it seems that the camera in the next year may again sit upon a conventional tripod at least a part of the time, and the cinematographer upon a conventional stool.

NATIONAL ADVERTISERS FAVOR NEWSPAPERS

Newspapers continue to lead among advertising media, a survey of national advertising, comprising a large group of major industries, reveals. The result of the survey was announced this week by the bureau of advertising of the American Newspaper Publishers Association, New York. Of the 32 industrial divisions considered, newspapers were the favored medium in 25. According to the survey, 435 national advertisers invested a total of $143,365,000 in newspaper space during 1931. Of these companies, 190 also used magazine space to the extent of $78,317,815, and 121 used radio broadcasts to the extent of $21,223,862.

Hiram S. Brown, who terminates his connection with RKO at the end of this week, has as yet made no plans for the future, other than a rest and considerable golfing, he said on Wednesday. His retirement from the company, of which he was president, comes as the result of an arrangement made with Merlin H. Aylesworth, his successor, at the time Mr. Aylesworth took over the presidency.

With regard to reports that he would return to his former post as president of the United States Leather Company, Mr. Brown said, "I would not accept the post if it was offered to me."

Lasky's Leave Extended Two Weeks by Paramount

Jesse L. Lasky's three months leave of absence from Paramount Publix Corporation, which expired Monday, has been extended for two weeks, according to a dispatch from Hollywood, Wednesday. Sam Katz, executive vice-president who is now in Hollywood, said this week that there is no change in the situation other than a postponement.

ZIEGFELD, APOSTLE OF GLAMOUR, DIES

"Follies" Producer's Flair for the Grandiose Reflected in Picture Makers' Endeavors

Florenz Ziegfeld—the "Great Glorifier" and star-maker, who, like Jupiter, made his own galaxy out of hand—rests today in a vault at Forest Lawn Memorial Park, Glendale, California.

Death came suddenly on Friday last at Cedars of Lebanon Hospital, Hollywood, to claim one who always "lived to love and loved to live"—a showman extraordinary, whose every day was as completely and gayly colored, and as extravagant, as the glittering, costly and sometimes bizarre costumes which clothed the American beauties of every Ziegfeld musical since 1907.

Mr. Ziegfeld had suffered a heart attack. He died alone, in the arms of Sidney Boggis, who had been his valet for 20 years.

Mr. Ziegfeld was born in Chicago March 21, 1868, the son of Florenz and Rosalie Ziegfeld.

A challenge by Buffalo Bill, issued from the stage of the Academy of Music in Chicago, started Ziegfeld on a theatrical career. Buffalo Bill requested any one of the audience to beat him in an exhibition of marksmanship and Florenz, at 13, accepted the challenge amid the boos and hisses of a lusty voiced audience. He did not win, but he did show such skill that Buffalo Bill engaged him on the spot. Three weeks later his parents caught up with him and forcibly escorted him home.

Supervised World's Fair Music

He worked at his father's music conservatory until 1892, when Florenz was given supervision of music at the Chicago World's Fair.

Then came the big step which began with Sandow, the strong man, in tights and ended some 30-odd years later with Helen Morgan on the piano.

Mr. Ziegfeld loosed an inspiring publicity campaign on Sandow and somehow made it proper and fashionable for society leaders to visit the strong man backstage and feel his tremendous muscles.

While abroad he met a young French girl and thus began the career of Anna Held. He arranged for a Jersey farmer to deliver several large cans of milk to Miss Held's apartment in the Savoy Hotel, where she began to take milk baths. Reporters wrote columns and made the milk bath and Miss Held famous.

Mr. Ziegfeld and Miss Held were married in 1899, but after he linked up with the rising Klaw and Erlanger combine in 1906 he and Miss Held were divorced.

Mr. Ziegfeld went to Europe in 1907 after his partner, Joe Weber, of Weber and Fields, bought him out. He is said to have won between $1,000,000 and $1,500,000 gambling at Monte Carlo and elsewhere while abroad, but overplayed his luck and boarded a steamer for home broke.

In 1914, Ziegfeld married Billie Burke, star in several of his productions. He saw her at a masquerade ball when he was dressed as a tramp, but he stole away and put on evening clothes before requesting an introduction. He courted her quietly, for the most part near Grant's Tomb on Riverside Drive. The wedding took place in Hoboken on the day that "Lefty Louie," one of the Rosenthal murderers, was electrocuted. But it was still big enough news to share the front pages with the execution.

Florenz Ziegfeld and his work often impinged upon the motion picture but never became a part of it. He was none-the-less a very considerable influence in that his flair for the grandiose gave color to all Broadway and consequently to the endeavors of the picture makers.

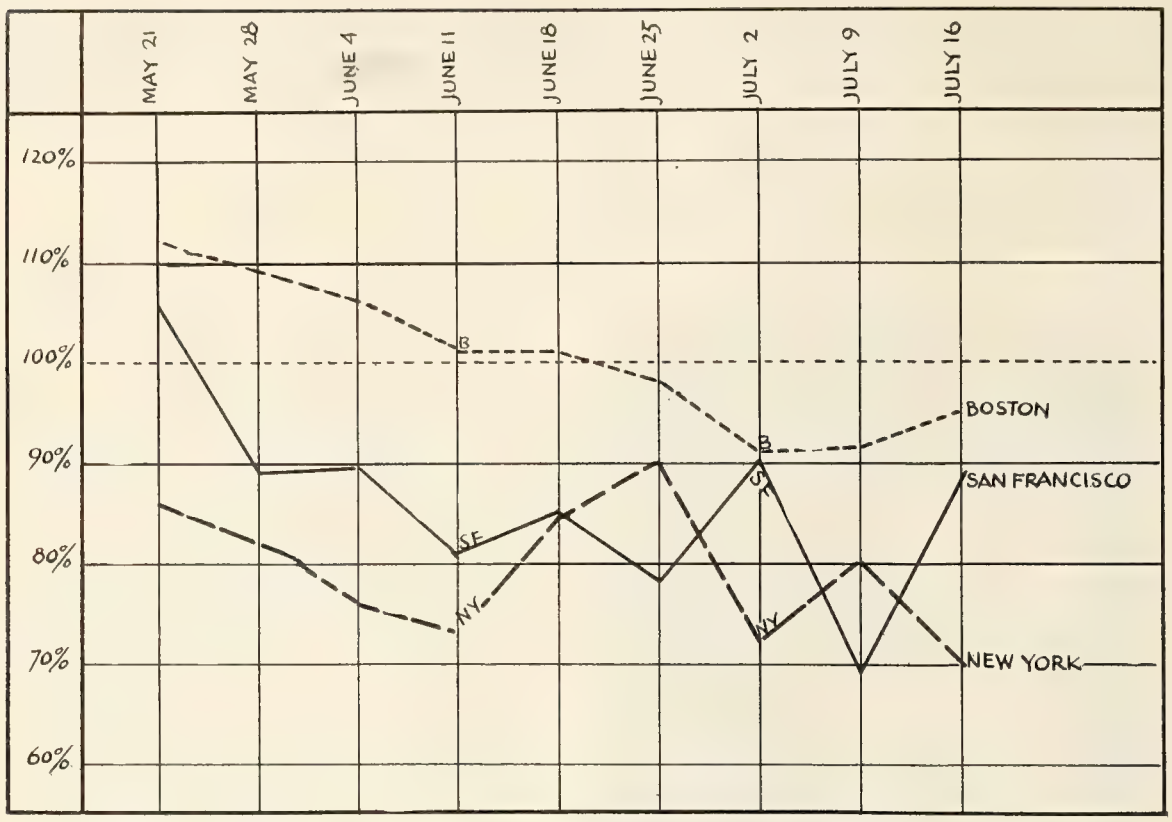
It is most accurate to observe that rarely or never did Ziegfeld achieve art, but he nearly always did make something that was amusement merchandise of quality. The showman of the Follies was charmed with form and sound and color. With him passes something unique, exotic, unlikely to be paralleled in terms of the stage while the motion picture art and mechanism continues to acquire, evolve and usurp. TERRY RAMSAYE

Patricia, their only daughter, and said to have been loved by Mr. Ziegfeld more than anyone else, was born in 1916.

Broadway recalls many of his lavish gestures during a lifetime of extravagance unusual even for Broadway. There is the story of how, to compensate Patricia for the loss of a single butterfly from her collection, he bought her $500 worth.

It was commonly supposed along Broadway that he had gone to Hollywood to investigate the possibilities of talking pictures. Terry Ramsaye, in his "Million and One Nights," records a similar film investigation on the part of Mr. Ziegfeld 36 years ago. In April, 1896, Raff & Gammon, early merchandisers of motion pictures, and Mr. Ziegfeld were engaged in negotiations to film Sandow. Raff & Gammon told Mr. Ziegfeld that "it would result in a big advertisement for Mr. Sandow," but the canny Mr. Ziegfeld did not deliver his stage Hercules to the camera, because Raff & Gammon refused to pay for the performance. Two years previously, Sandow had permitted Raff & Gammon to take photos of his "act" for Kinetoscope, but the original negative had worn out.

Typical of Extravagance



One story told of him, typical of his extravagance, concerned Marilyn Miller, another Ziegfeld star, while she was appearing in Boston. Mr. Ziegfeld suddenly decided her costumes needed cleaning. He wired Miss Miller an order to that effect; he sent another telegram to the wardrobe mistress, one to the stage manager and finally dispatched a messenger by train to Boston to see that his message had been received, and heeded.

It has often been said that Mr. Ziegfeld was "God's gift to the Hollywood film producers," because he developed beautiful stars and Hollywood then took them away from him.

Ziegfeld lived swiftly and well, taking advantage of every convenience that a mechanical age and money could supply. He wore $200 suits, traveled in private railroad cars, always taking his own chef and a retinue with him. When he went hunting he took five Indian guides.

He never wrote letters. When he wanted to communicate with someone he would dictate a hurried telegram of a thousand words or so, or pick up one of the two gold-plated telephones on his desk. Once while lying in bed in the Hotel Warwick, at 56th street and Sixth avenue, he dashed off a thousand-word telegram to Bernard Sobel, his press agent in the Ziegfeld Theatre across the street. He is reputed to have spent $1,000,000 on his home, Burkeley Crest, at Hastings-on-Hudson, New York.

True to the tradition of the stage, the great showman, in death, as in life, waits while the show goes on. He will lie in the Forest Lawn vault until Billie Burke finishes work in the Radio picture, after which he will be borne eastward for Broadway's farewell.

Weekly box office receipts in Boston, New York and San Francisco for the nine weeks to July 16, 1932, are compared in the graph, based upon MOTION PICTURE HERALD's weekly compilation of theatre returns. The 100 per cent dotted line shows the average weekly receipts for each of the three cities during the year 1931.

DOUBLE FEATURES WIN 5 TO 1 IN COAST POLL

Newsreels and Travelogues 2 to 1 Over Comedy and Cartoon Shorts in Questionnaire of San Francisco Casino

San Francisco theatregoers strongly favor double features, voting five to one over singles, in a questionnaire and poll conducted by Irving Ackerman, of the Casino Theatre, San Francisco's largest grind house.

The results are particularly interesting in view of the current nationwide agitation involving double features, a discussion in which exhibitors and distributors everywhere are participants.

Newsreels and travelogues won two to one over comedy and cartoon shorts, with travel and newsreels running almost neck and neck for the first spot, and comedies and cartoons about even in the followup.

An impression among San Francisco film folk held double features to be injurious, and after following this policy consistently for six years, the Casino management set out definitely to establish the tastes of its patrons. It was also felt that comedies found most favor, but the Ackerman poll also dissipates this point insofar as fans attending the Casino are concerned.

The questionnaire also asked: "Does our 'Free Radio Night' (Friday) prove of interest to you?" Patrons are about evenly divided on this, although Mr. Ackerman said that free gifts are a business stimulator at the Casino.

To the question, "Is there anything about our show that displeases you?" Few criticisms of the house and its operation were reported.

The Casino seats 2,800 and operates on a strictly first-run "atmosphere," at 25 cents top. It is situated downtown near the popular-priced apartment house district.

Double Bills a Problem In Chicago and Memphis

Bookings of product in Chicago for the 1932-33 season are expected to be complicated by several problems, chiefly brought about through the recent admission price slashes and the double feature situation in the city. Exhibitors and distributors alike are waiting to ascertain the protection demands of the circuits, particularly Warner and Balaban and Katz. It is generally hoped that B. & K. will definitely return to a single feature policy.

All suburban theatre owners of Memphis, Tenn., will meet late this week to protest against the double feature and bargain night policies, according to M. A. Lightman, president of the MPTOA and leading Memphis exhibitor.

Buffalo Group Asks Censor Body; Attacks Crime Films

The Federation of Italian Societies of Buffalo, through Stanley S. Jenkins, councilman, plans the introduction into the city council of a resolution calling for "an advisory board of censorship" as a move to prevent the showing of crime and gangster films in the city. It is the intention to complain to the state censor body when a picture is found objectionable by the group.

Warner Stars to Have No Hand in Material Selection

No stars of either Warner or First National will in the future have any hand in the selection of the stories or screen roles in which they will appear, according to a joint statement issued late last week by Jack L. Warner, vice-president in charge of production, and Darryl Zanuck, associate executive at the Coast studio.

Justifying this stand the executives stated their belief that the producer, whose financial investment is involved in each picture made, should have the right to choose screen material, without being hampered by the desires of the individual player. No starring contract in the future, beginning with the new season's production on August 1, will permit the player to have a hand in material selection. This is probably the first time that any producer has flatly set a policy in this regard.

It is pointed out that disagreements and "walkouts" have resulted from discussion of material in the past.

The statement says in part:

"Almost without exception, the successful, artistic and box office successes that we have produced in the past, have been those pictures in the choice of which we were guided solely by the demands of the general public.

"We know that through the judicious selection of stories in the past, by the producer, the stars of today have been elevated to their present popularity on the screen. . . ."

Warner will send seven pictures into work at the Burbank studio on the Coast when the new season production gets under way on August 6.

Three specials are included in the seven. They are: "20,000 Years in Sing Sing," with Spencer Tracy; "I'm a Fugitive," with Paul Muni; "Silver Dollar," starring Edward G. Robinson. The four features which will be released as part of the 1932-33 schedule are: "Central Park," with Joan Blondell, Charles Farrell; "Betrayed," with Barbara Stanwyck; "You Said a Mouthful," with Joe E. Brown; "The Match King," starring Warren William.

Action will be the dominant note of the productions of the Warner plant for the new season, it was indicated by Mr. Warner, on the Coast.

Consolidated Film Quarter Net Profit Equals $192,457

A net profit of $192,457 is reported by Consolidated Film Industries, Inc., for the quarter ended June 30, after depreciation, federal taxes and charges. The profit is equal to 48 cents per share on 400,000 shares of $2 preferred stock, and compares with $294,152 net, equivalent to 17 cents per share, after preferred dividends, on 524,973 shares of common in the previous quarter.

In the quarter ended in June, 1931, the company's net was $285,900, or 16 cents per share on the common. Net profit for the six months ended June 30, 1932, was $486,609, equal to 16 cents per share of common stock, which compares with $832,840, or 81 cents per share in the first half of last year.

THE man who has devoted a Life and a Career to the perfection of the short comedy. He was the trail-blazer in the beginning. He is the trail-blazer today. Especially today his name assumes a new importance. Showmen who are abandoning dual features for the balanced program of feature picture and selected short subjects are looking to him. Of his entire field, he alone has recognized the importance of FEATURE strength, STAR power and DE LUXE production values in short comedies.

NEW KONTINGENT LAW REQUIRES ALL DUBBING BE DONE IN GERMANY

Revised Regulations Also Aim Directly at Prohibiting Distribution of Anti-German Pictures; Market Limited

The most serious effects of the new German quota regulations, published in Berlin last week, will be felt chiefly by American companies and producers of other countries who dub pictures at their own studios before dispatching them into Germany. Hereafter, all dubbing must be done in Germany. Also, German versions of English or other talkers must be 75 per cent German, which may further diminish the production of German versions in countries other than Germany.

Otherwise, the new kontingent will not seriously retard the foreign distribution of American films. In recent months, distributors of this country have found a limited market in Germany because there have been few pictures suited for showing there. American companies now have more quota permits than they can use.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and Paramount are the principal dubbers of product exported to Germany. MGM's dubbing has been done at Culver City, while Paramount has been using its studios at Nice, France.

A principal clause inserted into the new quota regulations is aimed to prohibit foreign producers from marketing anti-German product.

Foreign managers of American distributors in New York have made no concerted plans of a retaliatory nature, nor will they discuss the regulations jointly.

Contrary to previous procedure, and because the German Reichstag is dissolved, the German government issued on June 28, 1932, a temporary decree continuing the law on the exhibition of foreign films for 1932-33, or from July 1, 1932, to June 30, 1933. The regulations in execution of this law, as translated by Trade Commissioner George R. Canty, U. S. agent in Berlin, follow, in part:

I. GENERAL PROVISIONS

Section 1

Foreign films intended for public exhibition in Germany must be registered with the Foreign Film Recorder. (Translator's Note: To "register" a foreign film is to "apply for a permit" for it.)

Section 2

A film is to be determined as a German film provided:

1. A film is produced by Germans, or by a company established in Germany under German law;

2. The interior shots and — in so far as the nature of the subject permits— also the exterior are made in Germany;

3. The manuscript, and in sound films the music, is written or composed by Germans;

4. The production supervisor and directors are Germans;

5. Seventy-five per cent of all persons engaged in the various categories participating in production are Germans.

Section 3

In this section are defined features, educational and cultural films, newsreels and weekly reviews, advertising films, shorts, and sound films.

Section 4

Before contracts are closed the film must be once publicly shown in Germany.

Contracts are null and void that violate or circumvene paragraph 1.

Section 5

Except as provided in Sections 9 and 13, film distributors only are entitled to apply for permits. Should an applicant undergo a practical or legal curtailment of his ability to benefit by this privilege his right to apply for further permits lapses from the time such curtailment takes place.

Section 6

In accordance with Sections 7 to 15, qualified applicants receive a permit from the minister of the interior.

II. FEATURE FILMS

Section 7

For each film year the total number of permits to be issued for sound films will be determined. Four-sevenths of these totals will be pro-rated among qualified applicants, proportionately as the number of German long sound feature films, originally distributed by them during the previous film year, compares with the total number of such films. A permit can be demanded for such films only provided it is proved against which foreign film the permit is to be applied. (Translator's Note: It is probable that this provision has been inserted to free the film authorities from an arbitrary decision against the further use of a permit after the censors have disapproved the film which was registered against the permit in question.) Five short films of not more than 300 meters negative length each or three short films of not more than 500 meters negative length each will be regarded as one long feature. Double credit will be given for German films certified by the competent authorities in accordance with Section 9 of the Reichsrat's regulations of June 12, 1926, concerning the entertainment tax. (That is, German cultural films, certified by the competent authorities as entitling the exhibiting theatre to reduction in the entertainment tax during the time they are shown.)

If films are distributed for only a limited territory, qualified regional distributors will receive fractional permits.

Section 8

To short films Section 11 applies, irrespective of their contents. Insofar as foreign educational and cultural films do not come in question, a length of at least 250 meters will suffice to comply.

Section 9

A further two-sevenths of the total number of permits established under Section 7, paragraph 1, will be used as follows:

German citizens or companies established under German law and situated in Germany, may apply for permits apart from those specified in Section 7 if, possessing the world rights for German sound feature films respectively, they have sold the foreign exhibition rights to foreign buyers and received payment, and provided these films have received suitable public showing in the purchaser's country. Permits as described in Section 6, paragraph 1, will be pro-rated among the qualified applicants, pro-

German Picture Is Defined as One in Which 75 Per Cent of All Participating in the Production Are Germans portionately as the total of their receipts from foreign sales. These permits will not be issued before the first of January each year.

Section 10

One-seventh of the total number of permits established under Section 7, paragraph 1, sentence 1, are placed at the disposal of the minister of the interior to be used at his discretion to overcome possible hardships in connection with the issuance of permits for the exhibition of sound films. He also disposes of such permits remaining unused under the provisions of section 7.

III. EDUCATIONAL AND CULTURAL FILMS

Section 11

This section embraces educational and cultural films only.

IV. NEWS REELS AND ADVERTISING FILMS

Permits may be issued without restriction for newsreel and advertising films.

V. SPECIAL CASES, PENALTIES, INTERIM MEASURES

Section 13

Persons not film distributors may also apply for permits for single presentations of foreign films of special artistic or cultural value or embodying technical advances, but not for commercial purposes.

Section 14

Qualified applicants may use only one-half of the permits to which they are entitled under Section 7 and Section 9, paragraph 2, or which they acquire under the provisions of Section 6, paragraph 2, for the registration of films falling under sentence 1.

Section 15

Allocation of permits may be refused for films the producers of which continue to distribute on the world market films, the tendency or effect of which is detrimental to German prestige, or for films produced in countries where the exploitation of German films is subject to restrictions.

Section 16

Whoever presents untrue statements will be penalized in accordance with Section 2 of the law concerning the exhibition of foreign films. In addition, the issue of further permits can be suspended or refused.

Section 17

For the film year, from July 1, 1932, to June 30, 1933, the number of permits to be issued for sound feature films is set at 105, and for silent feature films at 70.

Section 18

In case of a substantial change in the condition of the film market or for other important reasons, the minister of the interior may issue 20 permits in addition to the 175 authorized.

YOUR PUBLIC

by RITA C. McGOLDRICK

THE General Federation of Women's Clubs has a roster of more than three million members. The ramifications of its activities go deeply into our national life, bringing definite results in civic and community betterment. One of the chief interests of the Federation, through all of its component groups, is a constructive program in behalf of better motion pictures. It is, therefore, of particular importance to receive from so powerful an organization a formal set of co nclusions covering its experiences in this field over a four-year period. The following findings hold a high note of encouragement for an industry that must depend more and more upon the goodwill and helpfulness of the organized public.

The Federation's statement is as follows:

"Our experience in the past four years leads us to believe that:

"1. The public will buy picture entertainment when the product is worthwhile.

"2. Misleading picture titles and lurid advertising tend to diminish attendance at the theatres.

Says Cooperation Pays

"3. Theatre owners profit by cooperating with local civic groups.

"4. Local communities should develop a feeling of responsibility for the quality of motion pictures offered, and of obligation in working with theatre owners to meet the need for selective family entertainment.

"5. Motion pictures have been a great leveler of class distinction.

"6. Any over-emphasis of sex in a picture should be openly and continually opposed because it offends good taste and tends to destroy accepted standards of morality.

"7. Openly suggestive pictures or those on the borderline are a stupid offense against an intelligent public.

"8. There is an undiminished demand for the worthwhile in screen entertainment.

Twofold Responsibility

"9. The industry has a responsibility in furnishing wholesome entertainment and we have one in the appreciating and supporting of it.

"10. Quality pictures in increasing quantity is the great need today with any questionable dialogue or action eliminated at the production source.

"11. Mass entertainment is the business of the industry and the accepted decent standards of the life of the masses must be recognized.

"12. While ultra-sophisticated plays filled with smartly risque dialogue may appeal to certain groups or to city audiences, it is not suitable material for mass entertainment for the neighborhood theatre.

"13. Pictures of outstanding worth have been given us, some of them failures financially due to the fact they are above the general level of public taste.

"14. The motion picture taste of the public at large, of which we are a part, establishes a level for picture production, and the responsibility for raising the standard of screen entertainment rests upon the public.

Appreciate Cheerful Films

"15. During months of economic strain we have been given picture entertainment that has served to cheer, amuse, encourage and take the minds of people the country over away from their troubles, and for this we express our appreciation.

"16. There is a higher percentage of worthwhile pictures in centers where Motion Picture Councils are working cooperatively with theatre managers.

"17. The trend at present and possibly for the coming year in pictures seems to be toward films of adventure and mystery.

"18. There has been a more careful supervision of titles this past year, resulting in fewer misleading and suggestive ones. A study of the monthly reviews in this connection is profitable."

Court Sustains Decision in St. Louis Amusement Action

The Missouri supreme court at St. Louis has sustained the refusal of the St. Louis circuit court to reduce a $400,000 appeal bond fixed by Circuit Judge Albert D. Nortoni in the St. Louis Amusement Company receivership case.

Warner, which controls the St. Louis Amusement Company, sought to force the lower court to reduce the bond to $150,000, contending that the $400,000 bond was excessive and unreasonable. The majority interests have appealed from the decision of Circuit Judge Granville Hogan in appointing temporary receivers for the company early last November. Until the company perfects the appeal bond of $400,000 the receivers will continue in charge of the group of 23 neighborhood and suburban theatres.

Film Welfare Group Formed

The Film Welfare League, Inc., has incorporated at Sacramento, Cal., and plans to dispense charity among needy members of the Hollywood film colony. Headed by eight directors, it has a proposed membership of 1,000.

Take Portland Theatres

Mike Newman, Pacific Northwest general manager for Universal, has completed a deal in Portland, Ore., whereby Colonel Woodlaw and Associates have taken over the Egyptian, Bob White and Bagdad theatres in Portland.

Mayberry Joins Paramount

William Mayberry, formerly assistant casting director at First National studios, has joined the staff of Fred Datig, Paramount casting director.

Miss Pickford in East

Mary Pickford has arrived in New York to complete final arrangements for her next film, for which Frances Marion has done the story.

Elliott Promises Inquiry Into Kaplan Union Methods

William C. Elliott, president of the International Association of Theatrical Stage Employees, plans to give special attention to the racketeering charges brought against Sam Kaplan, president of the New York Local 306, motion picture projectionists. Mr. Elliott promised such action before the executive council of the American Federation of Labor, in session recently at Atlantic City.

Court action has been instituted against the method of operation of the union under Kaplan's direction. Members had charged that Mr. Kaplan fixed his salary at an unreasonable figure and forced through motions for donations to him. The Federation Council considered a report of its legislative agent concerning the New York union.

Columbia Working on 18; 500 Workers Are Added

With four features in production, two in the cutting room and 14 others in final stages of preparation, activity reached a peak at Columbia's coast studios last week. According to press dispatches from Hollywood, 500 additional workmen, carpenters and laborers were added to the payroll early in the week to aid in the production spurt.

"Parole Girl," by Aben Kandel, was added to the 1932-33 schedule as a unit left for Arizona to make "Wild Horse Stampede," starring Rex and featuring wild horses. "Bottom of the Sea," in which an octopus and a killer shark will be screened in a fight undersea, is also set for early production.

Named Foreign Agent

Auten and Wild, Inc., foreign distributing company, has been appointed foreign sales representative for Screencraft Attractions, Inc., and for the Picture Classics, Inc.

Zeidman With RKO Radio

Bennie Zeidman, formerly with Paramount and other major companies, and more recently an independent producer, has been signed by David O. Selznick, in charge of RKO Radio production, as acco-ciate producer of the Bill Boyd and Tom Keene series of outdoor films.

Loew Plans World Flight

Arthur M. Loew, head of the M-G-M foreign department, will leave New York on September 10 on a world tour by plane. He expects to visit all the foreign exchanges of the company during the tour, to occupy two and one-half months. Using Hal Roach's plane, Loew will be piloted by Captain Dickson.

Lloyd May Star for Schenck

Harold Lloyd may star in "Whistling in the Dark," current stage play, to be released by United Artists next season. Joseph M. Schenck, who is producing the film, may use Stuart Erwin in the event that Lloyd refuses the part.

Warner to Show English Film

Warner will release "Illegal," first of the company's English-made films, in the United States on August 6, following a prerelease engagement at the New York Winter Garden July 28.

HOLLYWOOD OPENINGS

David O. Selznick of Radio Gives Five Dollar Premiere at 55-Cent Preview of "Bird of Paradise"

by LEO MEEHAN
Hollywood Staff Correspondent

Something new in the way of world premieres was offered Friday night by David O. Selznick, executive producer, and his Radio studio staff. It was a preview staged with lights, hordes of admiring peasants, formally invited press representatives and critics, a party afterward—in fact, all the fanfare and parade of the Five Dollar Premiere. And all for 55 cents a ducat at the Ritz Theatre, a neighborhood house on Wilshire boulevard.

Heretofore, when local houses had advertised "studio feature preview" on the marquee, the name of the picture had not been divulged to the public. In this case, Selznick announced the name of the picture, and the theatre ran a slide the night before, telling its patrons all about the big show to come. So the affair took on something of a world premiere aspect, though held just as a preview showing in a neighborhood house.

The picture, by the way, was "Bird of Paradise," which has been in preparation for these many, many months. It has all the earmarks of registering among the big numbers of the year. Mr. Selznick and all others connected with the enterprise were showered with congratulations that were very sincere. It wasn't the customary post-preview backslapping. King Vidor has done a whale of a directorial job, the story has been given a liberal, modern adaptation which makes it far more entertaining than the original play. Joel McCrea and Dolores Del Rio invest the leading characters with a romantic beauty that delights, and the native backgrounds (many of which were made in Hawaii) are charming. Count this one as very definitely "in the bag" even if it did take a lot of time and cost a pile of money.

The night before, at the same theatre, Radio ran a preliminary preview of the Cooper-Schoedsack special, "Most Dangerous Game." It was in the nature of a try-out run to check what an audience liked and didn't like, and the film has gone back into the cutting room for working over before final presentation. It is a weird tale of a Russian big game hunter who, tiring of shooting tigers, lions and crocodiles, hies himself to a remote island in the South Seas and devotes himself to killing human beings. Just to make it sporting he uses a bow and arrow technique! Leslie Banks was imported to Hollywood to do this queer characterization, and he does it quite to perfection. Joel McCrea is also featured and does his stuff very well. Radio seems hot for Joel these days; and why not? He is turning in fine work, deserves the breaks. Chalk "Most Dangerous Game" in the meller-thriller-shocker class.

Two productions from the Warner studios also popped out for preview during the week, a bang-up Powell-Francis picture called "One Way Passage" and one of the Warner-Constance Bennett numbers, "Two Against the World." The latter is not as strong as it might be, in spite of lavish production and a good cast. Story material is pretty weak and slow. The Bennett pull will have to carry this one.

On the other hand, "One Way Passage" is the best with William Powell and the gorgeous Kay Francis for a long time. The parts are perfectly suited to both of them, and there's swell direction by Tay Garnett. It all takes place on a liner bound from China to San Francisco and is reminiscent of "Trans-Atlantic," though a different story. It has plenty of comedy, romance and drama for anyone.

Tiffany has done a difficult trick extremely well in screening the famous stage play, "The Last Mile." It is no mean feat to confine an entire feature length production to a single drab set, the death house in a prison, and keep it moving. Sam Bischoff, production chief at Tiffany, stepped out of character to direct this one personally, as it was his pet story. All in the cast are new, and they all give great performances. It is a sincere and moving record of what happens among men awaiting their turns in the electric chair, and deserves to be rated among the serious screen efforts of the year.

Productions like "Last Mile," "Strange Interlude" and "Back Street" bring up an interesting question anent censorship. Each is an earnest and respectful treatment of a serious problem, but each is likely to have troubles with the censorial authorities over the country—"Last Mile" because convicts are seen to shoot prison guards, which is supposed to be bad for Willie, or someone, the other two because they present two peculiar domestic problems which involve sex relations out of wedlock. It cannot be said in any of the three cases that the slightest effort was made to be sensational, to use the situations for ulterior showmanship. If censors turn down films like these, it looks like we would have to stick to moronic themes, or at least to properly white-washed drama popularly designated as "family entertainment." Not that most of the product shouldn't be good for the whole family, but, after all, the stage for centuries has from time to time presented expositions of serious problems, and for adult minds. It will be unfortunate if the screen, which is now a far more facile medium, cannot do the same.

Claude Cooper Dead

Claude Cooper, 51, character comedian, who played in and directed comedies for the old Thanhauser studios in Yonkers, N. Y., died at his home in New York last week. He is survived by his widow, Antoinette Cooper.

Akerson in Campaign Work

George Akerson, vice-president of Paramount, and former secretary to President Hoover, will direct eastern publicity for the Republican National Committee.

Army's Theatres Compete Unfairly, Witness Charges

Charges that motion picture theatres at army camps and posts compete with privately owned theatres were made at a hearing last week in Kansas City of the congressional investigation into government competition with private business.

M. W. Borders, Sr., local attorney representing the Federation of American Business, made the charge at the opening session of the investigation conducted by Representative Joseph B. Shannon, chairman of the congressional committee.

Mr. Borders testified the attendance at army post picture shows rightfully should go to privately owned theatres. He declared that in 1928 attendance at the army camp amusement places was 4,476,000 and in 1929 post theatres charged admissions to 4,426,-205 persons and that children were urged to attend the performances. Thirty-nine post theatres operated in 1929 at a profit, earning dividends on the invested capital, asserted Mr. Borders.

Mr. Borders was one of the witnesses representing a number of different large industries. He submitted a 300-page brief in suppport of his contention that the federal government has developed into a bureaucratic octopus that is competing with tax-paying citizens to the extent of hundreds of millions of dollars annually.

Paramount French Official Elected to Important Post

by PAUL GORDEAUX
Paris Correspondent

David Souhami, general manager of the French Paramount company, has been elected vice-president of the Chambre Syndicale Française de la Cinématographie, the directing board of the French industry.

For 15 years Mr. Souhami, who is 35, worked for American film interests in every country in the world, organizing film exchanges in most of the countries where American film offices were not established. For the past two years Mr. Souhami has been heading the French Paramount company and acting as division manager for all Latin European companies.

Paramount is now holding first place in the French market and is the most prosperous motion picture company in France. Mr. Souhami is generally considered to be an important factor in Franco-American cooperation and his personal influence and relations have been instrumental in settling problems in the interest of the trade in both countries.

Mooring Is Named Fox Press Representative for Feature

William H. Mooring, for five years editor of The Bioscope, English film trade paper, and London correspondent of MOTION PICTURE HERALD, has been appointed Fox special press representative for the film "Cavalcade." Mr. Mooring will arrive in Hollywood on August 15, operating from there for three months.

SHOWMEN'S REVIEWS

This department deals with new product from the point of view of the exhibitor who is to purvey it to his own public

THE concept of this department is that the exhibitor is concerned not with any critic's idea of "how good?" or "how poor?" but rather with the question of precisely what the product is and what is to be done with it when and as it is played. The exhibitor, in general, is concerned with the special aspects of strength and of weakness in the product, its appeals and shortcomings, that he may adequately deal with it when he becomes its sponsor to his public. These "review" pages aim to aid the exhibitor as the retailer of the merchandise concerned.—THE EDITOR.

One Way Passage

(Warner Brothers)

Romantic Drama

William Powell and Kay Francis, in roles that are glove-fitting, present a gay, catchy romance with a surprise climax. The picture travels from China to Agua Caliente. Powell is an escaped murderer who has been caught by Detective Warren Hymer, and between Powell's suaveness and Hymer's apparent dumbness, there is built up a line of comedy.

On the boat back to America Powell meets georgeous Kay Francis and a gay romance ensues. Tipsy Frank McHugh, a world crook who has always managed to sidestep the law, provides a lot of fun, particularly with his advice to Powell as to how to escape and to Hymer as to how to keep an eye on a slick crook, at the same time diverting attention from himself.

Powell, who has kept his real identity from Kay, contrives with her to escape from the watchfulness of Hymer and spend a happy day in Honolulu. But his plan to escape for good is knocked haywire, as is another plan to get away just before the ship reaches San Francisco. In the meantime Powell has made a date to meet Kay in Agua Caliente, but the meeting never takes place. The audience is left to conclude that Bill is securely in jail and that Kay's bad heart has finally caught up with her.

You have plenty to sell, and if you sell it in the right way you can bank on "One Way Passage" doing a lot better than average business for you. Primarily you have an interesting story, gayly romantic, with a line of comedy that is good for both belly laughs and smiles. There's dramatic theme and a tinge of suspense. Here's the story of a smart crook who would erase his past life for the love of a girl who doesn't know whether today will be her last or not. Supporting the names of William Powell and Kay Francis you have Aline MacMahon, Warren Hymer and Frank McHugh outstanding.

Kay Francis, as always, is a veritable style show and as the general release date will coincide with the fall season, the picture is particularly adaptable to use as background for a fall fashion show. Likewise there are plenty of opportunities for tieups with steamship and railroad companies along the travel line. There should be a raft of fine still pictures for window display, with the Francis photos for women's wear stores and the Powell pictures for men's toggery shops. Indulge in a little oldtime showmanship—even though it may cost a bit of extra money—and "One Way Passage" should do business for you.—McCARTHY, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Warner Brothers. Directed by Tay Farnett. Based on a story by Robert Lord. Screen play by Wilson Mizner and Joseph Jackson. Art director, Anton Grot. Film editor, Ralph Dawson. Running time, 72 minutes.

Guilty As Hell

(Paramount)

Mystery Drama

Here's a picture that is decidedly different. A woman is murdered. Only the man who murdered her—and your entire audience—know who committed the crime, which takes place in the first hundred feet of the picture. The police, newspaper men, friends and neighbors are ignorant of who did the deed, and because of their ignorance, because of their faith in circumstantial evidence, an innocent man is sentenced to be hanged.

The picture aims to show the working of the ordinary police mind, content to follow the line of least resistance and, as long as a conviction is obtained, disinclined to make any effort to follow up the obvious clues that would have pinned the crime on the man who was guilty as hell.

The production is also a comedy-drama, with rich dialogue, while tense in its situations.

Probably the biggest thing to get over to your audiences is the fact that they have to be in on the start of this picture if they want to know what it's all about. There's no such thing as coming in after the picture is three minutes old and hoping to pick up the thread of the story. Therefore, advertise your exact starting time in every line of copy you prepare.

Edmund Lowe and Victor McLaglen are together again, Lowe as the philandering newspaper reporter, McLaglen as Captain McKinley, the hard-boiled and thick-skulled head of the detective bureau. They maintain their interest in women and with an unrevealed Daisy as the object of their affections. But "My Pal" has taken the place of "Sez You!"

Although there is an oddly clever romance between Adrienne Ames and Lowe that has a surprise climax, it appears unwise to stress this angle. The big point to drive at is that the story is different. And you can bank on the picture to back up your promises.

The original title was "Riddle Me This," apparently more appropriate to the picture but not as sensational or intriguing as "Guilty as Hell." It makes possible a load of exploitation gags from using the court summons idea down to the facsimile jury summons, ordering your audiences to testify to the guilt or decide on the innocence of a man who is trapped in a web of circimstantial evidence. A teaser campaign can be built along the line that you saw Ruth Tincall murdered, so why not tell the police, who are prosecuting an innocent man.

And impress upon every patron the fact that he must be in his seat before the picture starts.—McCARTHY, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. Directed by Erle Kenton. From the play, "Riddle Me This," by Daniel L. Rubin. Screen play by Arthur Kober and Frank Partos. Photographed by Karl Struss. Release date, Aug. 5, 1932. Running time, 80 minutes.

The Age of Consent

(RKO Radio)

Comedy Drama

Because of its daring, because of its radical conception and development, "The Age of Consent" should be given a straight-from-the-shoulder advance campaign, a campaign that will be fully in line with the idea of the story. The theme is the utter disregard which the vast majority of college and high school students have for tradition and precedent.

You will want every mother and father in your community who has a son or daughter in high school or college to see this picture. You'll want every one of those students to see it, too. You won't be able to stir up the maximum amount of interest if you are content to let them get the idea that this is just another "college picture."

There are no great box office names in the cast, although Eric Linden and Arline Judge, with likeable performances in such pictures as "Are These Our Children" and "Is My Face Red" have established fairly strong followings. Dorothy Wilson is making her debut in this picture and you may be able to kick up some interest about her by telling your patrons that she was lifted directly from a stenographer's desk in the Radio lot and skyrocketed to stardom. Richard Cromwell has been featured in several juvenile roles. About that quartet revolves all the romance, drama, tragedy, pathos of "The Age of Consent" and they carry a story with finesse. John Halliday represents the people of another generation. To him they come with their baffling problems, looking for guidance yet hesitant to accept his advice.

If it is possible to see this picture before you play it, you will get more of an idea of its value as a present day piece of entertainment merchandise than pages of words could convey.

The title looks to be the basis on which the most effective campaigns can be built. More than anything else it tells the story of the picture, children who have been educated to think for themselves but are baffled by law and custom of the past, to set up tragedy where they thought they would find happiness.

Get your patrons to believing that here is a picture that will show them clearly the problems that confront their children, that will show them why their children think and act as they do.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

From the play, "Cross Roads," by Martin Flavin. Directed by Gregory LaCava. Dialogue and adaptation by Sarah Y. Mason and Francis Cockrell. Art director, Carrol Clark. Cameraman, J. Roy Hunt. Sound recorder, D. A. Cutler. Film editor, Jack Kitchin. Assistant director, James Hartnett. Release date, August 15, 1932. Running time, 80 minutes.

The Sign of Four

(World Wide)

Sherlock Holmes Mystery

The popularity of the good mystery film being what it is, the exhibitor should have no difficulty selling this to his audience. An Associated Radio production, made by RKO in England, and distributed by World Wide in the United States, the picture offers mystery, interspersed with comedy, a logical development, considerable action and good photography, and above all, a Sherlock Holmes splendidly portrayed.

Arthur Wontner, able English actor, is the Sherlock of Arthur Conan Doyle to the life, and the audience cannot help but be impressed by the characterization. Though Wontner's name is practically unknown in this country, bill him well in the campaign. He is certain to please. Take his phrase, long a familiar line with the innumerable Sherlock Holmes readers: "Elementary, my dear Watson, elementary," and give it to the potential audience in small but frequent doses to whet their appetites.

Do not lose sight of the fact that this is a picturization of one of the best known of the Holmes stories, that it is done well, with the mystery angles logically worked out, and carried along with a considerable portion of fast action.

The title will sell by itself, so long as it is clearly and emphatically identified with Conan Doyle and Holmes. Throw all the mystery stunts you can devise behind that title, "The Sign of Four." The motivation of the story is revenge, vicious, murderous revenge, as practiced by Jonathan Small, played powerfully by Graham Soutten, who, as an escaped convict, knows no limit and wields his wooden leg as a murderous weapon. Weave the subtle deduction and the masterly mind of Sherlock Holmes through these interest-provoking lines. The long hidden treasure is a good angle. It is the cause of the vengeance of Small and his tattooed partner in crime, its discovery brought about a murder, its recovery led to another murder.

The fact that the cast is, with the possible exception of Wontner, unfamiliar to the American audience, should not be an obstacle to success in selling the picture. Play the mystery angles hard, concentrate on the Sherlock Holmes of Wontner, and the film should hold the attention and prove definitely satisfactory entertainment for the audience. There is no reason why the older children should not enjoy the manner and method of the Sherlock Holmes of whom they all undoubtedly have read much.—Aaronson, New York.

The Most Dangerous Game

(RKO Radio)

Melodrama

Here is a thrill—story of a perverted mind. A hunter who has tired of the thrill of tracking big game in the jungles and at the North Pole, now stalks and kills the most clever and most dangerous of all game—human beings. It's also the story of another big game hunter and a girl who are trapped on this weird creature's tropical island, and how they use every bit of woodcraft they possess, every bit of courage and ingenuity, to escape Count Zaroff's ferocity. It has been acted and directed to accentuate its weirdness and realism.

"The Most Dangerous Game" certainly is daring, novel and unusual. Its theme might be considered by some as distasteful. But in view of what "Frankenstein" did with a terror theme, this picture, too, may find unanticipated popularity with theatre-goers.

It presents any number of selling angles. The story is taken from one of the most popular of best selling novels, Richard Connell's book of the same title. For those who are not familiar with the book you have the angles of a man's amazing courage, a woman's devotion, her willingness to dare hazardous terror to protect herself. Your patrons will want to hiss the madman; they'll live with Joel McCrea and Fay Wray as they struggle to outwit Count Zaroff (Leslie Banks).

Concentrate on melodrama and thrilling excitement, the idea of a madman playing a heartless, relentless game of stalking his fellow men, a game that he thought was the ultimate in sport.

Yet don't neglect to ring in that angle of romance, a romance born of fear and the impelling law of self-preservation. And above all, and only subordinate to the title, hammer on the idea that "The Most Dangerous Game" is original. It's entirely an adult picture, far too strong for children. It should be talked about, so concentrate on getting as many customers as possible to see your first performances.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by RKO Radio. Directed by Ernest B. Schoedsack and Irving Pichel. Screen play by James A. Creelman, from the story by Richard Connell. Art director, Carroll Clark. Sound, Clem Portman. Cameraman, Henry Gerrard. Release date, September 16, 1932. Running time, 78 minutes.

Madame Racketeer

(Paramount)

Melodrama

Here's a sweet picture, with down-to-the-earth entertainment, fine comedy in sequence and dialogue, and just dramatic enough to hold interest. The idea of the plot is not new, but the manner in which it has been worked out is novel. While there is a breath of youth and romance to the production, most of the action is centered around Alison Skipworth, Richard Bennett, Robert McWade and J. Farrell Macdonald.

Although the cast is rather lengthy, it lacks an outstanding box office name. This constitutes a problem that will necessitate the finest kind of showmanship. Alison Skipworth, playing the dual role of the Countess of Auburn and Martha Hicks, goes about her work in a manner that smacks very much of the Marie Dressler style. She plays the role of a clever crook, who outsmarts the warden, the detective, the banker, another crook and even her own children.

Those of you who play "Madame Racketeer" will have to resort to building up the strength of the cast on the merits of the story, unless the picture has been given a healthy first-run in your neighborhood. Word-of-mouth advertising should take care of subsequent attendance.

You can promise your patrons laughs, a couple of jerks at the heart strings, humanly pleasing entertainment. If you get over the idea that here is good, clean, wholesome entertainment, sans any sex, grim heroics or wild unreal romance, you will find that the results on "Madame Racketeer" may lift it out the class of the ordinary program picture.

Sell yourself on the idea that you have a good picture and spend a little money in advertising and exploitation built along the "all-laugh" line.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. Directed by Alexander Hall and Harry Wagstaff Gribble. Original story, screen play and dialogue by Malcolm Stuart Boylan and Harvey Gates. Photographed by Henry Sharp. Release date, July 22, 1932. Running time, 72 minutes.

Two Against the World

(Warner Brothers)

Comedy Drama

With Constance Bennett riding a high wave of popularity, "Two Against the World" should prove an easy picture to sell. The story is trite but the picture is lifted by the glamour of Constance Bennett. Not highly dramatic like "Born to Love" or "Common Clay," or sexy like "Bought," it is rather a comedy-drama of surprises, one that presents Constance as more of a comedienne than anything else. Naturally your tip-off on this one is to bill Constance Bennett above everything else, and those showmen who revel in the presentation of names will find a load of them in the cast.

There is romance, and you can work any number of angles about the rich young heiress who set out to woo and win an unknown young lawyer just because he had nerve enough to talk back to her stiff-necked family. There's the drama of the same young lawyer who had to prosecute the girl he was learning to love. There's comedy in the efforts of a newspaper man to hang a sensational news story on an aristocratic and exclusive family. There is suspense, broken when her brother confesses to the murder but is saved by the "unwritten law."

There's human interest appeal as the poverty of a woman with five children to feed is compared with the extravagant luxury of the rich. And there's heart interest as the young lawyer rushes to his sweetheart, about to sail for Europe, and they both realize they have only been the victims of circumstances.

Concentrate your business building campaign on the names of Constance Bennett and Neil Hamilton. Refer to them as the stars of "What Price Hollywood," if you think that is wise in your community.

Don't create the impression that the two young people are struggling against a world of almost insurmountable obstacles. Rather get over the idea of a love story of two young folk kept apart by everything from family pride to circumstantial murder evidence.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Speed Madness

(Mercury Pictures)

Comedy Drama

This latest Richard Talmadge feature, with its leaps from high places into racing autos, its speeding motor boats, its furious fistic combats, was made expressly for the smaller houses in neighborhoods and the Main Streets of the smaller towns and hardly was intended for presentation in the Broadway deluxes. While it's loaded with that type of action entertainment that the youngsters eat up, there's also plenty of kick in it for those grownups who like screen fare that doesn't require too much mental effort.

In the cast are names that ornamented many a major studio production. Lucien Littlefield, Pat O'Malley, Huntley Gordon and Wade Boeteler. Therefore, the houses which feature the Richard Talmadge pictures should play these names in their lobby, marquee, trailer and slide announcements for all they're worth.

The story is clever, has a romantic tinge, and also focuses attention on one of those appealing father-son angles. Their relations permit plenty of comedy, in which Lucien Littlefield presents rib-tickling dialogue.

Because the main plot deals with a speed boat race, preceded by a lot of double crossing and on-again-off-again romance between Talmadge and Nancy Drexel, "Speed Madness" is wide open for tying in with boat building. If your theatre is near a lake or river or on the sea coast, there is opportunity for tieups with speed or motor boat builders or dealers. The polo game sequences point to contacts with sporting goods stores.

Focus attention, however, on the Richard Talmadge action angle, using the other well known names in the cast to lure patrons not familiar with the Talmadge type of entertainment.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

The Last Mile

(World Wide)

Drama

This is a drama of the death house, of men condemned to electrocution, their bitterness toward society, their hatred for prison guards. There is only one woman in it, Louise Carter, as Mrs. Walters, the mother of Richard Walters, and she appears for only a minute or two in an atmospheric shot. It is stark realism from beginning to end, the only easing contrasts being a few Negro spirituals sung by "Cell Number 2"—Daniel L. Haynes.

You have nothing but drama to sell, drama that is strong and livid, well directed, well acted. There is no star, but Howard Phillips, George Stone, Paul Fix and Preston Foster in turn step into the spotlight.

Because "The Last Mile" is such strong drama, it presents a difficult selling problem. People like to read about it—otherwise newspapers would not be so eager to present all the stark details relative to the last moments of condemned criminals. But do they want to see on the screen what they read in the newspapers?

They will if you get over the idea that "The Last Mile" is different drama, no peaches and cream stuff, no silly sentimentality, but attention-holding, stark realism.

It should be sold as such. It is apparent that straight, courageous newspaper advertising will be the best medium to whet the enthusiasm. It would hardly seem wise to go in for any freak exploitation. There is no necessity for transferring your lobby into a replica of a "death house row." The grownups will appreciate it, but it is too strong for the youngsters. —McCarthy, Hollywood.

SHORTS

Fury of the Storm

(Educational)

Interesting

Unusual in photography, as well as in subject matter, is this short, picturing the manner of handling tremendous herds of cattle and sheep on a ranch in Wyoming in the dead of winter and a blinding blizzard. One of the Hodge Podge series, the number is interesting and should have unlimited appeal. Running time, 9 minutes.

Sportsmen's Paradise

(Atlantic Film)

Scenic

To an audience unfamiliar with motion pictures of the activities and cyclorama of the Bavarian Alps, and, of course, to those who have actually been there, these shots should be of unusual interest. Much of the same ground has been covered in other scenics, such as the races three-cornered of motorcycles, autos and airplane in the Alpine snow and ice. Running time, 10 minutes.

Vendetta

Abbreviated Opera

By comparison with the first of this series of Kendall-De Vally Operalogues, this number appears weak. Based on the famed "Cavalleria Rusticana," the subject suffers chiefly from an inferiority in voices, again by comparison with the first. Elsa Petersen, Marianne Mabee, William Wheatley, Jack Howell handle the lead roles. Also, the translation into English of the lyrics seem to considerably detract from the atmosphere usually engendered by opera. The words, incidentally, are often indistinguishable. On the other hand, the background effects are well handled, and the subject is enlightening in its indication of the story of the original, however brief. A different type of short, it is worthwhile.—Running time, 20 minutes.

Killing the Killer

(Principal)

Intense

Dr. Raymond L. Ditmars, able and interesting director of the New York Zoological Gardens, verbally introduces, and in a manner conducts via off-screen description, a rousing, intense battle between two ancient enemies of nature, the courageous, if small, mongoose, and the long and deadly cobra. The fight is splendidly "caught" by the camera, and after vicious attacks and excellent strategy, the mongoose vanquishes the cobra. A bit gruesome, but a splendid subject. The film was originally made in silent form by Ufa as "The Mongoose and the Cobra" and is here presented with the addition of the description by Dr. Ditmars, who appears in an introductory sequence.—Running time, 11 minutes.

The Idol of Seville

Fair

There is fair entertainment and reasonably pleasing musical rendition in this number of the Kendall-DeVally Operalogue series, which is based on the famed "Carmen." Educational is releasing the series. Rene Denny offers the Carmen role with a really capable voice, incidentally, far superior to any other in the rather full cast. The background settings are in a measure artificial, but that detracts but little from the fact that the series has definite value in its offering of the story of opera in brief, easily understood form. There is a definite appeal in this group.—Running time, 20 minutes.

Paris Glimpses

(Vitaphone)

Interesting

E. M. Newman takes his audience to Paris in this number of the Travel Talks series, and shows it the varied beauty of the parks, several of the well known cafes and sections of the city. The major portion of the footage is devoted to the Paris International Exposition, which in addition to general interest, is featured by several impressive shots of the grounds at night, with unusual lighting effects enhancing the effectiveness.—Running time, 9 minutes.

Isle of Isolation

(Capital Film)

Appealing

In this number of the Port o' Call Series the camera roves about the small island of Bali, whereon life moves at a slow and primitive pace, where beauty is pictured in the country, and the women, and where all things are quiet and peaceful. A little-known spot on the globe, Bali, pictured, is a pleasant step backward for any audience. Accompanying dialogue is well rendered, and the short is an enlightening and well executed subject. Running time, 10 minutes.

Four Wheels—No Brakes

(Vitaphone)

Only Fair

Mr. and Mrs. Jack Norworth, the "Naggers" of this shorts series, become extremely tiresome with the eternal bickering which is their comedy manner. In this case, the wife wrecks the car, and the mother-in-law is stricken deaf and dumb. The husband is overjoyed, tells her what he thinks of her, but she suddenly recovers her voice. It's noisy, and hardly amusing.—Running time, 10 minutes.

NEW RECORDING PROGRESS IN U. S. MAY SLOW UP BRITONS' OWN PLANS

Developments of Both Erpi and Photophone Sound Challenge British Systems; Mooring Sees Protests on Costs of Changes

by WM. H. MOORING
London Correspondent

Almost simultaneously Western Electric and RCA announce radical changes in their recording systems, designed to keep pace with public demand for better sound reproduction.

J. E. Otterson, president of ERPI, revealed in England that the WE laboratories have evolved recording advancements, by extended frequency range, which will give astonishing results in music and voice reproduction. R. M. Hatfield, head of the London office, and Stanley S. A. Watkins, recording manager, London, are getting to work right away, and it is proposed to offer exhibitors facilities for the complete overhauling of their theatre sets, plus the necessary improvements and alterations to mechanism, by means of which the better results are obtainable.

Mr. Otterson says that the new system, played in theatres specially treated with complementary acoustical materials, will insure results so realistic as eventually to be indistinguishable from natural voice or firsthand music.

RCA Improvements Also Cited

Mr. Javal of RCA also revealed this week that his company has reached out to an important new disc recording improvement. He compares this advance with that registered when the gramaphone concerns went from mechanical to electric recording. Frequency range is extended to 10,000 cycles and a comparatively higher degree of fidelity is claimed. Certain coincidental improvements, he says, have been achieved in the film recording system operated by RCA. Again the adaptation of existing recording and reproducing sets is a necessary preliminary to this new state of sound efficiency. That, it seems to me, will prove a snag in England, affecting both WE and RCA. Not only exhibitors, but a number of leading producers in Britain are already persuaded that their sound is costing them too much.

British International, for instance, operating on RCA Photophone since they first took up talkers in 1929, are not likely to renew their existing recording license with RCA when it expires next year. They have evolved a system of their own called Ambiphone, with a view to cutting out royalties now payable to the Americans.

Only one British studio—the British and Dominions lot—is using Western Electric recording, and they are unlikely to quit because of special financial arrangements, although the Gaumont organization, through which all their films are liberated, have made progress with the development of their British Acoustic recording system, which in fact has been installed in their new Shepherds Bush studios, and seems likely to go into Gainsborough, Islington, and Beaconsfield British Lion studios as soon as existing contracts fall in.

There is a feeling on this side, therefore, that the American recording combines have prepared for the day when British technicians might catch up with American sound quality standards, and have now decided to launch surprising improvements in sound in order to place their British licensees and theatre owners once again tightly in their hands.

An Ideal in Progress

It is legitimate commercial practice to hold that which they won when the talkers first came, and in addition to the money and brain power expended in the pursuit of more realistic sound, must be held to represent an ideal in motion picture progress.

The novelty stage of the talkers has long receded into the past; theatre takings are now down to a lower level than in the last, bad days of the silent picture, and if "real life" sound reproduction can do anything to help revive the flagging public interest in motion pictures, it must be welcomed by the industry, whether initiative has come from British or American sources.

On the score of additional outlay, there will be opposition, and many British exhibitors will resent the mere suggestion that anything can be done to improve their sound—even at any price—but progress will have to be served.

WE and RCA will not of course make compulsory the adaptation of existing apparatus, but the firstline showmen, for whom nothing save the best and latest is good enough, will step in, and thereafter the public will pull into line the laggers, who would still have been operating silent films if there had been a supply and a public to support them.

Publicity Looks Up British Film

John Maxwell of British International has recently infused a new spirit of daring into the publicity departments of his distributing units, Wardour Films and Pathe Pictures. Maximum improvements have not yet been achieved, but a good illustration of more active selling policies is provided by the latest plan of the Wardour unit, under which British International films will be included among subjects to be "staged" during this year's Dramatic Festival at Malvern.

It is regarded as important that films should be recognized by the organizers of the Dramatic Festival as covering a branch in dramatic art which can no longer be ignored, nor even overshadowed, by the stage.

The Festival runs from August 1 to 8, and on each day one British International production will be shown. The subjects selected include George Bernard Shaw's first full length screen "adventure," "Arms and the Man;" "Fires of Fate," "The Indiscretions of Eve," "No. 17," and "After Office Hours," all of which in due course will reach U. S. A.

Gaumont-British and Ufa Combine Move Reported

There is now every sign that Gaumont-British and Ufa of Germany will eventually form, between them, a European film combine of the first magnitude. Already arrangements are in operation whereby Gaumont will make, in Germany, English versions of all the worthwhile Ufa pictures, and Ufa may later use the Gaumont English studios in which to make German versions of all Gaumont subjects considered suitable for Continental consumption.

In addition there will be a very free interchange of talent, both in the writing and acting departments, as well as constant collaboration in all matters technical. Gaumont and Ufa will, in short, aim to turn out English talkers with maximum appeal in all English-speaking markets, while still holding their own against America in Central Europe. If early experiments prove encouraging, the two concerns will take up the question of joint provision of films for the smaller language markets.

It is noteworthy that many of the Ufa executives have had extensive experience in America—an advantage which removes one of the greatest handicaps under which most of the best British executives labor. Gaumont-British, by way of impressing the British public, took over to the Ufa studios in Neubabelsberg, Berlin, a party including some leading British journalists, and the impression gained was that Ufa production facilities regarding floor space and personnel equal, if not surpass, those at the new Gaumont London studios, although the latter achieve a state of higher technical efficiency. This points to the possibility that Ufa has all but the finance required to make its production center the greatest in Europe. That is where the Ostrers of Gaumont-British may come in finally.

Here and There

John C. A. Thorpe, for several years manager of production for British International, and more recently running a separate production affiliate for that company, has now severed with Elstree and has joined Gaumont-British, for whom he will head a new department to deal exclusively with overseas sales.

The C. E. A. is preparing yet another campaign against the existing entertainments tax. This one will be launched this autumn.

The Lord Mayor of Birmingham, welcoming magistrates of six Midland Counties who met in his city to discuss "Films and Public Morality," said there had in recent years been a marked decline in drunkenness. This he attributed in part to the influence of the cinema.

Fox is setting up its own British production unit at last, and Hugh Percival, lately with the Paramount British unit, has been engaged to help organize and run production in England.

THEATRE RECEIPTS

Theatre receipts from 105 houses in 20 key cities of the country for the calendar week ended July 23, 1932, aggregating $1,254,992, showed an increase of $8,489 over the previous calendar week ended July 16, when a total of $1,246,503 was recorded from 105 theatres in 20 cities. Six new low individual house record figures were noted during the more recent week, and no new high individual house records. This compares with eight new "lows" and no new "highs" for the preceding week.

Star of "DRACULA"

ACTUAL EXTRACT FROM THE PENAL CODE OF HAITI

Article 249 Penal Code of The Republic of Haiti

"Also shall be qualified as attempted murder the employment of drugs, hypnosis or any other occult practices which produce lethargic coma, or lifeless sleep; and if the person (Zombie) has been buried it shall be considered murder no matter what result follows."

NOTE ● The practice of Zombieism is punishable by death in Haiti! Yet though hard to believe, Zombieism is being practiced in this country. Look around you! Stranger things are happening than you ever dreamed!

ZOMBIE

Is that kind of a picture... a glamorous love-tale told on the borderland of life and death... the story of a fiend who placed a beautiful woman under his strange spell, rendering her soulless, lifeless... yet making her perform his every desire..

"MAKE 'EM SLOBBER AND THEY'LL MAKE YOU RICH!"

TOM BROWN OF CULVER... will clean the bile out of your system and the loss out of your business.

TOM BROWN OF CULVER... will make 'em laugh and make 'em cry and drunken their minds like a bottle of rye.

TOM BROWN OF CULVER... an emotional jag that will leave every audience as limp as a rag!

TOM BROWN OF CULVER... is Universal's contribution to a world whose spirit needs a kick in the pants!

TOM BROWN OF CULVER... will lift your soul to the realm of the stars and make you a better and happier exhibitor!

With TOM BROWN, SLIM SUMMERVILLE, RICHARD CROMWELL, H. B. WARNER, Andy Devine, Russell Hopton, Ben Alexander, Sidney Toler, Willard Robertson. Produced by Carl Laemmle, Jr. Story by George Green and Dale Van Every. Directed by William Wyler. Presented by Carl Laemmle.

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 136.—(A) Considering a plano-convex condenser, name the various sources of possible light loss. (B) Considering the reflector type lamp using a large diameter condenser, name the various possible sources of light loss contained therein. (C) Considering the reflector type of lamp having no condenser, name the sources of possible light loss. (In all these questions, include all possible light losses between the light source and the film itself.) (D) Would there be a very considerable difference as between the amount of light reaching the aperture from an intelligently selected, carefully adjusted, clean light source to film system, and one that is selected without expert knowledge, carelessly adjusted and not too clean?

Answer to Question No. 129

Bluebook School Question No. 129 was: "(A) Just what is a prismatic lens? (B) May prismatic lenses be had in different diameters and focal lengths? (C) Is the converging lens of a Cinephor parabolic condenser always of the same focal length? (D) Of what does the Cinephor parabolic condenser consist? (E) Is the Cinephor condenser collector lens always of the same focal length?"

For the first time in its long, and we believe useful, history, the School is buffaloed. There were 968 answers, and of them all, not one was correct, or even reasonably so on all points. Most of them fell down on A, B and C. Not one described a prismatic lens correctly. In order that I might make no possible error I submitted the questions to the Bausch & Lomb Optical Company, asking their engineers to answer each section separately. Under all the circumstances I believe you would prefer that I print their answer, which is:

"(A) A brief answer to Section A is that each ring of a prismatic condensing lens is a prism, bent around into the form of a ring, which refracts the light falling upon its rear face to an approximate focus at the projector aperture. The lens is built up of a series of such rings. Its action depends upon the form of each prism, not upon the concave surface."

In this connection the engineer (Alan A. Cook of the Scientific Bureau of the company) worded the last part thus: "And its action depends upon the form of each prism, not on the concave front surface." I take it that he meant to convey the idea that the action depends upon the form of the rings or prisms and not upon the concavity of the rear surface viewed as a whole. In projection we term the surface next to the light source as the "rear."

(B) "Such condensers are available in different diameters and focal lengths"—which taught me something. I had always thought them to be available in only one diameter.

(C) "The converging lens of Conephor condensing systems is not always of one focal length."

(D) "The Cinephor parabolic condenser is a convergent lens of meniscus form, the front surface of which is a paraboloid of revolution."

(E) "It is always the same focal length in the particular system dealt with in the Bluebook. Of course you know that many changes have taken place since you described that condenser. The general practice now is to image the new high intensity arcs directly on the aperture, so that the same set of condensers (now called Super-Cinephor Condensers) are used for all focal lengths of projection lens."

Well, it is the first time some of the Bluebook students have slipped up badly enough so that I could not shove any through. Better luck next time!

Regarding Question No. 124

Burke Wolfe, projectionist of Columbus, O., writes: "Dear Mr. Richardson: Seems to me you have slipped up on the answer to Bluebook Question No. 124. Mr. G. E. Doe's answer certainly shows that he understands the action of a wet cell perfectly, but he forgets to mention a couple of very important points.

"In Section A of this question the metallic elements do not necessarily consist of zinc and copper. Neither must the electrolyte necessarily be sal-ammoniac. I believe the principle of the thing is to take any two dissimilar metals and immerse them in almost any acid solution, whereupon a wet cell will result. Of course, though, some combinations of acid and metals work much better than others.

"In Section C, Mr. Doe does not mention the one thing which the strength of the current or amperage depends upon, and that is the size of the plates or elements. The more plate surface there is exposed to the acid, the greater the amperage it will produce. Don't you believe a footnote explaining these points would have been useful to many of your students?"

I agree with your criticism insofar as pertains to Section C. The point you make there is good. I do not, however, agree that it is necessary to include the things you mention in making answer to Section A. True, Brother Doe might have mentioned that fact. It is interesting, but after all we were considering a practical wet cell, which is the one Brother Doe dealt with. It is quite true that a weak, inefficient cell, or a very expensively constructed cell may be produced by the various metals and by electrolytes other than sal-ammoniac. The copper and zinc sal-ammoniac itself is, however, the practical wet cell—so much so that, so far as I know, no other sort is in commercial use.

Please do not get the idea that I am in any degree objecting to your criticism. As a matter of fact, it is very much to your credit that you took sufficient interest and wrote, calling attention to something you believed to be wrong. Moreover, as before said, your criticism to the answer of Section C is excellent. Doe should have mentioned the fact that amperage depends very largely, if not entirely, upon the area of the metallic elements exposed to the electrolytes —not to their size, mark you well, but their area. For instance, a sheet of copper would have very much more area than a chunk of copper. One must be careful of their wording of such things, since size could easily be interpreted as meaning bulk, and large bulk may be had in comparatively small area.

New York City Plan Would Tax Houses for Inspection

Theatres in New York City would be charged for the service of firemen stationed in the houses and would be assessed $10 monthly for the regular inspection of theatres, according to a plan submitted to Mayor James J. Walker by John J. Dorman, fire commissioner, as a means of raising additional revenue. Several hundred theatres in the city would probably be affected if the suggestion should be acted upon.

JENKINS' COLYUM

Battle Creek, Mich.

Dear HERALD:

This is the town where they make the breakfast food which includes everything that can be made out of oats, wheat, corn, rye and baled hay.

The cafes will serve you bran if you don't watch 'em, on the theory that it is good for digestion. When they bring us bran we ask 'em if they have any baled hay that they could substitute.

Business ought to be good in Battle Creek, but it isn't. Battle Creek is very much like other towns in the state, dependent largely upon factories.

Michigan during July and August has three climates—hot, hotter and hottest; mostly hottest. One can perspire more in Michigan than he can in Yuma, Arizona, and down there the perspiration has run off of us until it short-circuited our spark plugs and April Shower refused to go.

We knew one fellow who took six baths in one day and then the perspiration oozed through his shirt like sorghum molasses. But we like the old state just the same, presumably because we were born here, but they shouldn't charge that up to Michigan, we are partly responsible for that ourselves. We might have been born in Arkansaw but see what shape that would have left Michigan in. She ought to be proud of us.

Walt Adams Rebuilds

Walt Adams at Mason has rebuilt his theatre, which was partially destroyed by fire. It is now a much nicer house than it was, and it was a nice theatre at the start. Walt believes in giving his patrons the best there is in comfort as well as service, and this has set him in solid with the Mason people.

Harold King is the projectionist for Walt and he swears by the HERALD and Richardson's articles on projection and that's why he is a good projectionist.

We were in Lansing and found all the theatres locked up at 11 a. m. except one. The janitor of this one told us the manager would not be down until after dinner. Down in Arkansaw the boys get up for breakfast, but not so in Lansing. That's why the Lansing boys miss meeting some pretty swell people once in a while, meaning the film peddlers.

H. H. Chase has redecorated his Diamond theatre at Lake Odessa. Lake Odessa is a summer resort and the summer is when H. H. expects to do the bulk of his business. The lake is surrounded by summer cottages and the population of the town increases in proportion to the heat.

A New Theatre

Jesse Phillips has recently built and opened a new theatre at Grand Ledge, and when a man will build a brand new theatre under present conditions he has nerve, and we judge Jesse has it.

The last time we met him he was operating a theatre at Vicksburg. The Sun theatre at Grand Ledge is rather above the ordinary run of houses we find in towns of that size, and it's a theatre that the town ought to be proud of, and no doubt is, but like many other Michigan towns, she has several factories which are operating on short time, when they operate at all, and this makes it bad for the theatre business.

In many of the larger towns we find that the circuit theatres especially are double featuring their programs at ten and fifteen cents. To us this indicates one of two things—that it is a desperate attempt to stimulate business or, a lack of the proper knowledge of showmanship.

Maybe we don't know anything about it, sometimes we don't; in fact in most cases we don't, but like everybody else, we form opinions, and our opinion is that operating a theatre is not much different from operating any other line of merchandising. If you have to put out something to bait the public it won't be long until you will hang out the "Closing Out" sign. No theatre can continue to run double programs at fifteen cents any more than a merchant can sell two watermelons at the price of one and continue to hold his job. We used to kiss our girl good night once, but when we tried to kiss her twice she said that was too much of a good thing, and the next evening we found the drayman calling on her.

It won't hurt you theatremen to think this over. Sometimes you can get a valuable suggestion from unexpected sources.

Last night we saw Joe Brown in "The Tenderfoot," and Joe looked just like he did when we had our picture taken with him last winter, except that he wore a ten gallon hat. We wish we were as handsome as Joe, for maybe then the public would appreciate us more. They certainly did appreciate him last night.

We are headed for Indiana and we hope those Hoosiers will treat us as fine as these Wolverines have, and if they do that will be fair enough.

Principal Shipping Lobby Displays With Features

Principal Distributing Corporation has introduced an innovation in distribution and exploitation, shipping with prints lobby displays, boxed in one trunk, and sold as part of the picture. Forty uniform lobby displays are already in circulation with prints of the film, "South Sea Adventures."

"If the business is returning to the Barnum and Bailey idea, and we think it is, the lobby idea is designed to meet that need," said Sol Lesser, president of Principal. The company will extend the policy to seven other features, all of the adventure-exploration type.

Tax Plan Aimed at Circuits

An initiative petition imposing drastic license fees on circuit ownership of theatres and stores in California has been filed with Secretary of State Frank C. Jordan. The measure would establish a license fee of $5 for the first theatre or store of a circuit, $500 for the second, $1,000 for three to nine, $1,500 for 10 to 19 and $2,500 for 20 or more.

Huffman Takes Over RKO Theatre in Pooling Deal

Harry Huffman has assumed active management of the RKO Orpheum in Denver and will operate in accordance with an agreement which includes the Orpheum and Huffman's Rialto, Aladdin and Tabor. The Orpheum and Rialto will continue first-run, and for the present the Aladdin also. The Orpheum will continue RKO vaudeville units. Limited choice of films has been the drawback at the Orpheum, but through the pooling with Huffman films will be picked from Fox, Warner, Columbia, Universal and Radio.

Huffman will be managing director of the four theatres, in addition to two of his houses not included in the pool. Gerald Whitney will leave the Tabor and become house manager of the Orpheum and Chas. E. Porter, assistant at the Tabor, becomes manager there. Ralph Lee remains as manager of the Rialto and Joe Gundy will continue as Mr. Huffman's assistant and manager of the Aladdin.

New Jersey Allied Names 15 Directors for Year

The Allied Theatre Owners of New Jersey elected 15 directors at the annual meeting recently. New directors are: I. A. Roth, Morristown; H. K. Hecht, Passaic; James Binkov, Union City; Charles L. Robinson, Louis H. Gold, Newark; Dave Snaper, New Brunswick; Lee Newbury, Belmar; R. Wilkins, Pitman; W. C. Hunt, Wildwood; S. Myers, Moorestown; A. Bannon, Newark; Mrs. C. C. Hildinger, Trenton; P. Mortimer Lewis, Atlantic City; Al Gottesman, Mark Block, Newark.

Court Names Receiver for Fox Metropolitan Circuit

The Irving Trust Company has been appointed permanent receiver for Fox Metropolitan Playhouses, Inc., by Judge Mack in the United States district court at New York. Si Fabian will continue in an advisory capacity.

The company denies reports that certain of the independents who formerly owned the houses of Metropolitan Playhouses are seeking to regain their property, now operated by the Skouras Brothers.

Agfa Ansco Recapitalizes

The recapitalization plan recently offered by Agfa Ansco Corporation has been approved by stockholders and is now being put into effect. New common stock will be issued for outstanding common and preferred shares.

Max Ree Doing Fair Displays

Max Ree, whose sets for "Cimarron" won him the award from the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences recently, has been commissioned to create artistic displays for exhibition at the forthcoming World's Fair to be held in Chicago in 1933.

Freeman Starts Contact Work

Charles Freeman left the RKO home office late last week for the Coast studio on his first trip in his new capacity in contacting the home office and the studio. Incidentally, Mr. Freeman will seek new talent from the stage.

CONDUCTED BY AN EXHIBITOR FOR EXHIBITORS

MANPOWER—OUR GREATEST ASSET!

THE FINANCIAL STATEMENTS of many of the circuits and independents may look kind of fishy especially with what they list among their assets. But if we, supposedly on the inside of showbusiness, had to prepare a combined statement of the theatres of the entire country, we would include in the assets a list of names that are worth a darned sight more than some of the properties and holdings now listed.

The greatest asset in showbusiness is its manpower. The present economic depression has made many of its men stand out for ability and achievements previously not credited to them. And, as in many other enterprises, some stand out more than others.

Lots of important cogs in a machine never get mention or a second glance when looking the machine over as a whole. It is only when each little cog must stand the strain and stress of pressure that we begin to attach to them the importance they deserve. Then we find out that they are as important as the main springs or driving power.

There are men whose names are outstanding today in the exhibition field of this business who were just as active and working just as hard in the former prosperous days. But things were so sweet then that no one man had too many opportunities of showing how really aggressive he could be or how much he could create and accomplish when put to the test. The necessity for such a test was not vital. In those days it was only important to keep things running along smoothly; whereas, now, it is necessary to think up entirely new slants and angles. But they proved their worthiness when the time came, and today we have men who will leave plenty for the coming generation of showbusiness to shoot at.

While writing these few lines on the subject of manpower there comes to mind such a name as Frank Whitbeck. A born leader and a man whose ability will long survive the present era of battling for business.

And there are dozens of others just like him. H. E. Jameyson, Jeff Lazarus, Vic Gauntlett, Arthur Mayer, Jack Jackson, Oscar Doob, Mort Blumenstock, Jack O'Connell, Nat Holt, Floyd Bell, Gabe Yorke, Eddie Eckles, Jack Hess, Bob Sisk, Terry Burner, Bill Danziger, Dave Davidson, Sidney Dannenberg, Frank La Falce, Lou Goldberg, George Tyson, and so on. If we have failed to mention some of the others it is only because for this fleeting moment they do not come to mind.

Showbusiness needs men like these. Without them it would be a drab and dull existence. True there are others who would succeed to the spots these men occupy or have occupied, but most of the newcomers would reach the top because of the example set by the leaders we mention.

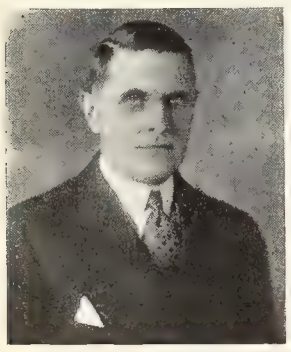
Circuit operation, because it worked out just that way, altered many situations and positions. Some called it politics. We call it progress. Even in the routine march of progress some of the best manpower finds itself left, temporarily, by the wayside. But not for long. Ability and aggressiveness must always count in the long run, and you will find these same men holding down responsible positions year after year. If not with one outfit then with another. As a rule they are not "rolling stones."

You will notice that in the group listed only the publicity, advertising and exploitation field seems to have been covered. Such reference is not accidental. It merely conveys our own feelings and the trend of the times that the field of show-selling is at this time the most important. Yes, even more important than the operating end of the business. We are living in an entirely different era. Where organization and operating personnel was paramount yesterday, merchandising or show-selling is the keynote today.

There is no single phase of theatre business that can be of more importance than selling the show to the public. So much so that it is really a highly specialized field. Proof is on every side of you. Just notice what has been accomplished in costless exploitation during the past year or two. Just remember the number of ordinary pictures which were built up at the box office to "epic" proportions through the medium of smart exploitation and advertising. That's the answer.

We have no doubt that in a few years there will be men just as outstanding, yes, maybe more so, than your Whitbecks' of today. Men who are making a real life's work of this business. They, too, will show their mettle and prove themselves fit under fire and pressure. And ten years from now when some mugg like myself sits down to discuss showbusiness he may take even greater delight in citing a few dozen names that today can only be found on the payrolls. Some as ushers, some as doormen, some as assistant managers, etc.

But ten years from now, or fifty years from now, just as today, the most valuable asset of this great big amusement business will always be MANPOWER. "CHICK"



DICK KIRSCHBAUM'S LOBBY LAFFS!

Dick is again calling for suggestions to continue the Lobby Laff series. Where are all those members who used to send in several every week or so? Come on, boys; we want to keep Kirschbaum supplied with ideas so that he can keep us supplied with cartoons.

WHAT A JOB TRYING TO GET A PICTURE OF GEORGE MILLER!

It took us a long time to get George A. Miller's picture, but here he is at last. And we present with the photo a lightning resume of George's career since his birth, March 12, 1903.

Geo. A. Miller

Was born in New York State. Started in show business in Newark at the Fox American. Quit a job on the Roseville "Citizen" to become a theatre press agent. Then worked as exploiteer for Universal at New Haven with "Merry-Go-Round." Later took out "Hunchback." Followed this with managing in Maine. Then back to Newark.

Newark was followed by a job upstate with Louie Schine. Has been with his present employer, Wm. C. Smalley, five years, and thinks the boss is a great guy.

Is at present managing the local theatre in Hamilton, New York, and is greatly elated because he recently won a decision for Sunday shows. Always trying to select pictures families will go for, as he feels that if a theatre hasn't family trade, it isn't a theatre.

Wants to stay in the theatre game. And invites persons who think it's an easy job to try to handle it.

Oke, George!

TAUGHT BY SHOWMAN, BOB ENOCH CLICKING AS PUBLICITY CHIEF

New York and Bill Levey, of the Beacon Theatre in Port Washington, Long Island, schooled Bob Enoch, publicity director of the Strand Theatre in Parkersburg, West Virginia, and Bob is certainly doing his teachers proud.

Since his return to Parkersburg, he has been burning up the town with some of his exploits, and no little bit of these doings is laid to his manner of grabbing off line after line of free publicity.

Recently, he canvassed a bunch of the leading dealers of Parkersburg, and arranged to run ads on the "stagger" plan, that is: one week, one or two dealers plug the theatre and their product. Another week: other dealers.

The local tire company tied in its product with "When a Feller Needs a Friend" by using the picture title and reported wonderful results. A hosiery store selling Foto Fan hose, plugged the theatre and also offered tickets to customers. Another enterprising merchant agreed to consider a theatre stub as five dollars down payment on a radio.

These little tricks which Enoch has transplanted to Parkersburg have made a great hit with the business men and have resulted in an immense lot of good will for the theatres, so that it wouldn't surprise us to hear some day about one of the town's showmen running for Mayor.

Give our regards to our friends down there, Bob, and remember, we, and the Club as well, are always rooting for you.

A letter of the personal endorsement type glorifying a star and stressing the fine entertainment qualities of the picture, was mailed a short time ago to 3,000 local women by Loren Wahl, manager of the Grand Theatre, Bellingham, Wash. The card, which was printed in italics on excellent stock, carried the following copy:

Dear Madam:

Sunday will be a real event for this week, for on that day Ruth Chatterton will be presented at the Grand in her latest picture, "The Rich Are Always With Us."

I will personally endorse this picture as being the finest comedy-drama produced in years, and consider it an honor to present Miss Chatterton in this real achievement.

This picture is being greatly discussed wherever it has played and Miss Chatterton's leading man, George Brent is a positive sensation.

"The Rich Are Always With Us" plays June 12, 13, 14.

(Signed by Wahl)

In case some Club members have yet to play this Chatterton picture it might be well to consider the method of circularization outlined above, for we understand that Wahl used it most successfully as a build-up for both star and picture. Unless our cards are at fault this account of Wahl's activities is the first to appear in Club pages and we want him to know that others will be most welcome.

The Davidsons Arrive!

Dave Davidson and his bride of two months arrived in New York last week for a brief stay. Naturally one of his first visits was to Club headquarters.

Dave returns to Detroit shortly and has promised a most interesting series of ad articles fashioned along lines that will be of great assistance to theatres in the smaller towns and cities.

A PERFECT TIE-UP!

The practically perfect arrangement for providing ice cream for those on a merry tour to h—— apparently appealed so strongly to Charles Schlaifer (we believe our records are okay), manager of the Paramount Theatre, Omaha, that he forthright tied-up a restaurant and soda fountain for that concession when he played the picture advertised in the above cooperative ad. And a neat piece of work it was, we'll say—with a good break for the theatre.

SUMMER STYLE PAGES IN DOUBLE TRUCK A HELP TO HAUSCHILD

Perhaps one of the most powerful of the exploitation stunts used by Thor Hauschild at the Paramount Theatre in Steubenville, Ohio, recently, was a double truck page he conceived to plug his feature film.

The picture, "Sinners in the Sun," offers a plot with a model and a dress establishment as the nucleus. Hauschild broached his local paper on the idea of running a double truck co-operative page but they turned a cold shoulder and lent a deaf ear to his proposition.

Instead of giving the job up as hopeless, Hauschild went right ahead with his campaign, and when he had covered his usual angles he sprang a surprise by carrying his double truck idea across the river to a daily paper that also reached into the homes of Steubenville. The paper willingly agreed to run the spread. Local Steubenville dress dealers readily ran to Hauschild's side and gave him large ads, such as are seen in the cut—and, incidentally, just study that front page and inside co-op. They show every indication of smart showmanship.

A banner announced an early showing of summer styles. The "Fashion Newspaper Extra" appeared in the daily paper and the editors were so pleased they furnished Hauschild with 10,000 single page, double faced heralds for distribution, and which were placed the day before opening in 10,000 homes.

It is no doubt needless for us to say that Hauschild's showman ingenuity helped the picture no end, and with him turning out such work, we hope we'll hear from him again soon, so that we can pass along a story of his labors, as we have done so often in the past year or two.

COMEDY POLITICAL CAMPAIGN WAS GOOD PLUG FOR MELINCOFF

The enterprising Max Melincoff, manager of the Palace Theatre, Lawrence, Mass., issued some political type advertising matter of the novelty type that greatly helped him sell "Dark Horse."

The first page of his ballot heralds carried a top line which read, "Hilarity Just Around the Corner." Followed, "Cast your vote in the 'Dark Horse' Presidential Ballot—Note: Vote Once Only! Please fill in this ballot and deposit it in the voting machine in the lobby of the Palace Theatre Before Saturday" (date). The second page listed the presidential candidates, Hoover, Smith, Garner, Roosevelt, Coolidge and Ritchie. Followed, "For Governor (State of Laughter), Guy Kibbee (Warner Candidate). The Dark Horse (Hilarity Party). Warning! Mr. Voter—Put America on the Laugh Standard! Vote for Guy Kibbee—he's too dumb to be crooked. He'll promise you anything—but try and get it (after election). Signed, Warren William, Campaign manager."

The third page carried a large mat of William and signature cut of theatre, with catch-line-copy at top reading: "Congress Is Going Cuckoo—Senators are doing handsprings on the White House steps. Republicans and Democrats are slapping each other on the back. The whole darn nation is nutty about Hollywood's Hilarious burlesque on the political parade."

An eleventh-hour flyer cautioned the voters of Lawrence not to be misled—"don't be deceived by the defamatory attacks on the character of our candidate—we defy any man, woman or child to point a finger of suspicion. . . . Our candidate is too dumb, etc. His platform is Free Speech, Free Press, Free Beer, Park benches on street corners so no one will have to stand. A canopy over the ocean so swimmers will not get wet," etc. Title of picture, name of theatre and playdates followed.

WILLIAMS COPS PRIZES!

Tony Williams, manager of the Dewitt Theatre in Bayonne, N. J., put on a whirlwind finish in the K.K.O. Drive for prizes which has been in progress for the past 17 weeks on the Stanley-Fabian Division of Warner Brothers Theatres in New Jersey.

He gets the Bernard-Bermuda trip prize; K.K.O. first prize of a trip to Spanish Honduras; and, for leading the last week of the drive, a $57 wrist watch.

Just to prove that he is one swell guy, as well as a marvelous showman, Tony has turned all three prizes into cash and will divide it among all of the employees of his theatre to compensate them for the "payless" week which all Warner Theatre employees must cooperate on; and also to show his appreciation for their untiring efforts helping him to come through the big winner in a field of tough competition.

Clem Murphy of the Newark Brandford, who won the second prize, and Eddie Helwig get trips to Honduras as runnersup.

Congratulations boys. You worked mighty hard and deserve everything you won. Ditto for all the other managers in that division. They used some remarkably fine showmanship throughout the drive.

BUCK JONES RANGERS STARTED BY FERBER STAGED BIG PARADE

Starting off his campaign with the distribution of application blanks for a projected "Buck Jones Rangers Club," Nat Ferber, manager of the Majestic Theatre in New York City, counted up his enrollment and found that within a week he had 2,500 kids as members.

Then he jumped right into the swing of things and opened the club with a huge parade, featuring the entire membership, three Boy Scout troops and a Bugle and Drum Corps. The parade was led by Nat, Deputy Commissioner William Regan and Dr. Harold Emerson, national chairman of the "Buck Jones Rangers."

The procession proceeded through the heart of upper Manhattan and back to the theatre, where the boys and girls, after taking the Rangers' and Scouts' pledges, and listening to an instructive talk by Dr. Emerson, were invited to see the show as guests of the theatre.

At the regular meeting of the club the members received their cards and buttons. Many of them patronized the show after the meeting. In the photo we are offering, you can get an idea of the way the parade went off. Nat believes he has a winner in the Rangers Club idea and he passes it along to his brother showmen in case they want to make use of it, too. Thanks, Nat, and let us know, from time to time, how the club is getting along.

WILLIAMS ARRANGED NOVEL DISPLAY WHEN SELLING SEA PICTURE

Quite a novel display was arranged by Anthony Williams, manager of the DeWitt Theatre, Bayonne, N. J., when he played "Adventures in the South Seas."

He obtained an oil painting from the distributor, tall palms from a local florist, and the painting was placed in the window of a sport shop with a card carrying copy and playlets. He used still another painting in a downtown sport shop. The lobby was also attractively dressed.

When playing "Symphony in Six Millions" he promoted 5,000 circulars in Jewish type and distributed them a few days in advance of the playdate. Letters were also sent out to all Jewish organizations.

Regarding the paintings mentioned above we don't think it will be giving away any trade secrets when we state that Tony received them free of charge from the exchange. What's good in Jersey ought to be good elsewhere, so Round Tablers who have yet to play this picture might bear this in mind when they visit their exchange to make necessary arrangements.

COMIC CHARACTERS KNOWN TO FUNNIES' READERS SOLD FILM

Just before he left for the Palace Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa., Douglas George turned out such a corking campaign on "Crowd Roars" that we want to pass it along to his fellow Club members and showmen.

In addition to his regular campaign, he obtained a full page of co-operative ads from the local merchants which went over well. He circulated 100 petitions to school children with an announcement that if they could garner 100 signatures for the petition they would be given free tickets to the show. The names obtained were later used on the mailing list, after serving as a first hand notice of the current picture.

A tie-up with the Hotel Lincoln in Indianapolis, Ind., was productive of 500 scenic postcards of the famous speedway.

George mimeographed these cards with: "Staying in Indianapolis for Races. Saw 'The Crowd Roars' while here—a great picture. Actual scenes of speedway races in it. Love, Mary." The cards were sent about town.

As a street ballyhoo, he utilized a two-way Ford carrying suitable copy on the picture, with the flivver rating plenty of laughs.

But a stunt that went over well with everyone and is somewhat of a new idea was that of a special silent teaser trailer on which famous comic strip characters were duped, alone, on different frames, and each character endorsed the picture. Everyone thought this a great idea, and so do we.

The sport page of the local paper carried its share of the stories, too, and proved an effective medium.

One hundred automobile bumperette cards were distributed and placed on cars and taxis two weeks in advance.

These stunts, plus the excellent lobby display, served to put the picture over with a bang, and again proved to George the value of his exploitation gags for bringing them into the box-office. Thanks, Doug, and lots of luck on your new job.

Break For Vidaver!

Day and date playing of the Democratic National Convention and "Is My Face Red" was the means of securing a great publicity break for M. S. Vidaver, press agent of the Orpheum Theatre, San Francisco, Calif.

The break consisted of a three-column cartoon on the editorial page of a leading newspaper showing the well known Republican campaign elephant listening with flushed countenance, dripping perspiration, outside the doors of the Democratic convention hall. Much advertising on the picture immediately tied in the cartoon caption, "Is My Face Red."

ENGLISH SHOWMAN'S THEATRE PROGRAM IS A KNOCKOUT

There was a time when exploitation of any sort was scorned by the Continentals, especially the English. But this is no more. John Bull's showmen have been constantly striving to emulate their American rivals in show selling.

Today, we find exploitation in England growing more and more popular. We see showmen placing particular emphasis on their contacts with the public, and the selling of film attractions.

House organs, too, are receiving special attention. In fact, a great deal of care is being paid them both in make-up and composition. We have before us, a copy of the 16-page booklet edited and distributed by Kenneth M. Dunn, manager of the "Shettleston Super Cinema."

The theatre program is one that would fit in any American house. It is beautifully made up. The front cover carries a stock drawing of the theatre, the back cover carries ads. The inside covers are devoted to advertising and institutional plugs.

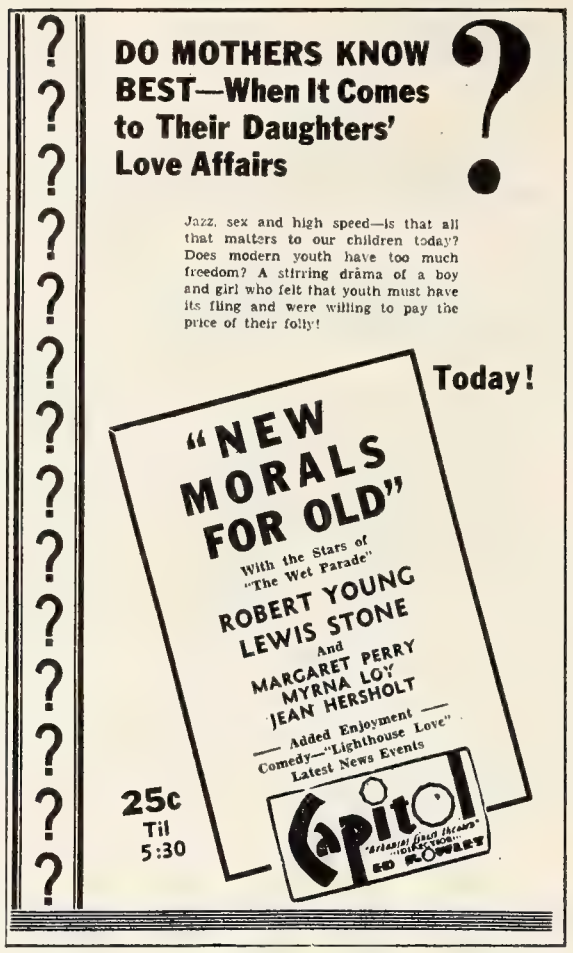
Page three is the editorial page. And here Mr. Dunn chats on a coming attraction in an intimate manner which reveals he knows his public.

On page four are a number of paragraphs concerning various stars. These paragraphs are written, some in serious tone, others in humorous vein.

No ads are placed on the same page with attractions! Each attraction page contains a beautiful halftone picture. The page also carries the starting time of the film.

It is interesting to note the English leave plenty of white space, and it makes for a remarkable effect. The strength of Mr. Dunn's theatre program is ascertained by the large number of ads he carries. Doubtless, it is because of so much advertising, he can afford to distribute so excellent a program.

But showmen, here, can get out the same kind of sheet, we believe, if they have a spot for it. Where Mr. Dunn is probably handicapped by lack of mats, American showmen usually have more than they need. Well spotted mats on each page—and with each page carrying only one or two attractions and allowing for lots of white space—will considerably pep up a house organ.



To Mr. Dunn we extend our thanks for allowing us to see a copy of his work, and we believe that if Club members would like one, he would be glad to send it to them. And it might not be a bad idea to send him one of your own.

R. E. Archibald "On His Own"!

For the benefit of his many friends who may have wondered what has happened to R. E. Archibald, we are glad to report that he is no longer among the missing.

This morning's mail brings an account of his past activities starting with September, 1929, when he was manager of the Fox Orpheum and Strand Theatres in Pocatello, Idaho. He stayed at that post until the end of 1931, at which time he left to assume the managerial reins of the Fox Theatre in Billings, Montana. He now turns up at the Coronado Theatre in Coronado, Cal. The Coronado, Bob tells us, was formerly Silver Strand, until R. D. Carothers of Hermosa Beach, Cal., purchased it from Bush Theatres and changed the name.

A "MAT-LESS" AD!

There are certainly types of ads which are best handled without mats or illustration of any kind. The one reproduced here is in that class.

J. F. Thames, Jr., of the Arkansas Amusement Corporation sent it to us and we are very grateful to him for this thoughtfulness. Incidently, did you look over that page of exchange-mat ads which we ran in a recent issue? It was a swell layout and clearly demonstrated how effective such ads can be made without the use of a special ad artist.

The question marks along the left side of this ad, plus the larger one in the upper right hand corner attracts the eye immediately. Once that feat is accomplished it is almost certain to make them read the text at the top of the ad.

The rest requires no further explanation. If you've played around with a few experiments in the art of ad make-up then you will probably agree that the entire ad received just as much, or maybe more, attention as it was hoped it would.

These ads ARE different and we would like to see some more along these lines.

FAMILY NIGHT GAG BROUGHT BUSINESS IN FOR H. LAURENCE

When H. L. Laurence, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Paris, Tenn., played "Rue Morgue" he took the space on back of the regular roto herald to announce that "Something New Under the Sun" was being started at his theatre. In other words, the head of the family could buy one 50-cent ticket and bring along the whole family to see the "super-shocker"—Grandpa, Grandma, Father, Son, Daughter, Son-in-law, Daughter-in-law, and even the ice man—all for the half of one dollar.

Which is just another way of letting you all know that Round Tabler Laurence is still socking the ball down in his town. During the playing of the picture mentioned above he also issued a small ticket to effect that the theatre would honor any one who fainted at a performance with another free ticket for another show.

We also note that he had printed a special herald on the occasion of playing "Man Who Played God." Heading on this read, "To the Public Interested in Fostering Finer Screen Entertainment." It went on to describe the picture and its highlights and urged the patron not to pass by the opportunity of seeing one of the finest screen attractions ever made. It ended with a personal endorsement from the theatre manager.

It's gratifying to hear from Laurence again and to know that he's still thinking up ways and means of coaxing in the shekels. We also thank him for another tip he sent along for the benefit of his fellow showmen. It will appear shortly.

PERSONALITIES

GEORGE O'BRIEN former manager of the Hub Theater in Rochelle, Ill., has leased the Fargo Theatre in De Kalb, Ill., and, according to reports, is doing very nicely these summer months.

JAMES WATERS who previously managed the Iowa Theatre in Burlington, Iowa, will take over the reins of the new Avon in that city.

F. W. HORRIGAN is busily engaged getting the old Roseland Theater in Phillipsburg, Mont., into shape for a grand opening. It will be known as the Granada.

H. M. JOHNSON formerly of Orlando, Fla., has leased the Iowa Theatre in Buffalo, Center, Ia., and has contracted for the best talking pictures available.

STANFORD SPARKS has become the manager of the Brownsville Theatre, Brownsville, Ore.

FRED LARKIN manager of the State Theatre, Sioux Falls, S. D., until that house recently closed, takes over the management of the Egyptian in the same city.

EDDIE LEWIS, our little sunshine spreader, is now the manager of the Glen Theatre in Glen Cove, N. Y. Let's hear from you Eddie, as soon as you get set.

MERCER COLMAN is the new manager of the Spreckles Theatre in San Diego, Cal., having formerly managed houses for RKO and Publix in Dallas, Tex.

ED BENHAM has taken over the Yuba Theatre, Yuba City, Cal., and remodeled it.

W. F. COOKE, JR., is the new manager of the Al Tahoe Theatre, Truckee, Cal.

SAM MAURICE former manager of the Fox Brooklyn is now city manager for Hartford with Harry Arthur.

DAVE DAVIDSON, Publix world-beater publicity man from Detroit paid us a visit with his more than charming young bride.

ART MILLER is now managing the State Theatre in Oakland, Cal.

J. A. FITZGERALD has reopened the Rialto Theatre in Glens Falls, N. Y.

ALLAN BODE now becomes the assistant to Ted Cunningham at Fox's Arlington in San Francisco, Cal.

JOE LEE pulled some fast work when he had pictures of the Coney Island fire showing at the Tilyou Theatre in that city before the fire itself was actually under control.

J. VON HERBERG proved he could think faster than a couple of hold-up gents when he outsmarted them at his home in Seattle. They expected him to obligingly open his private safe, but instead he handed them one from the shoulder. What a man Von Herberg, is his new title.

CHARLIE GRISWOLD, formerly manager of the Roxy Theatre, has joined Roxy himself in a similar capacity at Radio City. Now Times Square is wondering whether Kirk McGee and Charlie Dowe are to follow the parade back to their old boss.

KEN LONG is rapidly getting acquainted around RKO's offices, where he succeeded Eddie Eckles as editor of "NOW." Within a few weeks Ken should feel as much at home as any of the old crowd.

EDDIE HITCHCOCK steps out of Warner Brothers' ad office, where he has been creating press book ads under Stanley Shuford. His "great American novel" is rapidly reaching the "finish" stage and ought to establish Eddie as a second, third or fourth Dreiser.

MARCUS GRIFFIN of the New York Sunday Enquirer has bought for himself a summer home, bungalow or cabin (call it what you please) somewhere up around New Milford, Conn. The latest name tagged on to it is "Mortgage Manor." and that may be even funnier than its originator thinks.

B. B. HAMILTON, of W. B. Norwich (Conn.) Theatres, was down in New York for a part of his vacation. "B. B." had much to talk about concerning the "Rose City of New England" and returned full of the usual pep and determination to break all existing records this coming season.

FREDERICK T. THOMAS left Harry Arthur's circuit in Hartford, Conn., to join RKO as city manager in the midwest. Thomas made a swell name for himself while in this New England city and leaves with the best wishes of all of the theatre boys around Connecticut.

INSTITUTIONAL ADS FOR CHILDREN!

We have always been in favor of institutional advertising of any kind as a great aid to building up good will and attracting attention to the theatre aside from the usual medium of current attractions.

Here is a group of ads that were made up by Anna Belle Ward of the Phoenix Amusement Company of Lexington, Ky., and run over a long period in the daily papers.

No extra expense was entailed by reason of the mats used. They were selected from the newspapers' own mat service. The text, however, was the work of Miss Ward and certainly drives home her argument in favor of local support for the theatres under her supervision.

We recommend this type of institutional advertising for independent and circuit theatre alike. They are bound to attract attention and will certainly help eradicate any foolish notions that parents may have about sending their kiddies to the theatres. We assume, of course, that you are just as careful about the pictures you play for kids as Miss Ward's theatres are.

Institutional advertising will receive a lot of attention from this section in the future because we consider such advertising of major importance at a time when the usual newspaper ads for current attractions are not deemed sufficient to pull them to your box office.

A MESSAGE TO PARENTS

Happiness is a state of mind. Many a rich family is miserable, many a poor family happy. Defy family cares and troubles—make yourself and your children happy by seeing a movie

Troubles and cares can't follow you to a movie show. Good entertainment licks them every time.

A good movie show has the word beaten for a promoter of true happiness and as a general gloom chaser. A good movie rebuilds and refreshes both youth and old age.

A good movie is a little vacation from daily difficulties. Like food, clothing, shelter—movies are now a necessity to the human need of enjoyment. Your own happiness and the happiness of your family will be exalted if you plan periodical, methodical relaxation and attend the movies often.

This Vital Problem of RECREATION—

All work and no play would make Jack and Jill a couple of dumbbells. This country's leading educators assert that entertainment is as necessary to the youngsters as is shelter, clothing and food. Long school hours in winter—long hours of idleness in summer—should be supplemented with interesting recreation. Men and women everywhere in all periods of history have found entertainment a necessity. Good, clean, wholesome entertainment is needed to sustain the morale of the young people of our country during these days of depression. No diversion regenerates the mind nor revives the spirit so rapidly as a good movie show. Your little girl and boy, like Jack and Jill, will be brighter, healthier and more contented if a good movie plays a part in his or her mental progress.

Movies are a mental tonic for normal youngsters. Excitement and thrills provided in a high class movie show provides beneficial recreation. Good movies are educational as well as entertaining—send your kiddies to the movies often

REMEMBER, THIS IS SHOW BUSINESS; NOT MERELY MOVIE BUSINESS!

Here Is an Answer to Dick Moss' Recent Article on "Don't Get Panicky" Which Appeared in July 9th Issue!

By AL ZIMBALIST

Asst. Advt. and Publicity Director
Stanley-Fabian Circuit

WITH all due respect to Richard L. Moss, manager of the Orpheum Theatre, Los Angeles, who recently submitted his views on present day show business to the columns of the Round Table, the writer isn't hesitant in stating that Mr. Moss is a little behind times,—according to his statement that "theatres are being managed with radical methods."

He further states that he has never seen a really successful theatre resort to some of the outlandish brainstorms that are now being passed off as showmanship. Giveaways of every description; prices cut beyond reason; ridiculous policies; and nonsensical stunts.

Times Have Changed!

As a matter of fact, I, too, have never, previous to the last few years of this so-called depression, seen a theatre—even a de luxe theatre—resort to such exploitation means.

But! I wonder if we all realize that times have changed and in line with the change, every policy and problem of the various organizations which have been in business for years has changed....changed radically! And the motion picture business is no exception to this rule. In fact, most of the radical changes had to take place in our industry,—else theatres....all of them.... would have closed their doors.

However, let's study the situation a bit and discover for ourselves whether managers get panicky or cautious and careful. This is one of the most important problems that has ever faced the motion picture business and according to box office statements, new methods applied to bring in old and new patrons, new price schedules, etc., the managers aren't doing so bad. AT LEAST NOT THOSE WHO ARE BUSINESS-SHOWMEN....and not friends, relatives and countrymen and janitors who think show business consists of seeing that the picture is projected on the screen and that there is a change of program each week, as the case may be.

The foregoing statement may seem a bit too direct and radical, but think it over and, learn whether the writer is wrong.

Let's continue! Times are tough! That is time-proved! Situations in spots are almost unbearable....not only with theatres but also in communities throughout the nation. This condition naturally has its effect on the theatre, the people, the merchants and the flotation of currency. The problem remains; how to get the people into the theatres, in shops and stores today in spite of this situation....with the established good will....heavy advertising appropriations ....bad pictures....and nothing new to offer as an added incentive. WHAT TO DO, THAT WAS THE PROBLEM. In fact, it is now prevalent in many situations. Naturally, showmen have to resort to other means to draw people to the theatre. Giveaways are planned, stage weddings held, cars promoted and almost every other conceivable item of interest to theatre-going public is either raffled or won at a theatre. The result is that in spite of present conditions, people flock to theatres during "giveaway days." Of course, you must remember that these showmen aren't at all dumb. THEY STAGE THE GIVEAWAYS ONLY AND MOSTLY ON THE DAYS THEY PLAY MEDIOCRE PICTURES ....AND I DON'T HAVE TO TELL YOU THAT PLENTY HAVE BEEN ON EXHIBITION LATELY.

Good Pictures or Else——!

THEN AGAIN, good product is the best incentive in the world to draw patrons to empty theatre seats. But how often do good pictures come? How often do you think people will come to theatres to see "dog" pictures? How long do you think a theatre will exist with such a condition? NOT A MINUTE! If you're a live-wire exhibitor, you probably answered this question before you read it here.

On the other hand, let's consider the average theatre manager. His trials and tribulations. His duties and requirements. How many of them are entrusted with the complete control of their theatres? You must remember that a large majority are in the employ of major producing organizations! Many of these companies are lax in judging the ability of their manager employees and therefore you see low grosses, closed theatres, etc. Then there are independents to consider. They have booking situations to worry about as well as exploitation possibilities. Often they run up against a brick wall with no signs of relief in an attempt to promote merchandise for giveaways. The major company with millions of dollars of backing is usually given first choice in any and probably all campaigns. So what about these little exhibitors? They have to go to extremes and purchase prizes to give to patrons. If the small exhibitor depended solely on product....there wouldn't be many of the small exhibitors left. But that's getting away from the point....

Al Zimbalist

Nothing is more constructive than an open discussion of any topic involving good business and good showmanship. The mere fact that two representative showmen disagreed is further proof that they, at least, have their own views.

Dick Moss may have been absolutely correct in his version. Al Zimbalist may also be right in the attitude he takes. The point is, do YOU agree with one or the other.

The best way to decide is to read first Moss' article which appeared on page 60 of the July 9th issue. Then read this article, and then sit down and air your own views amplifying still other angles if you are so inclined.

The Club pages is the logical place for such discussions. Here we meet on equal footing and match problems and ideas. They are your pages; use them for the best interests of show-business. "CHICK"

The Question of Giveaways Again Comes in for Much Discussion in This Fine Article from Zimbalist!

Manager and Circuit!

Let's get back to the average showman. It is not this writer's idea to prolong the controversy. Rather it is an exposition of the relationship between managers of a specific chain, namely, the Stanley-Fabian Corporation, which operates close to fifty theatres in Northern New Jersey under the general managership of Harry M. Kalmine.

This company considers the manager as the absolute key to the success of his theatre. This holds especially through present conditions. These men have been in the business for years. They have a thorough knowledge. And therefore, when they deem it necessary to run these so-called giveaways they must know what they are doing. Their receipts tell the story of the success of giveaways. And as far as this writer can remember, giveaways, in addition to service, good management, good booking, etc., have held a prominent position in the activities of this corporation.

It is interesting to note that the managers of our de luxe houses got there through recognition of their successful records made in smaller houses of our own chain.

We start out with the assumption that every manager is a man and not a robot. He is treated as such and given every opportunity to use his own ideas, to expand, to make suggestions, to sit in on his film bookings, to carry through any exploitation stunts that he might devise. Regarding the prospect of real opportunity, I can answer this no more specifically than to say that each of our six district managers or executives have previously been managers on this circuit. In other words, there is no importation of high-pressured executives from other circuits at any time. The iron rod of home office dictatorship is entirely out of consideration here, since our executives consider themselves counselors who offer their experience and help to managers in their particular zones.

The manager is, therefore, not considered a glorified porter, nor a mule, nor a paper carrier. The manager is held 100 per cent

GILLIS PROMOTED!

Al W. Gillis, formerly manager of the Follies Theatre, Seattle, Wash., has checked in as manager of the Fox-Rialto Theatre and Fox interests in Tacoma, replacing Clem Pope who recently left to take an assignment in eastern territory. Al's many friends wish him continued success in his field. He was a former townsman of "Roxy" Rothafel in Stillman, Minn., so readers better "watch his smoke."

GEORGE STEELE TIED UP AUTO DEALER FOR BIG PARADE OF CARS

A tie-up with a local automobile dealer for use of thirty cars in a parade staged to exploit "Crowd Roars," netted a lot of publicity for George Steele, manager of the RKO Ritz Theatre, Birmingham, Ala.

Naturally all the cars were bannered with streamers and a newspaper co-op, promoted for the occasion, broke at the same time. The lead car carried a large banner which read, "How far will this Auburn travel on 25 gallons of gas?" Need we say more? You all know how this gag is handled as to award, etc.

Without a doubt thirty brand new, shiny autos parading through the main streets will attract a whole lot of attention. Another thing we'd like to mention is that the co-op put over through the above tie-up was the first one that has been promoted in Birmingham in over a year

THORSTAD ARRANGED BIG BALLYHOO WHEN SINGER CAME TO TOWN

Just to let his friends and fellow Club members know that no bets are being overlooked by Dick Thorstad, manager of the Grand Theatre, West Palm Beach, Fla., we're calling attention to a bally he made when Mamie Smith, Colored Blues Singer, reached his town.

While Mamie actually came in from Miami, she had the big bus you see in the photo meet her at the station, where a parade of some twenty cars, all appropriately bannered, formed a procession that toured the whole town. The bus was secured for the noon hour at no cost and the various cars and trucks were promoted from local business houses. The banners were painted at the theatre.

Thorstad often resorts to the above form of bally for reason that he does not use the newspaper in his town. Why he doesn't use the newspaper he neglected to state, but we'll take it for granted that there's some good reason for passing it up. Some sort of bally must therefore be made and it's easy to perceive that he's on the job.

FLASHY SIGNS AT SMALL COST A REGULAR FEATURE AT WILLIAMSPORT, PA.

Where the location warrants it and the showman running the house is the type that can overcome obstacles and do things in a real big way, here is a gag that has proven mighty successful for Billy Hice of the Rialto Theatre in Williamsport, Pa., emphasizing its outstanding attractions.

This unusual sign is changeable and aside from the fountain or sunburst effect together with the arrow and border, can be made up from time to time as a special splurge for causing much comment and attracting attention around the town.

Compo-board, from all appearances, is the most important material incorporated into these signs. The spotting of the electric sockets is far from difficult and at the same time lends a touch that makes it "big" in every sense of the word.

If you have any sort of an imagination we can only suggest that you try to visualize what this sign looks like at night. First the border works up to the arrow, then the circle and fountain effect; then the sign itself lights up. A smash sock for business on any main street of any town and the man responsible for it deserves plenty of credit for what he has worked out in the way of an inexpensive yet impressive display. We have an idea that the Rialto in Williamsport has some more good ones tucked up its sleeve. Pass them along, boys, we can all use some new ideas now, especially if the ideas do not involve a large expenditure.

WATSON CALLING CHI.

Former associates of Bob Watson along Film Row, Chicago, will be interested to learn that he is now located in Los Angeles, Calif., where he has charge of the Cozy Theatre, South Broadway.

Prior to leaving for the Coast four years ago, Watson was prominently identified with the forces of Gumbiner Brothers and Ortenstein & Wells. He says hello to all his old cronies.

ZIMBALIST ANSWERS MOSS!

responsible for his theatre, with the result that he gets negotiable credits when he keeps putting his house over.

Our men are NOT PANICKY! The men are impressed with the idea of talking right out "in class," of being fearless and stating exactly the problems that confront them. Whether they be questions concerning film prices, advertising, general policy, or anything else that might aid them in their desire to put their houses over, the managers talk fearlessly without being afraid of stepping on anybody's toes.

Furthermore, the advertising, publicity and exploitation department is built primarily for the use of the manager to avoid any panic-stricken feeling. This department in addition to the booking department might be termed the spark plug of the organization. It is continually devising ideas and broadcasting them to each manager of the circuit. Each manager on the circuit receives credit for every stunt and giveaway he works in a house organ entitled "Howdy." Every manager is on his toes to break into the honorary mention columns of this little publication. Every good stunt that is worked is brought to the attention of the general manager by the advertising department, and due credit is given to the man who originated the idea.

Manager Is Important!

Starting with the idea that the manager is the most important cog in the wheel, this circuit has built its success around him and it has not been niggardly in its awards. The result is a healthy organization, an organization that respects each man's ability and starts out with the assumption that each manager is a man of brains and not a machine, not a man who is easily panic-stricken by sudden adverse conditions.

Of course, this business has its problems, and right now, with the shortage of good product and even a regular supply of pictures to combat summer weather, they're going to be solved by dishes, groceries, and various summer and winter policies now that the government tax is on our necks.

Wanamaker has special tie-ups with theatres and even circuits; I. J. Fox, one of the world's most popular furrier establishments, is working hand in hand with Paramount. This was evident at a recent fashion show at both the New York and Brooklyn Paramount theatres. Prominent breweries are tying in with theatres to give away free beer in return for a lobby card. Outdoor Girl lipstick and rouge is given away at theatres with regular admissions. Kleenex is another of the large organizations seeking showmanship methods. SO WHY NOT MOVIE THEATRES! Presently, the Skouras Theatres have an arrangement with the Greyhound Bus Company to give away free rides to lucky patrons. Greyhound is purchasing tickets in return and I understand are distributing them to their riders. SO NOW WHAT, MR. MOSS!

Have you seen the gratifying results obtained from these tie-ups which are handled in a very dignified manner? Look into the situation, Mr. Moss and I'm sure you'll be convinced, as will every other Round Table Member, that giveaways are an important inducement to bring back the old cash customers to the good old box office.

Sound judgment, dignified exploitation, service, good pictures and good management will inevitably change conditions at any theatre. THE FACT REMAINS THAT YOU MUST HAVE GIVE-AWAYS OR GOOD PICTURES TO GET BUSINESS! TAKE YOUR CHOICE!

MANY SHOWMEN ARE KEENLY INTERESTED IN THE TYPE OF NEWSPAPER ADVERTISING USED BY THE DELUXE THEATRES HERE IN NEW YORK CITY. HERE ARE SIX OF THE ADS WHICH APPEARED LAST WEEK.

Newspaper advertising today plays a bigger part in the merchandising efforts of our theatres than at any time in the past. So much so that every progressive showman is anxious to improve his newspaper advertising and place it on a much higher plane than ever before.

Week after week, consistently, we have published ads taken from all parts of the country. Many were really outstanding and contained new slants and ideas applicable to many other houses regardless of their location.

It is our intention to stress this phase of showmanship more than ever before and with this purpose in mind we are inviting every theatre manager, supervisor, publicity director and advertising man, having anything at all to do with theatre newspaper advertising, to send us, regularly, tear sheets or proofs of their newspaper ads so that we can convey a far more varied assortment of such advertising to the many members and readers who look to this section for such material.

Try to keep in mind that this is a showman's section for showmen and we will gladly widen the scope of this department to take in every angle pertaining to theatre advertising.

ROUND TABLE BIOGRAPHIES

It would take a good sized book to set down the experiences in showbusiness of Al Beckerich, manager of the RKO Palace Theatre, Akron, Ohio, so don't look for anything but a brief outline of his career to date in the following lines.

Al Beckerich

He was born in Toledo, Ohio, in the year 1889, and was educated in the schools of that city. At the age of 14 he received his initiation in this game with a Carnival show, and since then has been in practically every branch of the business—legit theatres, picture theatres, vaudeville theatres (even doing a turn himself for several years) and also took his part in a show-boat company.

He was a Loew manager at Buffalo, N. Y.; a district manager for Schine in western New York State; a Fox city manager at Niagara Falls, and has managed important houses in the cities of Brooklyn, N. Y.; Jamestown, N. Y.; Cleveland, Ohio, and other points.

If you ask him whether showbusiness would be his choice were he to start all over again he'd answer just the same as he did when we put the question to him—"Yes Sir, And How!" So we take it that there isn't any thought in his mind of ever leaving this field for another. Beckerich is married, the father of a daughter, and is an active member of various commercial organizations in his town.

CIGAR STORE TIE-UP USED BY MORRIS IS ONE THAT CAN'T MISS

Walter Morris, manager of the Broadway Theatre in Charlotte, N. C., has a cigar store tie-up that looks like a good bet for showmen.

With each order the store gives out a circular, the back of which plugs the current and coming attraction at the theatre, and the front of which explains that two free tickets to the Broadway Theatre are given away daily. All the patron at the cigar store has to do is to tear off one of the two corresponding numbers on the bottom of the slip and place it in a box. On his way home he is instructed to look on a chart posted on the window, and if he has a number corresponding with any posted he receives a pair of tickets.

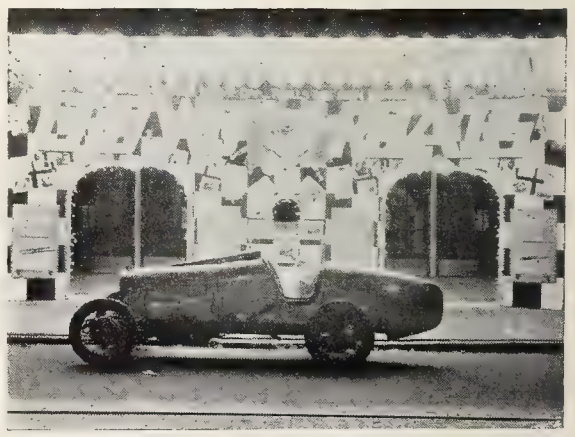
LOUIS STEIN MAKING USUAL CROP OF TIE-UPS OVER IN NEWARK

There's generally something doing in the tie-up line over at the Ritz Theatre in Newark, a house managed by Louis Stein.

Not long ago he made a deal with a neighboring drug store for the distribution of a new confection and the proprietor was so well pleased that he welcomed a repeat on the stunt. Patrons of the theatre received stubs that entitled them to one of the 1,000 "Icebergs" (ice cream on a stick) passed out at the store. In return for the ice cream the store received mention over the "mike" at the Saturday matinee performance.



Stein also held a give-away of ten pairs of shoes a short time ago, the third consecutive deal arranged with a local distributor of shoes. The shoes were valued at $3.85 per pair and the awards were made from the stage. The dealer paid for 15,000 give-away tickets that carried a theatre imprint on the back. He also stood the cost of a trailer and a 40x60.

Stein is another one of Harry Kalmine's boys over in the Warner New Jersey division and we plucked the above from "Howdy," a breezy circuit house organ gotten out by Al Zimbalist in Harry Goldberg's department. There are lots of hard-working boys in the Warner-New Jersey ranks and the Club wants to hear from all of them.

ALVIN HOSTLER MADE STRIKING FRONT FOR CAGNEY AUTO PICTURE

Below is a reproduction of the front made for "Crowd Roars" by Alvin Hostler, manager of the Warner Theatre, Altoona, Pa., and when we state "made by" we mean just that, for he constructed the entire display.

The background represented a checkered flag effect with black and white squares. The title, while appearing quite faint in the photo because of its color, was red and stretched across full width of entrance. It was blocked out three inches from the background. Many photographs of famous racing drivers and scenes of wrecks on tracks were spotted here and there, as were flags such as used on the speedways. The racing car standing in front of the theatre entrance was a chrome plated job and made a great flash.

Hostler's photo would have reproduced far better except for the red or reddish colors used in the display. However, it will give his fellow Club members a good idea of what kind of a job he turned out and, perhaps, outline a scheme for others who have yet to play this picture.

HARRY DAVIES HAS FOUNTAIN THAT HE USES FOR DISPLAYS

Over in the foyer of the Lefferts Theatre, Brooklyn, a Randforce house managed by Harry Davies, there's a fountain that comes in mighty handy for displays.

In the accompanying photo showing a display made for "Hell Divers" a portion of this fountain base can be seen jutting out at the bottom portion. The space back of the fountain was made to represent an aviation field, with background painted to show planes in flight, and hangars and other planes on the ground. Also, note the administration buildings, etc., which helped carry out the general scheme. Three blinker lights were played on important spots and a border display carried heads of Beery and Gable. Twenty-five planes were hung from the ceiling of the display and one hundred and twenty-five miniature planes were suspended from the foyer ceiling.

The outside display consisted of a de luxe front with large, painted banner hung over the marquee sign. A large roof banner and one hundred and fifty of the small planes were also hung from the marquee ceiling.

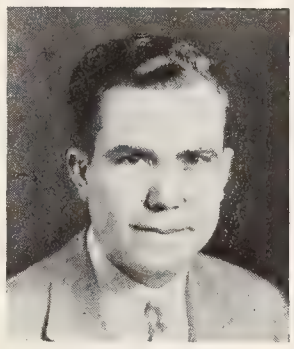
The fountain was again used for an atmospheric display on "Tarzan." The background was transformed into a jungle with natural trees, grass, etc., and a parrot, birds and a live monkey were placed in this setting. The entire foyer ceiling was covered with hanging crepe paper, on the ends of which were attached cutouts of monkeys and parrots. During the engagement the marquee was covered with grass and the live parrot and monkey placed outside. A 24-sheet of "Tarzan" graced the top of the marquee. Additional effort included a street bally of an usher dressed in a monkey suit and the house to house distribution of 5,000 "Tarzan" heralds.

As all the fellows on the Randforce circuit are doing these days, Harry Davey and his staff are working hard to put over their shows and the above is just a small amount of evidence of what's taking place. So far the Lefferts, which, incidentally is Publicity Director Monty MacLevy's old hangout, has staged four benefits in the general campaign sponsored by the circuit. We hope that Davey will continue to keep in touch with headquarters.

GETTING THE NEW PRODUCT STARTED!

The various announcements pertaining to the next season's product contain much meat for propaganda in all types of theatres. For example, they can be mounted, and even framed; then, spotted around your lobby and lounge rooms with neatly lettered cards, can start to build up plenty of interest among your patrons for the new product.

If you have an artist or work with a local art shop, they too can use the announcements as a basis for attractive displays calling attention to some of the outstanding pictures on the schedules for fall release.



The finest brains in ad make-up, art work and advertising text go into such company announcements; to fail to take full advantage of them is passing up a great bet.

We are all anxious to help bring about a more definite "back to the theatre" movement, especially where it affects us in our respective towns and cities. There is no better medium than to create widespread interest in some of the unusually fine pictures planned.

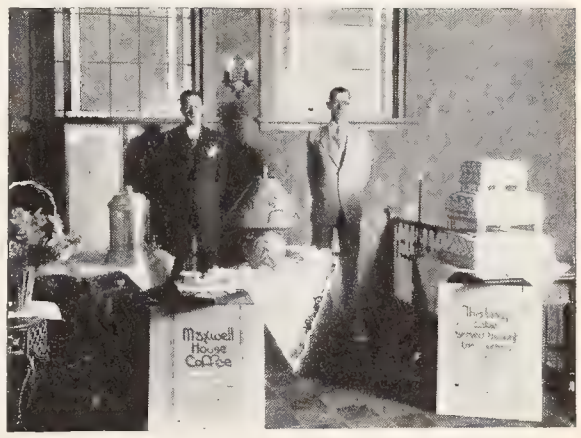
Surely there is some way you can capitalize on them. Try working out something in this connection. If you do, pass it along for the Club pages where thousands of other showmen can likewise benefit by your ingenuity.

ROUND TABLE BIOGRAPHIES

At the age of sixteen years Harry Schlinker was seized with the ambition to enter the theatre business, and in he went. His respect for coin of the realm led him to the treasurer's office of the Majestic Theatre, at Fort Worth, but he soon forsook that end for the more active job of advertising and exploiting pictures.

Harry Schlinker

He next went with the Interstate Circuit of Texas, and when RKO took that outfit over he was put to work on publicity by Len S. Brown, then division manager for RKO Southern. He was later transferred to the RKO Hollywood Theatre at Fort Worth, and from there went to the Majestic Theatre at Houston. Following that assignment he was sent to San Antonio for some special work and was subsequently sent back to Houston and his present position in New Orleans as publicity and exploitation man for the RKO Orpheum Theatre.



Schlinker was born in Bonham, Texas, in the year 1903, and was educated in the schools of Fort Worth. He is married and the father of two children. He tell us he's in showbusiness for keeps.

HILL HANDLED SIXTH ANNIVERSARY SHOW FOR MERCY CIRCUIT

The Sixth Anniversary of the Mercy Circuit was celebrated recently in Walla Walla, Washington, and was reported a success.

To Frank Hill, manager of the Liberty Theatre, was assigned the task of exploiting and publicizing the occasion.

Hill tied up the local newspapers on special publicity and photos. Advertising received added attention, with a number of exceptionally fine layouts being turned out, among them one featuring congratulatory telegrams from the Warner stars. The wires were also used in a special program announcement, which carried a front page photo of the Mayor of Walla Walla, inscribed with congratulations.

Patrons of the theatre were treated to coffee, cake and cookies, donated by local merchants.

An exceptional array of short subjects was also booked for presentation during the festive week, assuring a well rounded out program filled with entertainment surprises for the cash customers.

The photo accompanying this story shows the food display in the lobby. Hill, the man responsible for the success of the week, is standing alongside the immense cake donated by the local baking company.

Special Exploitation!

The reported action of the M. P. T. O. of Pennsylvania to engage the services of a special exploiteer to help their members put over certain pictures, sounds like a swell chance for some of the exploitation men scattered around the country, and not at present employed, to sell themselves to theatres to handle this sort of work.

They ought to be able to make a fairly good living at it until conditions improve for regular assignments in this line.

TIMELY PICTURE!

With the entire country political-minded as the result of the two recent conventions and impending presidential campaigns the current release "Dark Horse" ought to be a great picture for Club members to work on these days.

This department is in receipt of several accounts of campaigns already made and the burlesque note is predominant, mainly so, of course, on account of the comedy nature of the picture. Fed up as the country appears to be with the hollowness of the average campaign speech, patrons ought to react most favorably to reasonable exploitation along this line. Go to it, Round Tablers; think up some original ideas for your campaigns on this picture and get your share of the business.

"DOCTOR" JOE LEE PRESCRIBES PILLS FOR AILING HOUSES

We ran recently quite a bit of comment on the various doings of showmen in New York and Brooklyn, or what comprises the "Big Burg," and during our talk we sort of forgot for the moment that Brooklyn's favorite "Doctor of Sick Theatres," Joe Lee, division manager for RKO in Brooklyn, is still handing out his box-office pills.

His remedy consists of special newspaper pages, laid out by himself and his art staff, and used on pictures when he wants to knock down records. He used the stunt on "Frankenstein" and it was certainly a hair-raising job, being printed in type that looked "shivery."

This success was followed by a facsimile of a former New York tabloid, and emblazoned with pictures and headlines that absolutely got across.

GET OUT YOUR PENCIL!

Sharpen up your pencil and see if you are as good an arithmetician as Bill Mick, manager of the RKO Madison Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Long an observer of feminine characteristics, Bill reasoned that the sending of invitations to 25 women to witness a preview of "Symphony of Six Million," at the same time stipulating that each should 'phone 10 friends about the fine show they'd seen, would start something. Then he took a fresh grip on his eversharp and figured the sum total of 'phone calls from 250 gabby women to each of three friends, and subsequent message from the latter to three other friends. Potential word of mouth advertising from 2,250 human broadcasting stations was the conclusion reached by Bill.

Try the stunt yourself, with Bill Mick's compliments. We hear it worked out swell.

POPULARITY SHOW WAS POPULAR WITH RESNICK'S CUSTOMERS

Neighborhood theatres have always supplied A. D. Resnick, of the Hamilton Theatre, in Philadelphia, Pa., with the incentive to "keep 'em talking about the house."

"And," continued Resnick, "if you can do that you'll always have the public fighting to get in, and you'll have the red ink manufacturers tearing what's left of their hair."

Resnick knows what he's talking about, too, when he makes a statement. Ever since he has been selling shows in the Quaker City he has worked like a Trojan to put them over. The Club pages, with their accounts of his fashion show activities, his local tie-ups and many other things, prove this.

Now he steps forward and offers his brother members an account of his latest efforts toward building bigger and better business in a time when it's most needed. He offers a popularity contest.

Resnick contacted one of the local weeklies in the neighborhood and arranged to get front page space for his plan. He next secured the co-operation of the local merchants, who willingly lent their aid, particularly since they have yet to lose anything on an "A. D." idea.

The merchants agreed to make donations to the girls leading the contest at the close. And their part of the bargain was that they were to be permitted to distribute popularity tickets with every purchase of twenty-five cents or more. They handed out plenty.

The popularity plan went over in a big way the moment it was announced.

And here Resnick displayed some more showmanship. In addition to an announcement in the papers, he stated from the stage that the next attraction he intended to offer his patrons was a real wedding to take place on the stage. He wound up his proclamation by extending an invitation to any couples in love to step up and be introduced as coming bride and groom. This made a big hit with the crowd, but evidently the swains were a bit "audience shy" and wouldn't go up.

But Resnick went out after his couple. And we'll have some more to say about his wedding in future issues of the Club's doings.

MESSENGER CUT-OUT EXCELLENT TO PLUG LAST FILM SHOWING

That muchly roared war cry "Cut down expenses" these dog days doesn't bother Milo De Haven any as he pursues his blithesome way about the Burke Theatre in New York City and endeavors to give his patrons not only the best in entertainment but also the best in exploitation.

Milo often used to ponder a way to announce effectively the time of the last showing of the feature picture. He wanted to do it without cost, but he wanted to do it well. Then he hit upon an idea that is certainly a corker for Club members who can find a spot for it.

He called the Postal Telegraph Company and they gladly agreed to send him free a life sized cutout of one of their messengers. Milo placed the cutout in front of the theatre and then had a fairly large sign, announcing the last unreeling of the film, drawn up and placed in the boy's hand.

It proved a very interesting attention arrester and a darn good way of keeping the public appraised of the film time. Milo checked quite a few people who went into the house a few minutes before the last showing started, and who might not have gone in if they hadn't seen the sign informing them they would see a full film.

GERHARD SOLD BOY SCOUTS ON SCHEME TO BOOST BUSINESS

The Boy Scout troops were sold an idea to boost the box office receipts on "Tenderfoot," when that picture was played by Manager Gerhard of the Warner Theatre at Hackensack, N. J.

He went to the Scout headquarters, explained his plan and the Scoutmasters did the rest. Each Scoutmaster, Gerhard told them, would be admitted to the theatre free of charge if they induced their associates to attend the show. One hundred and fifty of the boys showed up at the Saturday matinee.

The Scouts also put up a lobby display which consisted of an Indian tepee, five Indian headdresses, five sheepskin suits, signal flags, tom-toms, and a number of articles fashioned by the Scouts in their workshop.

In addition to bringing in extra money at the box office on Saturday, Gerhard's tie-up netted him an attractive display that didn't cost the theatre anything.

Exhibitors!!! Attention!!!

By a recent decision of the Court of Appeals, picketing of a theatre is legal. This decision affects every theatre in New York State. Steps are being taken to appeal from this decision. In the meantime the EMPIRE STATE MOTION PICTURE OPERATORS UNION, Inc., stands ready to serve the EXHIBITOR as it has in the past.

SINGERS

Mme. Ernestine Schumann-Heink
San Francisco Fox

Mme. Schumann-Heink easily dominates the bill, despite some other costly attractions. She appears dressed in white, with no more fuss than any other proud grandmother, and quickly gets down to the business of singing. It is quickly discerned that her voice sounds much better than over the radio. She sings with apparently utter unconcern and in glorious voice. Her thoughts might easily have been ranging back through the long years to her own numerous babies when she sang "Weigenlied," by Brahms. Other numbers are "Thy Beaming Eyes," by MacDowell; "Erlkoenig," by Schubert, and "Guten Abend, Gut Nacht." Every number is enthusiastically received and the diva is given a rousing curtain call.

Sylvia Froos
New York Paramount

Brimful of personality, this young radio star, besides assisting Lahr and Richman in various bits, offers her own routine of songs, consisting of "There's Oceans of Love by the Beautiful Sea," "Cabin in the Cotton" and "My Extraordinary Man," which she pleasingly sold. This act is a good bet.—H. P.

Beth Lewis
Carlyle Bennett
Detroit Fox

Although billed separately, these two, soprano and tenor, work together. Except for one spot, they are kept in the background, providing atmosphere for the rest of the stage bill. In their one spot they win the audience by singing "With a Song in My Heart."

Adelaide Hall (3)
New York Palace

Accompanied by two men pianists, Miss Hall sings "River Stay 'Way From My Door," with a screen background offering the effect of a spiritual. After a piano duet of "Chloe," Miss Hall presents "Singin' the Blues," going into a Harlem tap dance shuffle. She encores with a fine vocal of "Between the Devil and the Deep Blue Sea." Audience reaction distinctly favorable.—H. P.

Mills Brothers
Milwaukee Wisconsin

There is no doubt about the fact that these four lads are natural show stoppers. They bowed on to a good hand and off to heavy applause after two encores of their uncanny harmony. In their linen suits and blue ties without a trace of superfluous motion, coolly and calmly they present their tuneful selections with the assistance of a guitar. Numbers include "Diana," "Chained to My Rockin' Chair," "Tiger Rag" and "How We Doin'."

Dorothy Fanning
Oakland Orpheum

Dorothy Fanning, a San Francisco girl, gets a splendid reception and displays a voice that promises to take her far. She makes an especially good impression with her rendition of "Giannina Mia."

Revises Stage Shows

"Rhapsody in Black," the all-negro revue that was scheduled to open a week's run at the Missouri Theatre in St. Louis on July 15, opened July 22. The revue was the first stage show to play the Missouri for about two years. The house has been operating on a double-feature motion picture policy exclusively.

CBS Signs Flippen, Edwards

Jay C. Flippen, vaudeville and radio entertainer, has been signed to an exclusive contract by Columbia Broadcasting System. He will serve as master of ceremonies for a new program over WABC every Tuesday evening, beginning August 2. Cliff Edwards has been signed to an exclusive contract by Columbia.

Lyman on Lucky Strike Hour Again

Abe Lyman and his orchestra will be featured for the second time on the July 30th Lucky Strike Studio Hour, when they will be heard over a nationwide NBC network. Lyman is equally well known in Europe and America. At present he is being held over for a fourth week at the Capitol theatre New York City.

Vitaphone Signs Roger Kahn

Vitaphone has signed Roger Wolf Kahn for appearance with his band in one of the "Melody Masters" series of shorts being made at the Brooklyn studio.

Wedding Chimes

Grace Halloran, known in theatrical circles as "Mickey" Halloran, and Irving Rose, orchestra leader, were married in St. Louis, July 1, the culmination of a romance which started in 1928 when Miss Halloran played the Ambassador theatre, where Rose directed the orchestra.

REVUES

Benny Davis (21)
New York State

Benny Davis, song writer and discoverer of many Broadway stars, again has surrounded himself with a group of clever juveniles. Sunny O'Day offers a tap dance bit, 3 Singing Ryans harmonize in a pleasant manner, Rax Sax plays the saxophone while offering a tap dance, then spins a lariat, and finally gives a clever impersonation of Ted Lewis, using two clarinets to play "St. Louis Blues," at the same time going through a series of contortions. Sis and Buddy do a good bit of dancing, followed by Martha Ray, who sings "Hummin' to Myself" and "How'm I Doin'?" reminiscent of Lillian Shade. Jack Stearn offers an original Apache acrobatic dance, after which Jack Green gives splendid imitations of Al Jolson, Georgie Jessel and Eddie Cantor. Davis' melody of his song hits earns a good hand. A long but entertaining act.—H. P.

PLAYLETS

Jack Dempsey and Lina Basquette
San Francisco Fox

Jack Dempsey proves that he is still popular and makes a great hit in his stage act written by Willard Mack. The skit is prefaced by some screen pictures of Dempsey triumphs and then Jack comes on in a setting representing a gas station. He is on his way to the races at Agua Caliente. This gives him an opportunity to tell of some of his ring experiences and his opinions about other bouts. He ends with suggesting that he would like a go with Jack Sharkey.

Lina Basquette is on the stage part of the time with Jack and proves that she, too, is a real entertainer. She chats with Walt Roesner, fraternizes with the audience and dispenses cool drinks to some of the elderly men in the front rows. Then she does a dance that is the embodiment of grace and ends with a rumba that IS a rumba, a mad, swirling combination of steps quite intoxicating to the senses.

INSTRUMENTAL

Roger Wolfe Kahn & Orchestra
New York Palace

Roger has surrounded himself with a group of talented musicians whose work pleased. The Kahn-oisseurs, a vocal trio, effectively sing "After You're Gone," followed by Gertrude Niessen, a personable young woman, who scores with an imitation of Lyda Roberti singing "Sweet and Hot." Millicent Mason offered a pleasing eccentric dance, the band closing with a hot arrangement of "Way Down Yonder in New Orleans," Hal Le Roy favoring with a dance. This act clicks.—H. P.

Cab Calloway
and His Cotton Club Orchestra
Baltimore Hippodrome

Cab and his band offered "Hot Toddy," the "Skat Song," with Cab singing and dancing; "Minnie the Moocha," Cab singing and inviting the audience to join in yells; "Old Man River," with innovations. Many called from the audience for certain songs at the end of the program. Cab obliged with "Cabin in the Cotton." Isabell Washington sang "He's My Extraordinary Man" to good applause.

Alex Hyde & Orchestra (11)
New York State

Alex presents an all-girl orchestra who open dressed as hill-billies and play "She'll Be Comin' Round the Mountain," in an entertaining fashion. The band then offers "My Extraordinary Man," with a vocal by a personable miss with a pleasing voice. Another girl plays the piano, at the same time selling a tap dance. Hyde offers a violin solo of "My Silent Love," followed by the vocalist's imitation of well known radio stars. The girls finale with a splendid symphonic rendition of Tschaikowsky's Fourth Symphony. An entertaining class act.—H. P.

STAGE ATTRACTIONS

REVIEWS OF ACTS FOR PICTURE THEATRES

NOVELTY

Nice, Florio and Larbow (3)
Detroit Fisher

A girl and two male partners in this offer a variety of clever tap and acrobatic dancing, comedy patter and extremely rough slapstick. In disheveled dress suits, the two men put on a very good inebriate bit. At one performance here an alcoholic dive into the orchestra by one of the dancers brought a stage hand out of the wings with open mouth and blinking eyes.

The Six Aristocrats (4 girls, 2 men)
Baltimore Hippodrome

First, four girls and one man sang "We Are the Dance Aristocrats," going into tap work. Then the other man did a drunk dance on a full stage special set. A couple followed with fast tap work, then three girls in a high-kicking dance, followed by a man and girl in eccentric acrobatic work; then the other man on in soft-shoe dancing. In the second part, with a special set, there was clogging and acrobatic work, all finishing in a modernistic finale.

Captain Willie Mauss
New York Palace

Mauss offers a flash bit in which he rides a bicycle in a large ferris wheel at top speed. A thrilling spectacle.—H. P.

Edwin George
Cincinnati Albee

Billed as "Nearly a Juggler," George's act is a well-conceived travesty on the art. His tricks miss more often than not, but each time he offers a convulsing alibi. His main line is a continuous barrage of wisecracking in an intimate, indifferent and nonchalant manner while continuing his efforts at juggling. His material is good and his salesmanship excellent.

Jack Brancel and Pals
New Orleans Orpheum

This is a dog act which has but two dogs and no props, but it stands out not only through the dogs' routines but the showmanship of Brancel. His first dog he says is 14 years old, but as agile as a pup. He somersaults, stands on one paw and does everything Brancel orders with a snap that is surprising in a dog of this age. Then he turns the stage over to a dog announced as the first performer's daughter, who works cleverly. Throughout the act, though, the impression remains that Brancel, with his remarks, his manner of petting the dogs, is really the show.

Princess Wahletka
San Francisco Golden Gate

This American Indian seeress is headlined and pleases with her work. She reads minds, foretells events and gives advice. She answers questions without getting any complaints from those presenting them and her apparent sincerity helps win her audiences.

Max and His Gang
Detroit Michigan

Max opens as a soft-shoe and acrobatic dancer in formal attire under a silk hat. This preliminary entertainment needs no apology, but it is simply a build-up for the entrance of his canine "gang." The dogs follow him through a number of stunts, including backward somersaults, hurdle leaps and a game of leap-frog. This act should go well with any audience.

Stuart and Lash
Detroit Fisher

The profusion of bits and variety of work offered by this pair makes summary describing of their performance impossible. They sing, gag and dance their way to hearty applause. One of the pair acts as m. c. for the show. Some of their work is not too new and some of it is frankly silly, but their manner of handling it puts it over. An outstanding excerpt is an impersonation of the Mills Brothers.

Bob, Bob and Bobbie
Cincinnati Albee

The "Bobbie" of the trio is a smart dog which is a very important part of the act. After the two men present a routine of fast club juggling after the standard formula, the canine is introduced, and while perched on the back of one of the performers, catches in his mouth the clubs which the other performer throws from a considerable distance. Another outstanding highlight is the placing of a house employee, smoking a cigar, in the center of the stage, the ashes of the cigar being knocked off by the clubs which pass from one performer to the other at opposite ends of the stage. The act went over big with the regulars.

Ducalion
Detroit Fox

Ducalion climbs a straight ladder and perches on the top rung while he delivers a limey "silly old awse" brand of patter. A comedy skit illustrating a comparison of men and women in pursuit of street cars brings guffaws from the men and suppressed titters from the women. In his closing number Ducalion mounts the ladder and plays a mandolin.

La Costa and Carlita (6)
Baltimore Hippodrome

This talented act has musicians, singers and dancers, all in a Mexican bar set. There's a Spanish dance, with music provided by three men, followed by a girl toe dancing while playing violinist. Next comes a novelty trio with violin, accordion and guitar, the violin in tremolo work with a special gadget and one man making musical sounds with his teeth. The selections are "Sleepy Time Down South" and "Smile Darn You Smile." Next the leads appear in a rumba dance, turning into an Apache dance with the girl thrown through a paper mirror over the bar.

Madeline Berlo
Detroit Fisher

This clever mermaid works with Johnny Weismuller and performs the aquatic feats that might have been expected from the noted swimmer. Her best bit is a sensational dive from the borders into the small stage tank. She earned heavy applause.

Paul Nolan
Baltimore Century

The act is entertaining throughout. Nolan does his work a la Joe Fields, mainly with high hats, bouncing balls and a cane. He is assisted by a pretty woman. Nolan had them laughing throughout and got excellent applause.

Joe Roe
Detroit Fox

Comical and clever is the work of this guardsman-uniformed clown. Acrobatic dancing is his forte, with emphasis on the acrobatics.

COMEDIANS

Bert Lahr
New York Paramount

This comedy star offers a monologue via a "mike," a satirical bit on radio announcements, which proved highly amusing to this audience. Throughout the bill Bert, assisted by Harry Richman, the m. c. of the show, proved his clowning ability, his famous horse laugh never missing.—H. P.

Phil Baker
New York Capitol

Opening with several amusing stories, Baker suddenly finds himself being heckled by a stooge in the box, the result being a very funny bit of repartee. Later the stooge sings, interrupting his song several times to offer bright answer to Baker's queries. Baker cleverly uses his accordion throughout.—H. P.

Dezso Retter
Milwaukee Wisconsin

At the opening of his act this acrobatic comedian has the audience guessing as to just what he will do. He is generally nonsensical in his efforts to worm his way around a card table, interspersed with expressionistic dancing when the drummer beats his drums. His best bet, however, is the bit in which he stages a wrestling match with himself. It is good for heavy laughs.

Mae Usher
New York State

Miss Usher is a clever comedienne who sells her nonsense with ease. Opening with a comedy novelty song, "I Knew Him When," which includes a dramatic recitation, Miss Usher offers several comical radio impersonations, closing with a fine vocal of "Lawd You Made the Night Too Long."—H. P.

Jordan and Woods
Detroit Michigan

Radio caricatures make this a merry turn. They use a piano and two "mikes." Among the broadcast stars burlesqued are Singing Sam, Rudy Vallee, The Goldbergs, Tony Wons, Kate Smith and Helen Kane.

Lou Holtz
New York Capitol

Acting as master of ceremonies throughout the show, Holtz is a laugh riot. Lou imitates Bing Crosby to a nice laugh, after which, assisted by Phil Baker, he becomes a Hindu fakir, in a swell bit of mental telepathy, supervised by Norman Frescott. Holtz can make anybody laugh.—H. P.

Russell, Marconi and Jerry
Philadelphia Fox

Here's a varied and mirth-provoking act including comedy violin and accordion playing, tap dancing and wisecracking. It could be shortened to advantage.

Radcliffe & Rogers
New York State

This colored team opens with comedy chatter, after which Radcliffe, accompanied by Rogers at the piano, offers a routine of popular songs in a pleasing voice, adding a surprise by singing German and Jewish versions of "You're Driving Me Crazy." A hot finale, in which Radcliffe offers a cornet bit and tap dance, rounds out a pleasing act.—H. P.

STAGE ATTRACTIONS

REVIEWS OF STAGE ACTS

Wm. Demarest & Estelle Collette

New York State

The former Earl Carroll star opens with several gags that click, after which Miss Collette offers a violin solo with Demarest clowning an accompaniment on the 'cello. A slap bit between a member of the pit orchestra and Demarest brought a hearty laugh. A violin solo with acrobatics offered by Demarest was well received.—H. P.

Jones and Rea

Baltimore Hippodrome

These character comedians, one as an old motorman, the other as applicant for a conductor's job, offer dialogue and songs that bring many laughs.

Mills and Robinson

Detroit Michigan

Mills is a necessary prop in this act, but the dancing laurels belong to the red-headed girl, Florence Robinson. She plays dumb damsel to his exasperation line, and they share the resulting comedy honors. Mills opens the act with a violin. The girl walks onto the stage from the audience, crossing over to take a seat on the other side. She is only there for a minute when she starts back with the explanation that "it sounds just as bad on that side." This is followed by clever eccentric tap work on the torrid order. The act closes with her impressions of Tom Patricola.

Pall Mall

Baltimore Century

He came on with his usual gusto, seeking applause and returning to get it. He sang "You're My Everything," then did some chatter and jokes and a dance. After singing "Minnie's Brother, George the Chiseler," he presented a medley of popular hits.

Red and Struggie

Baltimore Hippodrome

They appear in eccentric, wide pants costumes and go through their comic steps and songs with personality that gets the audience.

ACROBATS

Hashi and Osai

Omaha Orpheum

This Japanese couple displays much artistry in its acrobatics. The man balances the girl atop a 20-foot pole, where she extends herself horizontally first by her hands, then by her feet. He supports the pole in a belt at his waist. The girl then does a balancing stunt, standing on one hand atop a pedestal, placed on a table mid-stage. She makes a complete turn while balanced on the one hand. Tumbling, speedy handsprings and cartwheels add to the pep of the act.

The Four Flushers

Detroit Fox

The tumbling offered by this quartet is beyond criticism. Their comedy, however, is slapstick of the extreme roughhouse variety, and adds little to the performance.

Gilbert Brothers

Milwaukee Wisconsin

The horizontal bar is these lads' specialty and the way they swing and turn on it is nobody's business. Their strong-arm feats of balancing and turning win for them the unstinted praise of their audience.

DANCERS

Hannah Williams

New York Capitol

This vivacious little musical comedy star opens with a vocal of "Let's Have Another Cup of Coffee," following this with a hot rendition of "Goin' to the Promised Land," going into a plenty hot-cha dance. Miss Williams encored with "Cheerful Little Earful," which she successfully featured in the musical "Sweet and Low." Audience reaction favorable.—H. P.

Cole Brothers (2)

San Francisco Golden Gate

These colored lads have a tap dancing technique that is different and win merited applause with the intricate work. They appear unhurried but get rid of a lot of taps per second. They sing as they dance and throw in a banjo number for good measure.

Al Norman

Cincinnati Albee

Norman deviates from the customery routine of wisecracking by telling a number of jokes, which are only so-so. After a slow start, he builds up rapidly by displaying a complete bed on the stage and illustrating how persons of different temperaments sleep. He closed to big applause by a novel eccentric soft-shoe dance.

Nadine

Detroit Fox

This vivacious young lady is more than an accomplished dancer. Figure and face and air of spontaneity to her work make her something of a headliner. Her routine consists of high kicks, wings, a modified Spanish tango step and particularly nimble acrobatics.

Sammy Krevoff & Co. (5)

New York State

Krevoff offers a routine of clever rhythm tap dancing featuring a top-spin which earned him a nice reception. Four girls offered imitations of Anna Pavlowa, Marilyn Miller and Harriet Hoctor, to a pleased audience. A class act that should go well anywhere.—H. P.

Natacha Nattova

Detroit Fox

This Folies Bergere artist offers an interpretative number called "The Dance of the Wind." Her steps are executed around and on the petals of flowers in gigantic vase. The act is all class for a hearty hand.

ABE LYMAN
AND HIS CALIFORNIA ORCHESTRA
Held Over 3rd Week at the
CAPITOL THEATRE
NEW YORK CITY
GOING INTO 48th WEEK
OVER FULL COLUMBIA NETWORK—FOR
PHILLIPS DENTAL MAGNESIA

SPOTS & SHOTS ON BROADWAY

Morton Downey, just back from a European vacation, will celebrate by appearing at the Capitol. Radio has effectively contributed its stars for stage presentation at local theatres with a large measure of success.

Over the week end we ensconced our anatomy in a hammock—oh, all right, just an ordinary swing, and devoted our invaluable time to a perusal of "Reckless Hollywood," by Haynes-Rubou, a daringly written story of the lower strata of Hollywood life.

Joe Hoffman, formerly on the staff of Variety, is now handling personal publicity with an office on E. 49th st. His first clients are the Funnyboners, of radio fame.

Doing its share for unemployment relief, the Paramount New York theatre this week has given jobs to about 75 actors—and a horse. Of course, the horse is only there for atmosphere, but as Alex Gottlieb says, "at least he earns his three squares a day." Was he thinking of us when he said that?

The last day of Jack Benny's appearance at the Capitol last week, Abe Lyman's boys hid a piece of limburger cheese in the violin which Benny plays. Ah, dirty work afoot.

Charlie Kenny, whose big brother is Uncle Nick of the Daily Mirror, has signed to write the lyrics for a Shubert show. Among Charlie's hits was "Love Letters in the Sand."

Mr. and Mrs. Roger Wolfe Kahn have gone their separate ways but both ways have led back to Broadway. Roger is appearing at the Palace and she (Hannah Williams) is wowing them at the Capitol.

Cherry Blossom and June Preisser, those two little southern kids who recently stopped the Palace show cold, have been rebooked there this week. We'll bet that some Broadway show will feature them this fall.

For four months the sentence, "Andy, I went home," went unnoticed on that building on 51st street. Then Walter Winchell used it as an item and now it's a landmark.

Gaston Palmer, the juggler who last week stopped the show at the Palace, confided in us that his son and daughter will soon make a tour of this country with a repertoire of tricks that will astound.—Oh, after you, my dear Gaston.

Tin Pan Alley has been invaded by Tin Ear Alley. Bill Duffy has opened a training gym at 711 Seventh avenue. With music business as it is, a lot of our songwriters are wondering if they couldn't make more money as leather pushers.

HERMAN PINCUS.

Cohan Composes Number

George M. Cohan, appearing at the Paramount studio in "The Phantom President," has composed a new song, his first in several seasons. The title is "We Need a Man."

STAGE ATTRACTIONS

ORGAN SOLOS

ARSENE SIEGEL (Detroit Fisher) successfully introduces one or two numbers not too familiar here, in his solo, "Summer Symphony." The opening score, "Crazy People," pleased this audience and promises to be a great favorite. "Is I in Love"? was another happy selection. To "Three Little Words" Siegel attaches a prohibition parody lyric that brings both response and applause. "Masquerade," which is growing in popularity here, captured a fair share of voices. Boys and girls alternated on a parody to "You Try Somebody Else." The solo closed with "In My Hideaway."

DON BAKER (Staten Island Paramount) offered a departure from routine last week in substituting a piano solo with organ accompaniment and guest artist for the usual organ presentation. The solo was titled "Piano Soliloquy" and was played with the concert grand piano back of the sound screen, which allowed the audience to clearly see Baker and the guest singer, Joseph McKenna, baritone. On the screen was projected a reel of scenic film containing selections appropriate to the musical score. The first number played by Baker was "Mood Indigo." The second, during which the soloist was presented, was "Lullaby of the Leaves." Baker then rendered as a piano solo, during a western atmospheric sequence, "Little Grey Home in the West," and as the film changed to scenes of swampland he again presented the singer in a magnificent rendition of "Chloe," with Baker doing a piano and organ accompaniment. The entire program was well received.

DON MILLER (Detroit Michigan) includes in his songfest "Masquerade," the lilting German importation which he introduced in spectacular manner on his first appearance here a number of weeks ago. The orchestra blends into several spots in the solo. "My Silent Love" is a clarinet solo against a background of organ chimes and pipes. "Crazy People" brings pronounced bass notes and trap cadence from the orchestra. Other numbers which prove audience favorites are "In My Hideaway," "I'm Hummin' to Myself" and "Somebody Loves You."

LEW BETTERLY (Detroit RKO Downtown) presents a diversified and musically excellent program which includes Strauss's "Blue Danube," "The Merry Widow Waltz," "Paradise," "Moonlight On the River"—a new number with a promising swing—, and the Crosby sing-song, "Where the Blue of the Night Meets the Gold of the Day."

Midwesco Spots Radio Bands in Neighborhoods

Fox Midwesco is spotting in radio bands when available at its Milwaukee neighborhood houses on Sundays in addition to the regular photoplay program. The policy is said to be meeting with good reception. Theatres inaugurating the new policy include Oriental, Tower, Uptown, Modjeska and Garfield.

$12,000 for a Song

Universal is understood to have offered $12,000 to Thurlow Lieurance, dean of the college of fine arts of the University of Wichita, in Kansas, for the use of his best known song, "By the Waters of the Minnetonka," in the film, "Laughing Boy." Mr. Lieurance owns the copyright.

SLICES OF MELLIN

By BOBBY MELLIN

Chicago

Paul Whiteman's friends are beginning to wonder when he sleeps. In addition to his weekly and daily broadcasts, his recording activities and his numerous comings and goings in New York's music realm, the dean of modern music announced that he will hold open house on Wednesdays for the music publishers and also continue his search for promising radio talent.

"In this manner," says Whiteman, "I plan to hear all the compositions that the publishers can crowd into three hours. I believe it only fair that I should hear the latest songs and tunes in this way, since I do not have sufficient time to grant individual interviews."

Therefore, each Wednesday from 1 to 3 p. m., Whiteman will listen to a steady procession of new works intended for Broadway and nation wide presentation. Whiteman will also continue his talent auditions each Wednesday morning.

Seated in the cascades room atop the Hotel Biltmore, the director will hear ambitious singers between 10 o'clock and noon, and in case he comes upon a voice which he believes has unusual radio possibilities, he will present the singer over NBC networks. In divulging his plans, Whiteman said he expected to resume his "Youth of America" auditions in the autumn and thus continue his wide search for new radio talent.

Whiteman's activities include his Sunday evening rhythmic concerts, his Friday evening nation wide broadcast, his nightly appearances at the Biltmore and theatrical engagements.

Harry Kogen, director of the Homesteaders orchestra, has the distinction of being the first staff orchestra leader in the Chicago NBC studios.

The Mills Brothers find radio speaking more difficult than their imitation of musical instruments. The recent "Meet the Artists" program in which they were interviewed by Steve Trumbull found them victims of mike fright. Brother Harry (he of the trumpet effects) recovered from the malady in time to work off a quip concerning Brother Don. "Don," he said, "went out to look for a job. He was pretty lucky—he didn't find one."

OVERTURES

LOU FORBES (Detroit Michigan) brings his colorful directorial style from New Orleans to match the musical reputation of the Michigan Symphonic Orchestra. Forbes offers an overture called "Contrasts," opening with Pagliacci and closing with a whirl of popular hits. While the musical arrangements and execution are excellent, it is Forbes' manner of directing that catches and holds audience attention. He is unique, to say the least. He scowls, cowers, seems momentarily elated, stands for a space with his hands in his pockets, and is alternately active and passive. All of this business, whether it was or was not of any musical worth, was interesting in itself, and at least one member of that audience wants to see more of it.

GABRIEL HINES (Philadelphia Fox) conducted the orchestra in a charming medley, "Tales of the Orient," in connection with which Robert McDougall, baritone, was given a special round of applause for his pleasing vocal interpretations of the wellknown favorites, "Pale Hands" and "Road to Mandalay."

WALT ROESNER (San Francisco Fox) and the Fox Concert Orchestra have a lot of assistance this week and make the most of the opportunities offered. The offering is "A Night in Naples" and is made up of well-known Neopolitan airs. A chorus of 20 voices on the elevated stage rings out songs and a finale is reached when the ensemble is augmented by Caesar Pazzola's accordion troupe of 45 members.

LOU SCHRADER (Baltimore Hippodrome) offered his transcriptive overture, "Among My Souvenirs," played first as written. Then, with signs placed on an easel, he directed the musicians through arrangements "as Richard Strauss would have played it"; then Mozart, Tschaikowsky, Johann Strauss, Richard Wagner, and finally in Black Bottom tempo.

SAMUEL BENAVIE (Detroit Fisher), through a microphone announcer, calls attention to the similarity of Victor Herbert's music to the music of Franz Lehar, in his "Medley of hits by Franz Lehar." The overture is splendidly arranged and played, and further demonstrates Benavie's serious regard for the best of compositions.

GLENN WELTY (Milwaukee Wisconsin) and the Wisconsin theatre orchestra, with Jack Martin at the organ, offer "Popular Contrasts." Featured are Pete, Cy and Joe of the orchestra playing "If You Were Only Mine," in a 'cello, guitar and cornet combination.

HERSCHEL LEIB (Detroit Fox) makes "Victor Herbert Impressions" very well serve the semi-classical inclinations of his Jazzmonic Rhythm Kings. He opens with the introduction to "Naughty Marietta." Blended with smooth transitions, the numbers that follow include "Falling in Love With Someone," an excerpt from "Ilene"; "Habenara," "Italian Street Song" and the czardas from the spirited "Fortune Teller." Ralph (Mex) Mendez, who seems to be a favorite solo artist, offers a trumpet version of "Ah, Sweet Mystery Of Life." Incidentally, Lieb is no more pleased with the name of his orchestra than are many of his admirers who have expressed their views. It was not Leib's invention; he inherited it. "Jazzmonic Rhythm Kings," besides being somewhat out of date, is hardly descriptive of the orchestra.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1931, unless otherwise specified.

WHEN first announced, Eastman Super-sensitive Panchromatic Negative was used chiefly with incandescent lighting. It was found, however, to be equally valuable under arcs. And now cameramen are finding it ideally suited to daylight shots, particularly when it is provided with the non-halation gray backing. Expert in every branch of cinematography, Eastman Super-sensitive "Pan" is an all-purpose negative, the advantages of which are felt all the way from the lot to the screen. Eastman Kodak Company. (J. ALEXANDER SMITH CARPET

WESTMINSTER is an Alexander Smith Carpet that is becoming increasingly popular with theatre owners because of the way it stands up under heavy traffic. There is no finer heavy-traffic carpet made. Long life, distinctive patterns, brilliant, clean-cut colors, luxurious "feel" and moderate price make WESTMINSTER an excellent value. PATRONS

Pass Judgment on Poorly Seated Theatres

The Great American Family—the patron who sustains the profits of your business—judges your theatre not alone by what appears on the screen, but by the hospitality you are willing to provide. The protest of the patron who must be seated uncomfortably, whether voiced or silent, becomes a box-office handicap that no theatre can afford to disregard. Uncertain business outlooks of the past have created a prevalent neglect of the one important factor of theatre prosperity —Correct Seating. Comfortable seating reflects enormous credit on a theatre and its management. Uncomfortable theatre chairs seriously detract from the prestige of any theatre.

Irwin Seating—outstandingly characterized by highest quality construction and consistently reasonable cost—offers you more than mere eye value in theatre chairs. Irwin chairs are good to look at, but more important by far, they are built to last longer and to sit in more comfortably. . . . There are models in the Irwin line to exactly suit every theatre's requirements, from the most palatial theatre to the modest suburban or small town movie house. Prices also are ranged to meet individual requirements. Write today for our booklet, "Modern Theatre Seating." It's extremely interesting and free for the asking.

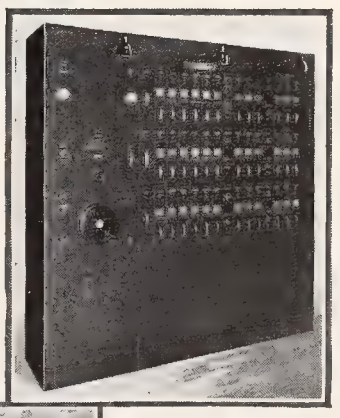
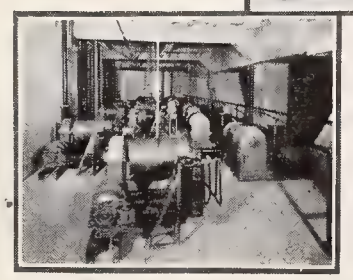
Trouble-free Westinghouse M-G. Sets, in Pantages Theatre, Los Angeles, help the projectionists maintain flawless projection.

If critics reviewed projection room equipment



IF projection-room equipment were subjected to the same scrutiny as the films themselves, Westinghouse M-G. sets would be headlined in glowing praises. Here's how the equipment in a Westinghouse electrified projection room might be reviewed by an electrical "critic":

NO ARC FLICKERS—Control voltmeter during film changeover shows no appreciable drop in arc voltage (arc intensity) due to the doubled load. (Conservative capacity rating and the automatic current-regulating feature of Westinghouse M-G. sets assure a stabilized arc under double or triple-arc conditions.)



QUIET M-G. OPERATION—A coin will stand on edge on the motor generator; that's exceptionally smooth operation! (Vibration is minimized by an exclusive Die-cast Rotor, rigid steel frame and all-welded bedplate).

CLEAN, ORDERLY APPEARANCE—The result of dependable, trouble-free motor generator performance. Installation shows no signs of repairs or alterations . . . no leaky oil spots (bearings are exclusive Sealed Sleeve type) . . . M-G. room comparatively cool (more power to the arcs and less wasted in heat).

The superior performance of Westinghouse projection power equipment will help you turn operating costs into box office receipts.

Westinghouse Thermionic Switchboards permit the most difficult lighting effects to be handled with speed and precision.

These Westinghouse-powered hoists simplify scene shifting in the Chicago Civic Opera.

AND NOW! the Reverse Slope

Thalia Theatre
New York City

Architects
Schlanger & Irrera
New York City, N.Y.

Special H-W seats were designed, built, and installed in the Thalia, (Broadway at 95th) New York City. This house, designed by Ben Schlanger and Raymond Irrera, incorporates the revolutionary seating idea of Mr. Schlanger's . . . namely the reverse slope.

The reverse slope (which gives greater seating capacity in less cubic content) is a new and unusual idea. It requires new ideas in seating, sight lines, and chair construction. Working in close cooperation with the architects and creators of the reverse slope idea, Heywood-Wakefield produced special seating which perfectly and admirably fitted the needs of the Thalia.

No matter how large or how small your seating or reseating problems may be, it will prove well worth your while to consult the nearest Heywood-Wakefield theatre sales office. You'll get all of the benefit of a progressive, experienced organization which built hundreds of thousands of seats for Publix, Roxy, Schine, and a host of other leading showmen.

THE PRICE OF A TICKET— AND THE COST OF GOVERNMENT

an editorial

THE greater the burdens of business, the greater the threat to the average man's income, out of which must come the dimes and quarters that support the motion picture industry. The more money that must be taken from the people for the mere support of their government, the less money remains of that surplus which represents the non-necessity buying power of the nation.

It is pretty clear, then, that the cost of government, and the taxation by which that cost is defrayed, is a matter of as much concern to all the interests of the motion picture industry as it is to business in general, and to economists in particular. Therefore the point of view and the data supplied in a recent communication of a large retail merchandising establishment are not only interesting, but pertinent to the affairs of these specialized pages.

The retailer in question is the huge and distinguished concern, Marshall Field & Company of Chicago. And the communication is not a slight attempt at selfish propaganda. Indeed, it is addressed to the manufacturers of products marketed through Field's, and a peculiarly human earnestness gets in between the lines.

"We are joining," says John McKinlay, president of the company, who signs the communication, "the ranks of those who are placing themselves on record as seriously concerned with the mounting expenditures of Government.

"We are told that last year, Federal, State and local taxation absorbed 22¢ out of every dollar of the country's net income. This year those taxes bid fair to take almost twice as much, because of a greatly reduced income.

"At this time we are most concerned with Federal taxation. The Federal income will be greatly reduced, but the Federal expenditures are showing no such trend."

Mr. McKinlay then sets forth a tabulation declared to be from the U. S. Treasury Department's latest report, showing that the 1932 appropriations are 63% larger than were the expenditures of 1927 (the latter year one of rather general prosperity). Some of the major 1932 increases over 1927 are:

Department of Agriculture, $177,200,000, or 113%.

Post Office deficit, $167,700,000, or 614%.

Treasury Department, $161,000,000, or 106%.

Shipping Board, $41,800,000, or 220%.

Department of Commerce, $23,800,000, or 77%.

Adjusted Service Certificate Fund, $84,800,000, or 74%.

Veterans' Bureau (since 1930), $392,900,000, or 100%.

The total increase from 1927 to the current period is put at $1,231,100,000.

Some of the governmental agencies represented by huge appropriations, of course, are the media through which the several schemes to relieve unemployment and stimulate business are to be placed in operation. Others, however, exhibit no such character, and the additional amounts required would seem to represent nothing more than an extension of the bureaucratic system—extension that is, by the way, all out of proportion to the growth in population. How far can the nation's business go to support the added functions that government has assumed?

"When we who are in business find," says Mr. McKinlay, "our gross income being reduced, we know that we must reduce our expenses. That basic truth has persistently been disregarded by our national law-makers. Instead of reducing expenses, they have increased them."

The mission of this communication from the head of one of the country's leading commercial institutions, to the great firms with which it regularly does business, may as well be appropriated:

"We believe that everyone should impress upon his Senators and Congressmen the vital necessity for a changed attitude on this fundamental question. It is our right to do so, and we believe it is the most important single action which any of us can take at this time."

VISION IN THE MOTION PICTURE THEATRE

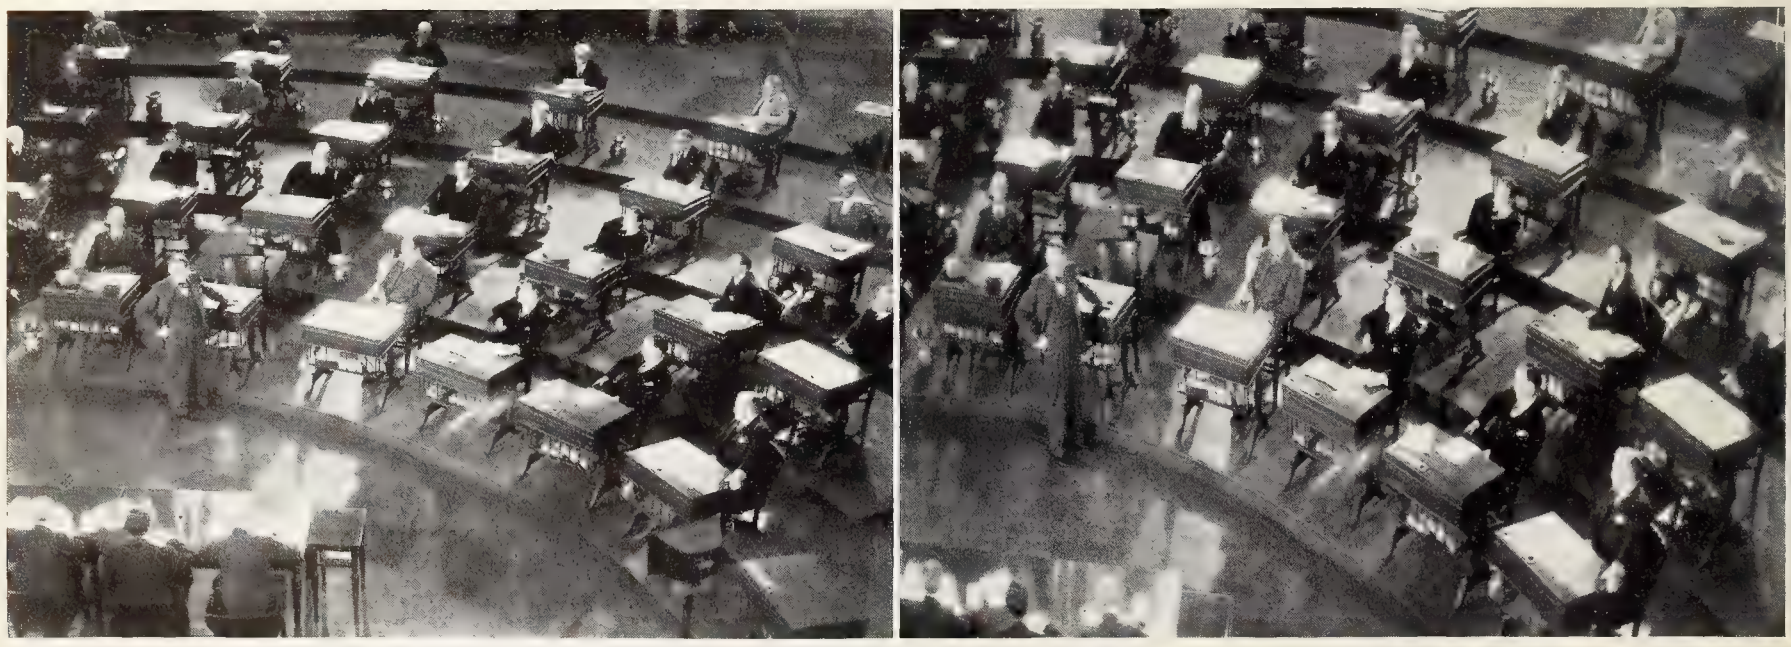
By BEN SCHLANGER

An examination of the problem of distortion, its causes and its relationship to present seating values, as determined by an architect

IT IS OF GREAT importance at the present time to give some special thought to the relative effect that existing theatre buildings have on successful motion picture exhibition. An analysis would necessarily include, firstly, the location and proper seating capacity for the given location, and, secondly, the building itself, which must function satisfactorily.

A great majority of existing theatres were built while the amusement industry still considered the policy of the combined live and screen show very important to the box office, and even if a live talent show never reached a theatre building, as in many cases where the screen alone proved the better source of income, the theatre was built as a stage show theatre anyway. Of course, this was all excusable, since the differences between the requirements of the live talent and of the film theatre were not common knowledge.

As a result there exists the most peculiar circumstances whereby the production end of the motion picture industry has comparatively advanced rapidly, whereas real progress in the exhibition of motion pictures has been thwarted by ineffective means of exhibition in existing theatre structures.



This becomes a serious and difficult problem, because the motion picture exhibitors have on their hands large investments in the land and in theatre structures, the costs of which in many cases have not yet been amortized. But should the mistakes of the past hinder progress? Statistics are supposed to show that there is a surplus of theatre seating. But of what value are most of these seats if improperly placed in structures in no way planned for motion picture entertainment, and in many cases poorly located in relation to the community served.

There should not be any doubt as to what tonic value that properly sized, placed and planned motion picture theatre structures would have on the motion picture industry. This assumption may seem at first to be made of dreams only, because of the new expenditure that would be involved. But the new order of the day commands and proves that theatre structures for the motion picture should and can be built economically, due to the new scientific attack of the problem.

The large deluxe, lavishly treated theatre is no longer a symbol or agent of the motion picture. As a matter of fact, the motion picture was only an accompanying attraction in them at their inception. Today many of them are economic failures, not only because of general business conditions, nor because of any loss in the appeal of the live talent entertainment, but because the public knows that it can enjoy good motion picture entertainment without any superficial trimmings, side shows, etc., and therefore it no longer supports the box office whose prices are still gauged by what is now an unnecessary addition to the motion picture itself.

Now that the motion picture has proved itself a dominant instrument in the amusement world, it will be possible to build theatres intended for the motion picture, created to deliver the performance most effectively, and of course in turn increase the income derived thereby. The chief difference in the planning of the theatre structure for the motion picture from that of the live talent performance, lies in the problem of the patron's vision of the performance. It is this aspect that renders practically all existing theatres unsuitable for the motion picture to a greater or lesser degree.

UNLESS THE proper analysis is given to this aspect, it may seem at first that these statements just made tend to draw too fine a line between the differences in principle upon which vision in the screen and stage theatre may be based. To completely analyze this problem, an exposition of the following considerations is necessary:

1. Third dimension.
2. Two dimensional flat surfaces; i.e., a picture.
3. Foreshortening and convergence of forms in real life (forms, people, etc., as they are seen from different angles on a stage, outdoors, etc., all as recorded by the eye and camera).
4. Foreshortening and convergence of forms in real life, transferred to a two-dimensional surface.
5. The faults of viewing a two-dimensional surface (with forms on it already foreshortened and converged through the medium of the camera), viewed from such angles as add distortion to the factors of foreshortening and convergence in camera recordings.

In the case of observation in the stage theatre, as in all observation in real life, we are constantly seeing forms which are foreshortened and converged, as they are in perspective. One view of a form may be better than another, but each view is an interesting one. A person may be at a high point looking down or at a low point looking up at a form and yet may obtain a natural and interesting view because of his particular position in relation to the form being viewed.

Therefore, the camera eye or the human eye may be in almost any position in relation to forms or background being viewed. The camera eye transports its record on to a two-dimensional surface. In the case of the motion picture, of course, it is a screen surface. Here we come to the important difference between the location of the human eye in viewing a two-dimensional surface, and that of viewing a three-dimensional form in real life.

The human eye can not be placed arbitrarily in any position in order to view a two-dimensional surface of photographic images. In this case, the human eye must be in a position that is not too much above, nor too much below, nor too much to either side of the limits of the area of the screen being viewed.

If the position of the human eye is not favorable, a very undesirable distortion of the forms and backgrounds being viewed takes place. This distortion is especially annoying when the form being observed on the screen is already transformed into a sharp perspective through the medium of the camera eye. A view taken in sharp perspective in motion picture work is one of the most forceful and effective boasts of the art of the motion picture. Now to get the full benefit of a great art like the motion picture, the problem of the position of the patron's eye while he is viewing the screen looms up as of great prominence.

Thus, it can be easily gathered from this analysis that the seating disposition in the motion picture theatre involves special considerations which were not necessarily important in the stage theatre. In the latter, a person can sit perched up high above, or very much to one side of, the performance being observed, and still obtain a perspective view which is of some interest.

Motion pictures are being exhibited under a serious handicap in theatres built for stage entertainment. When will the motion picture industry as a whole respect its own product sufficiently to insure effective delivery of their efforts to the patron?

THEATRE ENGINEERING IN RADIO CITY

By EUGENE CLUTE

A study of the technical provisions in the motion picture theatre in Rockefeller Center. The article, begun in the July 2nd issue, is concluded with this installment

THE CHAIRS throughout the motion picture theatre will be of the deluxe type. In the orchestra they will have backs 20½ inches high in vertical measurement, with a pitch of 7½ inches. The average spacing of chairs in the orchestra will be 2 feet 9 9/16 inches, from back to back. The distance between the backs of the seats in the last row, and those in the row in front, will be 3 feet, 6 inches. The backs of the seats in the first row of the orchestra will be 3 feet, 4 inches from the musicians' pit rail.

In the first mezzanine the seats will have backs 22½ inches high in vertical measurement, with a pitch of 8¼ inches. The average spacing between seats in the first mezzanine will be 3 feet, 4 inches from back to back, and the front row will be 3 feet, 6 inches from the balcony parapet, while the back row will be 3 feet, 8 inches from the row in front of it.

The average spacing of seats in the second mezzanine will be 3 feet, 4 inches, with 3 feet, 6 inches for the front row, and 3 feet, 8 inches for the back row. The seat backs will be 21½ inches high, with a 7 7/8-inch pitch. In the third mezzanine the chairs will have the same height and inclination of back as those on the orchestra floor, namely 20½ inches, with a 7½-inch pitch, but will have a somewhat greater inclination downward toward the back of the seat for the greater comfort of the occupants.

The cinema will be fully air conditioned by an installation divided into three units, one to control the air in the auditorium, and the other two to control that in the balconies, foyers and in the basement lounge. The air will be drawn into the conditioning apparatus from outdoors, filtered and passed through sheet metal ducts where refrigerated water will play on baffles dehumidifying and reducing the temperature of the air in summer. In winter the air will be warmed by passing over steam coils adjacent to the dehumidifiers, and the air-filtering, dehumidifying apparatus will be located at the sixth and seventh tier level adjacent to the auditorium along its sides toward the rear. The centrifugal compressors of the refrigeration system will be in the basement, and the cooling towers will be on one of the lower roofs of the building and will be concealed by architectural treatment. In summer the air may be conditioned to 77° dry bulb, and to 55% relative humidity, and may be conditioned in proper relation to the varying outdoor temperature. The air from this apparatus will be mixed with return air from the interior and delivered by means of fans and a system of ducts. The air will be introduced into the auditorium mainly through circular openings in the ceiling. There will be a large number of these duct openings throughout the ceiling to effect equal distribution, and these openings will be covered by circular baffle plates suspended a few inches below the surface of the ceiling to diffuse the air and cause it to settle gently down to the audience.

The removal of air from the auditorium will be effected by means of grilles in the risers of the steppings back of the seats in the mezzanine and by mushrooms or hooded outlets along the legs of certain of the seats.

In the Cinema there will be an air conditioning installation for the projection room that will be entirely separate from the other installations in order to avoid fire hazards. The air will be drawn from outdoors through grilled openings in the wall filtered, dehumidified and cooled in summer, and the exhaust will take place through the ventilating system attached to the projection machines.

The lighting of the auditorium will be from a crystal chandelier 20 feet in diameter, of drum shape, placed against the center of the ceiling, and from close-up fixtures on the balcony soffits and bracket fixtures located along the walls at the orchestra floor level and at the sides and the rear of the mezzanine. There will also be a system of flood lighting units concealed in the ceiling, projecting their light downward from a large number of circular openings in the ceiling.

CONTROL will be as usual by switchboards, but a thyratron control console will be provided in the International Music Hall. No back stage projection booth or other unusual arrangement for projection has been included in the Cinema design, but some such equipment may be introduced if it is perfected to such a degree as to make it desirable in this theatre. There will be no vacant seat indicators. Program lights, however, will be provided in the back of all of the chairs.

The Cinema will have three passenger elevators for a duty of 5,000 pounds each at 300 feet per minute. Two of these elevators will open upon the grand foyer and will make all stops from the basement where, the lounge is located, to the third mezzanine. One elevator will be back stage and will run to the seventh tier level. All of these elevators will have unit multi-voltage, self-leveling equipment, with car switch control by means of a lever. The elevator machines will be of the overhead traction type isolated for sound by means of concrete masses under the machines and under the motor generators, and by lead plates under the elevator machines and by cork pads under the motor generators, keeping down the sound level in the theatre, and reducing vibration. The machinery will be enclosed in soundproof and fireproof rooms, which will be specially ventilated to prevent the equipment from overheating in summer. The elevator cabs will be of special design in keeping with the architecture of the theatre. The orchestra pit will accommodate forty musicians on a platform elevator.

THE PROCEDURE in the designing of the Cinema was controlled by an effort to satisfy all of the conflicting requirements with little if any sacrifice, and to co-ordinate the functional elements. In a number of instances it has been possible to make a single element serve more than one purpose, and sometimes to combine elements effectively. For example, the flaring shape of the sidewalls of the auditorium, which was determined by the sight lines and the curvature introduced into these walls for the sake of gaining more seating, are favorable to the acoustics. Also, the departure from the accepted type of theatre having a single large, overhanging balcony (which represents an effort to secure satisfactory sightlines from all parts of the theatre to all parts of the large screen filling practically the entire proscenium opening) is favorable to effective distribution of sound in connection with motion pictures. Furthermore, the suggestion that three comparatively shallow balconies or mezzanines be used instead of a large, single balcony, in order to obtain an intimate grouping of seats, tied in well with the plans for sound distribution. The circular openings in the ceiling of the auditorium for the admission of air from the air conditioning installation, and the circular openings for the downward projection of flood lighting, both of which are distributed over the entire surface for functional reasons, have provided a motive

INTIMATE, ECONOMICAL PRESENTATIONS

By JOHN A. MORTON, Jr.

How to use the pit elevator for program novelties—an exposition of its range, its limitations and the technique of production

THROUGHOUT the discussion of the use of the elevator in the orchestra pit as an auxiliary stage, or as an extension of the stage apron for the presentation of talent, we should bear in mind that there are three general types of theatres in which this function of the elevator is practicable. Other houses may find the statements made in this paper useful in one way or another.

First, we may consider the theatre whose house orchestra has been done away with as a resident unit for some reason. Usually such a house couples the dismissal of the orchestral section with the abandonment of the stage presentation. This leaves the deluxe house in the same category as the theatres of less prominence in town. Damage to patronage is the result. Damage to prestige is incalculable. Some substitute must be found for the expensive and elaborate program which has been discontinued.

The second type of house in which the elevator stage, as we shall call the orchestra pit elevator from time to time, has been proved useful, is the theatre in which no house orchestra has been used, but for which provision has been made during or after the construction of the building. This type of house usually maintains a straight sound policy or a policy in which a production organ solo is used in addition to the run of pictures. Such a theatre might find the addition of live talent of great advantage, at least in a number of cases. Like the larger theatre whose orchestra has been done away with, the second type of house might find the small stage formed by the raised elevator an economical means of getting living human beings into the program.

In the great deluxe theatres in large cities the stage presentation is increasing in popularity steadily and surely. In smaller theatres and in smaller communities there is a demand for living human or animal entertainers during the program. Small theatres cannot afford to use the stage, with which many of them are equipped, because of the expense entailed. Certain large theatres have been forced to deprive their programs of the orchestral and stage units for the same reason. The greatly lessened expense of production made possible by the use of the elevator stage affords an economical substitute.

In both the first and second types of theatres, provision has been made for the entrance and exit of the members of the orchestra. The same means are most satisfactory for the use of performers appearing on the pit elevator during its use as an auxiliary stage. Assembly of the various acts is simple and can be done while the preceding film novelties are being shown. As part of the elevator stage is visible to the back rows of the balcony care should be taken that no light be allowed to show during the moments before the stage rises in sight of the audience.

Entrances made following the proper prologue of music and lighting are dramatic and pleasing in the extreme and in addition are most graceful—the rising and descending elevator makes a totally new and unusual way of presentation possible.

IT WOULD seem that abandonment of the stage orchestra and the stage presentation would call very definitely for some scheme to offset the disadvantageous publicity that such action inevitably calls forth. Such unusual presentations of instrumental, dance and novelty acts as can be made by the use of the elevator already at hand would more than take care of the "whisper campaign" that usually results from any abandonment of the musical section of the deluxe performance. As a method of theatrical "face saving" the elevator stage is invaluable.

The second type of theatre, in adding a unit to a show of concert entertainment, or of what is known as "unit show presentation," has opened for itself a field of virgin and unspoiled territory. The latitude allowed such a theatre in the selection of routines for presentation is controlled only by the suitability of the acts selected to the picture being shown, and by the innate good taste and fitness of the act itself. The enforced intimacy between the audience and the performers upon the elevator stage makes certain acts highly undesirable. Certain others, however, are greatly enhanced by the closeness of their audience. These intimate renditions, and by intimate is meant the sort of material that is susceptible to close exhibition without loss of theatrical effect, are best suited to the elevator stage. Instrumental, vocal, or slightly dramatic presentations will be found valuable. Animal acts are very materially helped, in many cases, by close contact with those viewing the performance.

It would be well, unless the pit is very large, to stay away from dance acts for the elevator stage. The violent movement necessary in a dancing routine loses some thing of the ethereal grace which is an important part of the charm of its performance when it is in such close view of the beholders. There is also the limited amount of space usually available on the orchestra elevator to be taken into consideration when arranging for the exhibition of such an act.

In both types of houses mentioned we may safely assume that there is adequate provision for the lighting and setting of the elevator stage. All theatres that have had a policy including stage shows will have the requisite spotlight equipment and have more or less easy access to a competent art shop for settings. As the orchestra pit does not usually come in the jurisdiction of the stagehands' union it will be found simple to adjust the problems of labor for the changes of scenery and the use of lighting equipment. It should not be supposed, however, that using the elevator stage does away with the problem of labor and its attendant difficulties. These matters should be gone into carefully with accredited representatives of the various unions involved before any policy as to the use of the elevator stage is definitely decided upon.

In the second type of house we have already seen that the field for vaudeville or concert act presentation is undeveloped territory. Proof of this may be left to the only standard of measurement we can safely rely on—the box office—after the addition of one or more acts of appropriate entertainment to the program of film and organ. Effective and novel entertainment has its direct reflection in the increase of business at the box office. Especially do innovations react quickly in the neighborhood houses. For this reason alone it would seem that a theatre whose reputation for good showmanship is secure would be safe in trying the addition to its policy of a small stage show of good quality.

In addition to the usefulness of the elevator stage as a regular feature of the program of the theatre there is the added function of its possibilities for the exhibition of talent recruited locally. A simple and amusing means of showing off the capabilities of the neighborhood actors and actresses, singers, etc., in a somewhat less crude manner than is usually the case with amateur performances, is available through the medium of the rising stage. This angle of the usefulness of the elevator stage should not be overlooked, especially in the neighborhood houses.

Nothing could be more simple and novel than the rising of an elevator out of a pit in front of the audience, carrying upon its broad top surface an entire unit of a show. Few methods of presentation could rival that means of bringing talent before a gathering of people.

CERTAIN difficulties, however, are attendant upon proper light timing at the entrance and exit points in the routine of the show. There is the danger of bad timing of the rise and descent of the elevator itself while the act is in progress, and there is the ever present difficulty of proper lighting of the performers themselves. But all of these are minor troubles, and with attention to detail and persistence, they can be ironed out.

There is the argument that the cost of the necessary talent is out of reason, and that the cost of staging the unit is another unwarranted burden upon the theatre. The cost of talent is, of course, a matter of the excellence or desirability of the act itself and is a matter for consideration before the policy of inclusion of such units is decided upon. The cost of scenery and staging is more easily disposed of. Scenery need not be an item of great expense—in fact, the more simple and more appropriately inconspicuous the setting, the less the cost.

Production organ solos, which properly belong within the confines of this paper, are an important adjunct to a program which includes use of the elevator stage. There is a rounding off and a completeness distinctly noticeable in programs in which both of these units are included. The organ is in contrast directly with whatever talent is used on the small stage. Both should be regarded as incidental to the film presentation, with the stage somewhat less important than the organ solo, and for the best contrast both should be subordinated to the film features in most cases. Of course where the resident organist is a distinct feature and attraction of the house policy, the presentation upon the stage is made subordinate to him. All of the foregoing will serve to impress the necessity for simplicity and excellence of presentation of acts used on the elevator stage upon those responsible for such presentation. The fact that the elevator stage is in the main body of the auditorium and not behind or inside the proscenium arch, makes the need for simplicity doubly important. Detail and mass that would be appropriate upon the expanse of the large stage become out of place and inappropriate upon the small auxiliary stage. It should be borne in mind that the use of the orchestra pit elevator as a stage is at best a makeshift or substitute for the grand stage, and in consequence it cannot be as universally satisfactory as the thing it replaces. Nevertheless, good use can be made of the space afforded by its conversion from a disused and consequently unproductive machine to a useful and revenue producing unit.

TO CONSIDER the third type of house we must remember that it must be confined to purely theoretical discussion. It cannot be considered as an authoritative statement that the use of the orchestra pit in a house already employing both the grand orchestra and the large stage would be appropriate or practicable. However, the fact that such use has not been made of the pit elevator would not necessarily mean that there is any insurmountable barrier to so doing. There is no doubt that an entrance of the ballet corps or presentation of talent of startling novelty by such means would be striking. Of course the house orchestra would be displaced from the pit or regrouped, and a means of providing music from some other source might be devised. Use of the pit in such a manner would give the effect of a gigantic stage in two levels where the floor of the main stage is fixed and rigid. The stage of the Casino (formerly Earl Carroll theatre) in New York is arranged so that chorus and principals in a scene can be elevated to the view of the audience from the front of the stage. The elevator used for the orchestra in a motion picture house can be used to gain practically a duplication of this effect. The possibilities are theoretical but interesting. In several Publix unit shows at the New

DETERMINING LIABILITY IN INJURY

By LEO T. PARKER

Suit for damages for injuries is always threatening the theatre operator. Here a number of pertinent cases are analyzed specifically for him

ANY PERSON whose negligence results in an injury to another is liable in damages. This rule of the law is applicable in all cases. When it is difficult to determine whether or not the injured person is injured as a result of his own negligence, the jury considers all testimony. Obviously, if the jury decides that the injured person was not negligent, then the person being sued is liable.

For illustration, in MacMillan v. Christensen (9 P. [2d] 1034), it was shown that a man named MacMillan applied to a rental agency to rent a theatre building. The rental agency's agent agreed to conduct him through a vacant theatre building. While MacMillan was inside the premises for the purpose of determining whether he should rent the same he fell into a hole and was seriously injured. He sued the owner of the theatre building to recover damages. The counsel for the theatre building owner contended that MacMillan should not be entitled to recover damages because the injury resulted from his own negligence.

However, MacMillan proved that while making the inspection of the theatre building he had exercised care to provide himself with a flashlight for the purpose of avoiding injury. Under these circumstances the lower court held the theatre building owner liable, and the higher court sustained the verdict, saying:

"In the case at bar, plaintiff had seen the posted notice on the building that it was for rent. He had applied to the real estate agent named in this notice. He was accompanied by a representative of such agent. He was engaged in an attempt to make a general inspection of the building. He carried a flashlight and made use of it; he looked at the floor and the walls. Whether he was negligent or not, that is, whether he acted as an ordinarily careful man in using his flashlight, in making use of his vision, in otherwise attempting to avoid injury and in relying upon the presumption that the owners had used reasonable care to render the premises safe for inspection, at most, is a matter upon which reasonable minds differ. The members of the jury . . . must have been of the opinion that plaintiff exercised at least ordinary care in the premises."

Failure to Prove Negligence

IN ALL CASES involving injury to theatre patrons, the law requires that the patron prove that the injury resulted from negligence of the theatre owner, or his authorized employes, otherwise the theatre owner is not liable in damages. This point of the law was discussed in the recent case of Kerns v. Dykes (48 S. W. [2d] 183).

The facts of this case are that a patron was seriously injured when a seat in a theatre collapsed. He filed suit against the theatre owner to recover damages. During the trial the theatre owner introduced evidence tending to show that the seat was weakened as a result of pranks of certain boys who were in the theatre. In view of this testimony, although the lower court held the theatre owner liable, the higher court reversed the verdict, and said:

"The causative force of the injury must be shown to be controlled by the defendant (theatre owner); it must also appear that there was no other equally efficient proximate cause. If from the nature of the event causing the injury an inquiry naturally arises which one of two or more persons, acting independently, is responsible; or, if it appears that the injury was proximately caused by the independent acts of two or more persons, the application of the maxim is excluded by its terms."

Injuries Caused by Poor Illumination

VARIOUS COURTS have held that if a theatre owner assumes the duty of providing and maintaining a light upon a common stairway, it is his duty thereafter to exercise reasonable care to maintain a light there until notice of its discontinuance has been given to persons who knew of its existence. Failure to perform such duty is negligence for which a patron, who is injured because of such negligence, is entitled to recover damages.

For instance, in Stathos v. Bunevich (153 Atl. 572), it was shown that a person was seriously injured when she tripped and fell down an unlighted stairway. She filed suit against the building owner and proved that the stairway was one commonly used and that the landlord had for a long time previously supplied a light for use in the stairway, but that the light was extinguished when the accident occurred.

The landlord attempted to avoid liability on the grounds that although he had customarily supplied a light in the stairway, he was not duty bound to do so. Notwithstanding this argument the higher court held the building owner liable, and stated the following important law:

"If a landlord assumes the duty of providing and maintaining a light upon the common stairway, it continues thereafter to be his duty to exercise reasonable care to maintain a light there until notice of its discontinuance has been given, and failure to perform such duty is negligence."

Injury Caused by Defective Doors

ANY DEFECTIVE door, likely to effect an injury, is a legal nuisance and should be remedied by the owner of a theatre building. So held a higher court in the late case of Higginbotham v. Kearse (161 S. E. 37).

The facts are that one night a person, when emerging from the building, pushed open the door which struck a passing pedestrian causing severe injuries. The injured pedestrian filed suit against the owner of the building to recover damages on the contention that the latter negligently permitted continued use of a door which opened directly upon the sidewalk. Although the lower court held the owner of the building not liable, the higher court reversed this verdict, and stated the following important law:

"We recognize and adhere to the principle already adverted to that the owner of property abutting a highway may make use thereof which is not inconsistent with the unimpeded use of the highway at all times by travelers whether on foot or in vehicle. Such use, however, must be reasonable. . . . An instrumentality which in its normal operation may inflict serious injury on a pedestrian howsoever carefully he may be moving along the street is inherently dangerous and constitutes a menace to all persons using such public way. It is a public nuisance. The employment of such instrumentality is violative of fundamental principles of personal and property rights."

Injuries Caused by Defective Sidewalk

THE COURTS have consistently held that a theatre owner is liable in damages for an injury caused by a defective sidewalk, where it is shown that the defects existed for a period of time sufficient for the theatre owner to have discovered and repaired the same by the application of ordinary care.

Also, it is important to know that the owner of a theatre building may be liable in damages for injuries caused by defective sidewalks, if such defects were in the sidewalk when the theatre operator leased the property. This rule of the law is applicable although the lease contract contains a clause by which the theatre operator agrees to maintain the sidewalk in good condition.

For example, in Clifford v. City of Philadelphia (159 Atl. 232), it was disclosed that a pedestrian stepped in a hole in the sidewalk and was seriously injured. He filed suit against the property owner to recover damages. During the trial it was shown that the hole was in the sidewalk when the lease contract was made. Therefore, the court held the property owner liable, and said:

"The plaintiff's witnesses testified that the hole had existed in the pavement for a year or more before the accident. . . . If the property was leased to the tenant with this defect in the pavement, the owner would be liable for any injury that might occur to a third party. . . . The landlord will be held liable where he leases the premises in a defective condition knowing that the premises will be used for public purposes. He is responsible notwithstanding the fact that the lease contains a covenant by the lessee (tenant) that he will repair."

Violation of Building Statute Results in Liability

IT IS WELL established law that all theatre owners guilty of violating a state law or city ordinance, and those who negligently effect an injury, may be jointly liable to the injured person. So held a higher court in the late case of Holahan v. McGrew (295 Pac. 1059).

In this case it was shown that a contractor in repairing a building erected a canopy for the protection of pedestrians over the sidewalk in front of the building. The canopy did not conform to the specifications required by a city ordinance and, therefore, violated the law. The driver of a motor vehicle collided with extending cross timbers of the canopy and knocked it down upon a pedestrian who was walking on the sidewalk. The pedestrian was seriously injured and filed suit jointly against the owner of the building, the contractor, and the motor-truck owner.

The jury promptly rendered a verdict against the owner of the building and the contractor because of law violation, and against the owner of the truck because the driver was negligent in colliding with the canopy. The higher court sustained this verdict, and said:

"The rule of law is well established that, even though different parties may not act together with a common purpose which results in injury to another, if their concurring negligence produces the injuries complained of, both may be liable for damages as joint tortfeasors. . . . The fact that one of the tortfeasors may be guilty of negligence per se, for violation of a statute or ordinance, does not relieve the other, provided his acts or omissions, concurring with those of the first wrongdoer, proximately cause the injuries complained of."

When Ordinance Is Ambiguous

WHILE IT IS true that a theatre owner may be held liable in damages for an injury sustained as a result of its failure to comply with a city ordinance, yet he will not be liable for an injury sustained unless it is clearly shown that the proximate cause of the injury was failure of the theatre owner to abide by the ordinance.

For illustration, in Sine v. City of La Grande (300 Pac. 348), it was shown that a city ordinance provides as follows:

"Any and all private driveways for motor and other vehicles shall be as follows: The concrete curb is to be broken out to the bottom of the gutter and a concrete incline constructed and brought to a grade not to exceed 2½ feet back of the curb line, unless otherwise approved by the city engineer."

A driveway was constructed with a gradual slope from the gutter to the upper edge of the sidewalk. The difference between the elevation of the inner and outer edges of the sidwalk was six inches. One day a pedestrian slipped and fell on a sheet of ice and was seriously injured. He sued to recover damages and contended that the injury was sustained because the driveway was not constructed in accordance with the above mentioned ordinance. However, the court held the pedestrian not entitled to a recovery because the ordinance was deemed to be ambiguous. This court said:

"The ordinance refers to a grade. It does not specify whether it has reference to the grade of the sidewalk or to the grade of the gutter at the side of the curb. The evidence referred to shows that the city officials placed such a construction upon the ordinance that the construction of the driveway in either of said manners was a compliance with the requirements of the ordinance, unless the manner of such construction should fail to meet the approval of the city engineer. . . . We must presume that this driveway was constructed with the approval of the city engineer, and in the manner provided by the ordinance. There was no pretense in the case that there was any defect in the sidewalk itself or in the driveway, except the contention that the driveway had not been constructed as provided in the ordinance. . . . The fact that a film of ice had collected at the place by reason of the natural conditions existing at the time, which the city could not possibly have prevented, would not render the city negligent because of the fact that ice had formed along the course which the pedestrian was following at the time the accident occurred."

Theatre Held Public Nuisance

VARIOUS COURTS have held that any business which is operated illegally, and in violation to either state or city laws, is a public nuisance. For this reason a court will not grant an injunction to prevent enforcement of valid laws relating to conduction of theatres. This point of the law was discussed in the recent case of Publix New Jersey Theatres v. Flynn (159 Atl. 408). The facts of this case are that a state law provides:

"Any place of public resort, whether an inn, a dwelling place, a storehouse, or any other building, or garden, is a public nuisance, in which illegal practices are habitually carried on."

The operator of a motion picture theatre filed suit and asked the court to grant an injunction against city officials enforcing the law against operation of the theatre on Sunday. However, under the circumstances, the court held the theatre owner

THEIR METHOD OF AIR COOLING

[It will be recalled that in the June 4th issue of Better Theatres, D. R. Goldie of the American theatre in Cherokee, Ia., told in a letter of the equipment he had installed to cool his house. Another exhibitor, in a letter addressed to Mr. Goldie, a copy of which has been sent to Better Theatres, tells us about his method of cooling a small town theatre.]

WE READ with much interest the information contained in the June 4th issue of Better Theatres, relative to the cooling plant which you are installing.

We installed a refrigeration and air conditioning plant in December, 1930. We are in a town of 2,200 population, and the theatre seats 575. We are using a plan which we think is advisable in the refrigeration of small town theatres.

We have a storage tank holding 3,500 gallons of water in which the refrigeration coils are laid. The coils consist in 1¼-inch bent steel pipe, the parallel pipes being from six to seven inches apart, which permits freezing enough ice on the coils to make them five or six inches in diameter. This gives us a means of storage and permits the use of a small compressor, and in turn gives us the advantage of a low demand charge from the electric company.

Our electricity cost for cooling under extremely severe conditions, including all auxiliary motors, fans, etc., does not exceed $1.20 an hour, with electricity at 3c per k.w.h. Under ordinary hot weather conditions, it runs about 75c per hour.

We have the air circulation in the auditorium so well distributed and the controlling thermostat is so sensitive that the temperature in any part of the balcony or main floor never varies as much as ½° from any set point. The humidity is also very accurately controlled.—E. B. Danielson, manager, Mainstreet theatre, Russell, Kan.

The relationship of the screen to effective projection, and the factors that enter into this basic relationship

[The following is a paper read before the Society of Motion Picture Engineers at Swampscott, Mass., and published in the July issue of the S.M.P.E. Journal. At the time of reading the author was associated with the Beaded Screen Corporation, New York.]

UNLIMITED TIME and money are spent in improving, usually to a small extent, the many aspects of projection until, at length, the screen is taken into consideration. Here we stop; and yet, it is a fact that an improvement in projection of 100 per cent could be realized by making the appropriate corrections of the screen conditions. Not only would a large saving in electric current be achieved, but an improvement in box-office receipts would also be realized because of the better appearance of the picture, and the improvement as regards visibility of the picture and the attendant strain on the eyes.

In the average American theater, the manager, whether employee or owner, assumes full responsibility for all details of operation of the theatre. Various departmental subdivisions are made, one of the most important, if not the most important, being the department of projection to coördinate all details in such a manner as to assure the best picture.

The projectionist, then, is answerable to the manager for problems connected with the picture. But how far does this go; where does his authority cease? An analysis of the facts shows that the projectionist is trained and equipped to assume direct responsibility for all problems pertaining to the picture, whether inside or outside the booth. His familiarity with the principles of light control and of the mechanical details of operation is needed to decide what carbons should be used or what screen should be installed.

The proper presentation of pictures, however, does not end with the placing of the responsibility on the projectionist. He must be provided with technically good film, of the proper density, and in the proper condition. Furthermore, his equipment must be in a satisfactory condition, and especially his screen must efficiently reflect the picture to the eyes of the patrons. Properly backed up by the manager, there should be no reason why a projectionist, with full responsibility for projection, should not have a picture at all times that is a real box-office asset.

It is a rule, rather than an exception, that the theatre or maintenance manager of one or more theatres has, in discussing screens, said that he knew they were in a very bad condition, but that the condition of the business would not permit him to spend money now. Therein lies a fallacy, and a good reason why business is not so good. Furthermore, profits are lowered because a dirty or improper screen actually causes a waste of money.

A careful study of this situation has shown that the only method of correcting this unfortunate state of affairs is to face the issue squarely, and to place the responsibility on the proper person, the projectionist. This would result in bettering projection as a whole, and in simplifying the problems of the management.

Some of the facts with which the projectionist should be familiar are as follows:

(1) The selection of the correct type of screen is dependent upon individual theatre conditions, and especially upon the type of lamp, the angle of projection, and the width of the house.

(A) White diffusing screens reflect light about equally in all directions. They are best for wide houses; houses having large projection angles, and using high intensity lamps.

(B) Beaded directive screens redirect light into a beam so that the light reaches a majority of seats in a house suited to this screen. A smaller percentage of light passes in all directions, so that a satisfactory picture can be seen from any seat not directly in the beam. These screens are best for medium width or narrow houses having projection angles under twenty degrees.

(C) Metallic reflective screens concentrate light into a narrow beam, with no diffusing element, and are suitable only for very narrow houses.

(2) When the type has been chosen, the most efficient of that type should be purchased, and it should be the one that will provide the best results throughout its useful life. The reputation of the manufacturer should be considered, and unusual claims should be carefully investigated.

(3) The proper size should be chosen:

(4) The screen should be properly installed by following carefully the directions of the manufacturer. It should be masked in dead black. Screens should be placed not less than 18 inches from the stage floor, and as far from the front seats as possible.

(5) The projectionist should take note of the house lighting, and should suggest the elimination of glaring lights near the line of vision, and spilled light on screen.

(6) Great care should be taken to keep dust from settling on the screen.

(A) All overheads and maskings should be kept clean.

(B) Doors and other openings that cause drafts through the screen should be kept closed.

(C) A front curtain should close in the screen whenever it is not actually being used.

(D) In many cases, it is essential that the screen be backed up to the horns with a non-porous material.

(7) Screens should be cleaned regularly once a week by brushing, by using a vacuum cleaner on the back surface, or by blowing.

(8) If recommended by the manufacturer, screens should be cleaned according to instructions every three to six months, depending upon the local conditions.

(9) For diffusing screens, it has been shown that resurfacing by spraying is possible, though the process is still in the experimental stage.

(10) Screens should be replaced in nine to eighteen months, depending upon the local atmospheric conditions and the care given the screen. Screens constantly diminish in efficiency, and, as a result, the picture constantly grows dimmer. When the efficiency of a screen has decreased about 30 per cent, the cost of the additional electric current is usually greater than the cost of a screen.

TO ASSURE that a satisfactory and efficient projection surface is present at all times, it is not only necessary to observe the above recommendations, but to provide for proper inspection of the surface. This should be the duty of the projectionist. At weekly intervals, a white booth light should be projected on the screen and the surface inspected for streaks, clouds and discoloration. Then a small sample of a fresh piece of material should be placed against the screen and the loss of light estimated. A decided difference should be in a warning that the screen either needs brushing, or that, due to age, it has deteriorated beyond the useful economical limit.

Recent tests made by the Projection Screens Committee of the Society show a loss of about 50 per cent in reflectivity of screens after a year's use. This means that with a low intensity arc, 30 amperes produce the results of 15; with a hi-lo, 75 amperes produce the results of 37, and with high intensity arcs of 120 amperes, only 60 amperes are really being used effectively.

Sound screens are porous and act as filters. The air passes through the screen, and the dust and dirt stay on the surface. Moisture and temperature conditions cause the dust to adhere to the surface in varying degrees causing streaks, cloudiness and discoloration.

Taking a conservative 10 per cent loss of reflectivity for each three months' period, we find that at the end of the year, screens used ten hours a day, with electric power costing five cents per kwh., are causing a loss of light and money as follows:

Lamp Intensity	Loss Amperes	Effective Amperes	Daily Loss	Minimum 2nd Year's Loss
Low
25 Amps.	7	18	$0.37	$135.05
Hi-Lo
75 Amps	20	55	1.10	401.50
High
120 Amps	33	87	1.82	664.30

The second year's loss will be greater because of the cumulative effect on the loss of light.

Good business based on true economy will dictate that a screen that loses more than the cost of a new one should be replaced. The probable loss due to the patron's dissatisfaction with the dim, lifeless picture and its harmful effect on his eyes is even more serious, though less easily evaluated.

The steady progressive decrease in light is constantly compelling the projectionist to devise ways of increasing the brightness of the picture. This is especially true when a dense print is used. Constant forcing of the equipment causes inefficient burning of carbons as well as troubles with the light source; an increase in the cost of carbons; trouble with the automatic feed; trouble due to the increase of heat in the lamp house, especially in the reflectors, condensers and meters. Furthermore, the feed lines may not be capable of carrying the larger load, and trouble and loss may result from this cause. All this can be eliminated by keeping the screen surface in good condition.

PORTABLE PROJECTOR

● A portable projector including a sound unit has been brought out in this country by the well known French firm, Andre Debrie, Inc. The company has established offices in New York City at 115 W. 45th Street.

The entire equipment, which comes in two sections, weighs 120 pounds. One section consists in the projector mechanisms, the other in the sound apparatus. All is compact in design and is portable in small trunks.

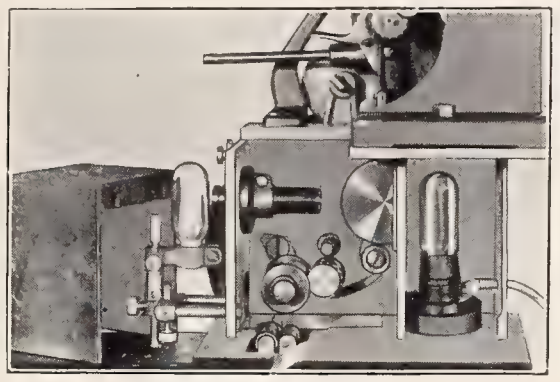
The sound apparatus consists in a sound head, an amplifier and a speaker, all packed, with a screen, in one of the two trunks. The trunk itself acts as a baffle for the speaker. Amplification is of 4-tube type, operated at from 65 to 250 volts, a. c. Disc equipment is procurable if desired.

The sound apparatus is placed on a pedestal, and the projector mechanism on top of it. The projection light source has a capacity of 500 watts.

In addition, the Debrie company has developed a sound and picture machine operating in independent units.

SOUND EQUIPMENT

● Further development work in the product of the Platter Sound Products Company of North Vernon, Ind., have been announced. The Platter sound reproduction equipment, marketed under the trade name of Phototone Talkafilm, presents among its characteristics the following:



Three-belt drive from motor to sound sprocket drive shaft, designed to eliminate fluctuations. Silent chain drive to projectors. Sound sprocket drive mounted on full-floating ball bearings. Light-gate machined to one-thousandth of an inch. Highly polished aperture plate with a hard chromium plating. Hardened polished steel tension shoe.

The optical system and its beam of light from the objective lens to the photocell is enclosed in the light-gate. Photocell is enclosed in a cast aluminum box. Adjustable film guide rollers. Photocell socket with spring cushion. Adjustment cam for pad roller arm.

REWIND PATENTS

● The acquisition of patents covering rewinding of film in an enclosed motor-driven rewind, is made known by the Chicago Cinema Equipment Company. In the announcement citing receipt of the patent, the firm declares that any infringement will bring court action.

THE "GOOD UNION MAN": A DEFINITION

FOR A GREAT many more years than a good many of you have lived, I have listened to various arguments as to what constitutes a good union man. It has always seemed that these arguments were almost invariably one-sided. It appears to me that being a good union man involves two distinct, rather widely varying propositions, only one of which is given consideration by the average union man.

Recently I had a chat with International President William Elliott, in the course of which my intention to write an article defining just what these words, "a good union man," mean, was mentioned. Instantly President Elliott said, "I would like very much to see that article. I am not entirely certain that I would care to undertake the job of formulating such a definition." If this article finally appears in print, my readers may know that it has been read by Mr. Elliott, and that at least he did not seriously disagree with my views. In fact, it is to be hoped that if he does have objections he will offer constructive criticism, since it is hardly to be expected that I could construct a perfect definition of so involved a question.

First of all, I have said that being a good union man involves two widely separate propositions. These may be set forth briefly as loyalty to the union itself, and building up the prestige of the union by delivering the best possible service to the employer.

No man, of course, can be a really good union man unless he be loyal to the organization, seeking to remedy its faults by working constructively from within. The good union man does not broadcast disloyal or near-disloyal thoughts on the outside. The truly loyal union man will confer with his fellow members privately—in an endeavor to find means for bettering the organization, remembering that bettering the organization may mean other things than the mere employment of it as a means for collective bargaining with the employer. If the good union man feels he must utter condemnation against union procedures, he will confine such utterances strictly within the privacy of the organization itself.

A good union man religiously abides by all rules and laws set up by the majority for his guidance, whether he individually regards them as good rules or not. In the event they seem to him to be poor or bad rules, he will use every means at his disposal, working within the organization, to secure their abrogation or improvement at the earliest possible moment. While they remain in force, however, they will be to him the law by which his conduct must be regulated.

The good union man will remember that while he and his fellow members have rights which the employer should respect, and if necessary must be made to respect, still the employer himself also has rights which the employe should, and if necessary must be made to, respect.

Unfortunately (I speak after having had experience in labor unions dating back to 1884), there are many union men who talk long and loudly concerning the "rights of labor," but seldom if ever seem to give the rights of the employer any consideration whatsoever. Such men are one-sided and unfair, and a one-sided, unfair man can hardly be looked upon as a really good union man.

The good union man will not fail to understand that while capital cannot live without labor, it is equally true that labor can only live in a very poor fashion without capital. The best condition for all concerned, therefore, is likely to be that one in which capital, willingly or otherwise, treats labor fairly in the matter of remuneration and working conditions, and labor treats capital fairly by delivering maximum efficiency in service.

That latter is something deserving of very serious thought. The union man who fails to deliver the very best possible results in return for the wages and working conditions secured by the union to which he belongs, is not justly entitled to regard himself as a good union man.

Is the man who fails to return maximum excellence in service in return for the wages and working conditions secured for him by the union, doing credit to the union? Is he not, in fact, directly discrediting the union which has in effect sold his labor to the employer? Is it not an indisputable fact that when the union fixes the price and conditions of labor for its members, the employer has every right to expect its members to give him the very best service that can be obtained from the equipment supplied? Is it not equally a fact that the member who fails to deliver the best possible service with the equipment supplied by the employer is acting dishonestly, both to the employer and to the union? Is he not directly discrediting the union in exact proportion to the amount of his failure to deliver the best results possible, considering the class and condition of the equipment provided?

Summing up, in order that a man be a really good union man, he must not only live up to and abide by the laws and rules of the union, but must also fit himself in full measure of both the practical and theoretical knowledge necessary to deliver to the employer maximum results in his work—also he must apply that working ability and theoretical knowledge so that there will be maximum efficiency in results.

SCRATCHES ON FILM: WHO IS TO BLAME?

IRA HARPER, projectionist of the Firemen's New Theatre in Hurlock, Md., writes: "The Washington, D. C., branch of MGM claims I spoiled one of their short subjects by scratching it. It is a travel talk titled 'Come Back To Erin,' which I ran for two nights without seeing anything wrong on the screen during the course of projection.

"After the return of the film to the exchange, they sent a sample back to my manager asking him to instruct his 'operator' to be more careful with their prints. Using a powerful magnifying glass, I examined the emulsion side of the film without finding anything wrong with the sample. I advised my manager of that fact, whereupon the manager advised them of my statement. They wrote back suggesting I consult an eye specialist—also told me to examine the celluloid side of the film. They said the scratches were on that side. I found scratches on that side all right, but they ran crosswise of the film—part way across. They did not run lengthwise. I then asked them how it could be possible for a Simplex projector to scratch the film crosswise. This question they did not answer. I also told them that scratches on the glossy side would not show on the screen. This they said was not true—that they would show just as plainly as they would on the emulsion side. My projectors and equipment are kept in good condi tion, even though I do say it myself."

The exchange man of MGM is approximately correct when he says the scratches would show just as plainly on the glossy side as the emulsion side. He is not altogether correct, however, for two reasons:

First, scratches on the celluloid side are not likely to be sufficiently deep to hold much dirt, and it is only dirt-filled scratches that show on the screen. On the emulsion side the scratch is often deep enough to collect sufficient dirt to become almost entirely opaque. Another reason why they would not show quite so plainly is that while the emulsion side would be exactly in focus, the other side would be slightly out of focus.

Any scratch produced by the projector, or produced during the course of projection, would be lengthwise of the film. I cannot imagine any possible way in which horizontal scratches (crosswise of the film) could be produced by a motion picture projector as the film passes through it. As a matter of fact, I hardly see how such a scratch would be produced on the celluloid side. However, it's a cinch it was not done in the course of projection.

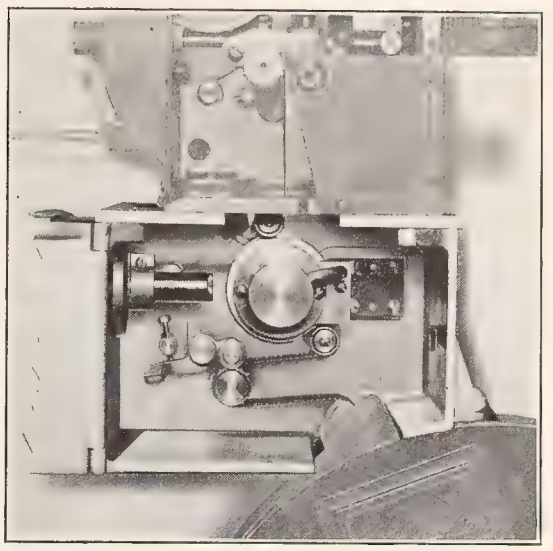
HOW SERIOUS IS OIL ON FILM?

A PROJECTIONIST in a Midwestern city writes: "I am a projectionist in a theatre in a town near Marquette and have had a scrap with the manager. I have been kicking about oily film for a long while, but last week a production came which was so terrible that the manager, who is also the owner, and I went to the mat in a real battle. I think he would have fired me, only he couldn't very well that evening, and by next day he had cooled off.

"I refused to run the production unless permitted to run a typewritten slide first, stating that I was not responsible for its condition. And did we have a hot argument? We certainly did! Finally I went up and cleaned off about fifty feet of the film, stopping right in the middle of an especially bad mess, and projected it. When it jumped from clean to oil and dirt he agreed it was bad, and that if I would run it as usual he would go after the exchange. So I did and he did, and we will see what we will see.

"But, Mr. Richardson, he always reads your stuff very carefully, often bringing some article up to read and discuss with me. I want you to tell us just what harm oil on the film does, if you will. I am sure that what I showed him by cleaning that fifty feet convinced him that oil really does do damage. I am sure such a statement as I ask from you will finish the job. Please don't publish any names, though."

It would seem from what you have said that your manager can be convinced, which is more than can be accomplished with some men. You were entirely right in refusing to run the film, though I can understand that it might have, and with some managers would have, cost you your job. In the old days I lost three fairly good jobs by refusing to do things which would discredit my work as a projectionist. Once I refused to project a production (a 2-reeler) which was in dangerous condition—ripped sprocket holes, loose splices, etc. There happened to be an "operator" living just around the corner. The manager rushed around, got him and fired me. Just one hour later one whole reel of film burned and the show was stopped for the night (theatres had only one projector in those days).



Oil on the film operates to (a) lower the beauty of the screen image (b) to aid in the collection of dust and dirt on the film (hence, to promote scratching and the production of spots and rain on the screen), (c) to give the screen image a constantly changing mottled appearance, (d) more or less to discolor the light, (e) to blur somewhat all photographic lines it falls upon, (f) to produce distortion in the sound, besides lowering the volume. It is bad from any and every viewpoint.

The exchange has no excuse for sending oil-smeared film to a theatre, and no excuse for accepting oil-smeared film from a theatre to which clean film has been sent, without demanding payment in full for the expense of removing the oil and the dead time the film must be held for cleaning, if it must be so held. A few bills such as that would galvanize exhibitors into putting a stop to oil-smearing by their projectionists. Assuming the equipment to be kept in a proper state of repair, the projectionist who says he cannot stop smearing oil should be invited to seek some other field of human endeavor. It can be done, even if the projector is not in proper repair.

ON THE CLEANING OF THE SCREEN

C. G. ADAMS, manager of the Victory theatre in Denver, wants to know the best and cheapest way to clean a certain make of screen, and also how to refinish it. I have dealt with this matter many times during the past quarter century, but new men are always coming into the industry, so that such matters require more or less constant restating.

In the first place, there are certain things I can do, and some that I can not. No living man could possibly give intelligent advice as to the best way to clean any particular make of patent screen surface, except he be either acquainted with all the peculiarities of that surface, or have an actual sample of the screen for examination. Not only that, but as a matter of fact the character of dirt deposited varies in different localities. In a city where there is a lot of manufacturing and a great many streams of smoke going into the air—par-

SYNCROFILM

HAS WHAT IT TAKES TO MAKE YOU MONEY

To make you money, Syncrofilm gives the best sound show in your neighborhood—unless your strongest competitor has Syncrofilm, too! People pay their money to hear clear speech and tuneful music. Syncrofilm gives them what they pay for. No outlaw noises are heard; no mumbling; no squeaking.

When people get that kind of sound show as a regular thing, they come to your theatre as a regular thing. Remember, you are not on Broadway, with the house full of transients each night. You depend on bringing the same folks back time after time. You need Syncrofilm to get and hold repeat business.

Only Syncrofilm provides the quadruple brightness that gives this perfect reproduction. This exclusive Syncrofilm feature has placed Syncrofilm third in the American market and first in many foreign markets in just four years. "It had to be good to get where it is."

Your money will be refunded if you are not satisfied with Syncrofilm. So you take no chances. Here's your opportunity to make money without risking a dime. Try it.

ticularly soft coal smoke—I would expect to find a great deal of carbon in the deposit. In theatres where smoking is permitted, another kind of grime is deposited which is more or less oily, and so on through a rather long list.

You may therefore see that a man who presumed to give advice without complete knowledge, would be acting dishonestly. Remember, there are many makes of screen, and almost every manufacturer produces several varieties of surface. Therefore, I most emphatically decline to offer advice as to the best method of cleaning any patented screen surface.

No screen surface, I repeat, can by any process of cleaning be restored entirely to its original reflective power. This can not be done even with glass bead screens, though the loss there is relatively very small because the glass beads may be perfectly cleaned, though the spaces between can not.

And now I am going to offer exhibitors this suggestion: When your screen surface has seriously deteriorated in reflective power and the process of cleaning is deemed too expensive, so that to all intents and purposes the screen is of no further value, have your local painter coat the surface, preferably with a spraying machine, with a mixture of one-half zinc and one-half white lead. Mix with about three-quarters or four-fifths turpentine, using boiled linseed oil for the rest. Have him bleach (whiten) this paint thoroughly with ultra-marine or prussian blue. Go over the back side of the surface as fast as painted with a vacuum cleaner to pull all the paint out of the perforations. If you can not get behind the screen, you may blow the holes clear with compressed air.

The painting of a surface adds some thickness to the screen, which it has been suggested might affect the sound. I do not believe that there would be any detectable difference set up by painting, unless too many times repeated. If a screen be very thin, a coat or two of paint might affect results, but most, if not all, present-day patent screens have too much thickness to be much affected by an added coat of paint, or even by two of them.

If, however, it is proposed to coat an old screen, and to recoat it when the surface begins to fail in reflective power, as every screen does quite appreciably within ninety days from installation, then it would be better to substitute white calcimine for paint, and to wash off the coat each time before applying a new one. Calcimine is very good, though it has not quite the reflective power of properly prepared and applied white paint.

THE CARE OF BATTERY TERMINALS

JOHN HENDERSON of Kansas City, Mo., asks, "Will you please advise as to just what is the best method of caring for battery terminals. I have been told two different ways by service engineers. They can't both be right. Anyhow, Mr. Richardson, I would rather have your opinion because after following your department and using your books for more than eleven years, I have found your instructions to be just about right all the time. Also I have always been able to understand them, which is more than I can say for most of the high-brows. I have worked in one theatre in a small place near Kansas City for seven years. How is that for a record?"

A good one! Surely you must be giving pretty good satisfaction. As to battery terminals, the chief points are to keep them (a) tight and (b) clean.

In giving a terminal attention, proceed as follows: First, loosen the clamp screw and remove the clamp from the terminal post. Next, scrape the outside of the clamp and everything around the terminal post (except the contact space) thoroughly, removing all incrustation, dirt, etc. Next, brush all dirt away until the surfaces are thoroughly clean. Next, using No. 00 sandpaper cut into strips, clean the surface of the terminal post by pulling the paper back and forth around the post. Next, wrapping a strip of the sandpaper around the finger, sand the inside of the clamp by means of a twisting movement.

When this is done, and the metal is as clean as you can get it, wash the scraped and sanded parts with a cloth wet with a saturated solution of water and soda, drying thoroughly. "Saturated solution" means water in which as much soda has been dissolved as the water will take up. Ordinary baking soda is all right. Washing soda may be used.

Next, using a good grade of vaseline, thoroughly grease all contact surfaces, slip the clamps on the posts and set up the clamp screws or bolts good and tight. Complete the job by daubing a heavy coating of vaseline over the clamps and posts.

Do not scrape either the interior of the clamps or the contact surfaces of the binding posts. I have seen both written and printed instructions to scrape these surfaces, put out by men who should know better. If you scrape these surfaces you may and probably will either scratch them or scrape away some of the metal, either of which will, as you can yourself see, result in injury to the contact.

EXCELLENT CINEMATOGRAPHY

LESTER BORST, projectionist of the Rivoli theatre in Two Rivers, Wisconsin, writes:

"Dear Dad Richardson: Have you viewed the perfect examples of cinematography in two late releases of Warner Brothers, titled "So Big" and "The Crowd Roars"? Both were photographed by Sidney Hickox, a veteran of the camera as far back as I am able to remember.

"Quite possibly you may be a bit irritated at my several letters praising photographic excellence. Somehow I can not refrain from giving praise where praise is due in cinematography. In my opinion, excellence in camera work is the one most important production item, because without it we projectionists are unable to present to our audiences a creditable screen image. There are several men whose work should be appreciated by all projectionists: Sidney Hickox, Oliver Marsh, Barney McGill, James Howe and Harold Westrom, (the latter's latest effort. MGM's 'Huddle,' is a gem), may be named. And there are others.

"Some may say there is not much difference in photography, but there really is. Just watch for those names and see if every one of them don't give us something we can give a good show with, or at least a high grade screen image. I have always admired the work of the really good cameramen, who bring forth marvels by impressing upon a space smaller than a postage stamp pictures of such amazing excellence that we may fill a screen twenty or more feet wide with a sharp, clear-cut picture."

Right you are, Brother Borst. The men you name are all good. Projectionists should, and I believe do, appreciate high-grade camera work, without which it is impossible, as Borst says, to have excellence in projection results. However, it must be remembered that excellence in the camera work itself may be largely nullified by any one of several things, or by a combination of one or more things. No matter how fine the result impressed upon the film by the cinematographer, if the work in the development of the negative, or any one of the many positives taken from it be imperfect, the work of the cinematographer is automatically made to show up poorly. Or if everything from camera work to finished positive print be perfect, but projection is itself imperfect, then the work of the cinematographer is made to suffer.

Poor cinematography makes good projection impossible. Poor projection works havoc to the finest cinematography, insofar as concerns each individual theatre. It then follows that both the cinematographer and projectionist should respect each other and each other's professional efforts.

WHAT'S WRONG WITH THIS EQUIPMENT?

THE MANAGER of a certain playhouse within hailing distance of New York City is in trouble, which he describes as follows:

"Will you be kind enough to advise me concerning the equipment in this theatre? Several of my acquaintances have commented upon you as being an authority on projection, so I take the liberty of addressing you.

"To begin with, we are using standard Simplex projectors and a Western Electric sound system. The generator is a Hertner, Type 30, capable of delivering 28-30 amperes. The lenses are 6-inch matched Kollmorgen. The carbons are 12x8 and 8x8. The lamps are Peerless reflector type. Projection distance is approximately 100 feet. The screen is a Walker, perforated. It is clean and in good condition. It is well masked for extraneous light.

"The picture we get is dark. It lacks in detail. There does not seem to be enough light. At times the arcs sputter and flash similar to the old time street lights. The lenses, reflectors and condensers, are kept clean. They are inspected daily.

"What we want to know is this: Are we using the right combination of carbons? Also, are the lenses correct in size? Several neighboring projectionists from whom I have asked advice, have stated that the carbons are wrong. Others say that a larger lens is needed to admit more light. Still another group seems to think the generator is not providing enough power. We have had a reputable contractor inspect it. He reports it to be in good condition. I might add that the lamps are worked in series. If you can suggest any changes or improvements we would appreciate it. If you will send me a statement for this information I will remit immediately."

First of all, while this manager has given rather unusually complete information, still he has left out a few very important things.

The sputtering of the arc may be due to any one of several things. What kind of carbons are being used? It may be due to a defective carbon core or to a defect in the body of the carbon itself. Second, it may be due to damp carbons. Dry some carbons out thoroughly in an oven (remembering that they will not dry out in one or two hours—leave them in several hours). If that stops the sputter, store your spare carbons where it is perfectly dry. Do that anyhow, by the way.

Third, the sputter may be caused by loose connections or a dirty connection. It might even be due to a ground. Have the projectionist test the circuits thoroughly for grounds. (It is barely possible that a poor generator brush contact may act somewhat as a loose connection, though I do not think that is the seat of your trouble).

If you are by any chance using solid negative carbons, try a cored negative of the same diameter. I do not believe the straight negative would cause the arc to sputter, but if you do not find the trouble anywhere else, at least try a cored negative. The 12-mm. and 8-mm. negative National carbon is listed for from 21 to 25 amperes. For 26 to 30 amperes you should have 13-mm. positive, and 9-mm negative.

Check your equipment condenser voltmeter and ammeter. If the voltage and amperage is normal, that settles the question of power production, assuming the voltmeter and ammeter to be correct. If you suspect anything wrong with them you can easily have them tested.

As to your lens diameters, why don't you ask your projectionist about them? Surely he knows how to check up on his lenses. The process is very simple. It has been set forth in this department many, many times. Measure the distance from the aperture to face of the back combination of the projection lens. Remove the projection lens, raise the fire shutter and project the white light, without the projector in operation. Then measure the diameter of the light beam at the same distance from the aperture that the face of the back lens was. If the horizontal diameter of the light beam is greater than the diameter of the lens, then all the light is not entering the lens, and that means light loss. But only part of your trouble may lie there, I do not believe it all does. It is quite possible the light source is the wrong distance from the mirror, and therefore the lamphouse is the wrong distance from the aperture. The one involves the other.

It is also possible that your projectionist is carrying altogether too large a spot, and that involves very large light loss. I am inclined to believe that the loss of light may lie partly in wrong adjustment, partly in carrying too large a spot, and possibly in too small a lens diameter. You gave me neither the diameter of the lens nor its working distance.

POINTS OF VIEW FROM ENGLAND

H. F. CRIDLAND of Harehills, Leeds, England, writes this department very interestingly. I presume Friend Cridland is a projectionist, although he does not say so. He says, "I trust you will not object to my writing you concerning a matter that is very much to the front just now; namely, doubling up, and the S.M. and C.O. cues. I notice in a recent issue that you ask for suggestions regarding changeover signals. I therefore take the liberty of offering the following:

"Keep the standard release print leaders as at present, but in place of the dots (which have the habit of warning patrons to look out, something is going to happen). I would suggest that after the positive stock is printed and before it is developed and fixed, the edges of the emulsion side be coated with wax for two or three inches. This coating should be from 12 to 14 feet from the C.O., which should in every case be a silent fadeout. I said 12 to 14 feet, because the longer distances will give even the most sluggish projector time to reach full speed. The wax will prevent that strip of film from being affected by the developer, leaving a permanent white or cream colored double edge to the film for S.M. cue, which cannot be seen except by the person looking for it. It is easily visible to that person, however.

"Now with regard to doubling up, I personally hold it to be ridiculous to have projector magazines capable of holding up to 3,000 feet of film and only using about one third of it. It's very similar to filling your petrol tank halfful at the start of a long trip. Although a 2,000-foot reel may be a bit heavy at the start of the run, I can see no reason why producers might not compromise on 1,750 or 1,800 feet. This makes a comfortable size of reel which any modern projector ought to handle without ill effects of any sort. There would then be no need for doubling up, hence the fadeout C.O. would not become mutilated. The mark would eliminate whitewashing.

Better and More Colorful STAGE LIGHTING

KLIEGL Footlights and Borderlights are a long step ahead in the march of progress. They answer the demands for still better and more modern stage lighting equipment.

Each lamp receptacle is fitted with an individual aluminum reflector, permanently fixed in the correct position, and equipped with colored-glass diffusing roundels. A compact, enclosed type of construction is used that is dustproof, damage-proof, and provides the greatest strength with the least weight. The high-reflecting qualities of the reflectors are everlasting. Better light, true non-fading colors—are predominant characteristics. Insist upon the best—Kliegl lighting specialties are always foremost and dependable.

"Before closing I would like to say that an S.M. cue at 14 feet, and the incoming reel set with 8-foot frame in mask, gives as nearly a perfect C.O. as it is possible to get at 90 feet per minute. I would be glad to hear your comments on this matter. In fact I look forward to your comments on all projection matters."

We are creatures of habit in this world. Habit is, in fact, the ruling factor. It is somewhat more difficult to drop a habit formed through the years than it is to negotiate Niagara in a barrel. For some reason, now unknown, 1,000 feet was adopted for the standard length of reels of film early in the history of the industry.

In that early day the selection of 1,000 feet was perhaps wise. Many things that were good in the early days are not worth Adam now. Some while ago we realized that 1,000 foot reels no longer served their purpose in the best way. We started to change, but (habit) were only able to think in 1,000-foot terms, therefore we jumped to 2,000-footers.

It is admitted that a 2,000-foot reel is heavy and that there are other valid objections to its use, though a very large percentage of the men using reels prefer it to the inadequate 1,000-foot reel, to which latter there are still more reasons for objecting than to the former.

Brother Cridland is, so far as I know, the only man who has succeeded in breaking loose from the 2,000-foot habit and offering a suggestion which, to my way of thinking, has real value. A 1,700-foot reel, or even a 1,500-foot reel—anything from 1500 to 1700—would, it seems to me, be the logical thing. I am going to forward Brother Cridland's letter to the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, together with a recommendation that it be given very serious consideration. While it is true that the change would involve some inconvenience, it would not involve any considerable expense. Once a new reel length is adopted and put into operation, all the producers and reel makers could standardize, and all the old 2,000-foot reels could be used until they were worn out, the 1,000-foot reels being discarded as fast as possible. We thank Brother Cridland cordially for having submitted this suggestion.

16-MM. PROJECTION? MACHINE OPERATORS!

A. JOSEPH GROBARICK of Trenton, N. J., asks a peculiar question, as follows: "Just what difference is there between 16-mm. and 35-mm. film and projector in the matter of projection, etc? Please give me your general opinion as to which is better as per above and why. Also please tell me the difference between a 'machine operator' and a 'projectionist.' "

In order to answer the first part of the question I should know just what Friend Grobarick has in mind. However, the principal difference between the 16- and 35-mm. film lies in the matter of magnification. With a 35-mm. film we are magnifying very decidedly less than one square inch of transparent film photograph into a screen image often 22 feet wide, which means roughly speaking, about 375 square feet, or approximately 53,000 square inches of area.

That, it would seem, should be about all that could be reasonably expected, but if we get down to the 16mm. we shall have a film photograph something like one-half the size of the one on the 35-mm. film. The 16-mm. film is all right for a screen image of restricted size. Frankly, I do not know just what its limits are in regard to magnification with good results.

As to the 16-mm. projectors, I have not followed them very closely, but believe I am entirely safe in saying they are not built to withstand the theatre grind. They are too light for long hours of continuous service each day. I do not make that as a statement of fact, but believe it to be correct. My field is the theatre. I do not pay a lot of attention to anything else.

As to the difference between a "machine operator" and a "projectionist," it is a matter that is not so easy to define. When you class a man as a machine operator, you automatically assume that that is just exactly what he is. With the push or pull of a lever he "operates" another man's machinery. The projectionist, however, is not content merely to operate a "machine." He is not satisfied merely to make the wheels go around. He wants to know what makes the wheels go around. In other words, the projectionist understands electricity, the optics of projection, acoustics, the mechanics of projection, and in fact, everything that has to do with projection processes.

Summing up, the "machine operator" confines his studies to the immediate practical items of projection—the operation of a machine. The projectionist on the other hand, if he be a real projectionist, not only does that, but also studies the basic technique of his profession, regarding it as a profession, not merely a job.

(Friend Secretary stops pushing her pencil around to make a rather important remark. She says: "Seems to me the simplest way of stating it is: The projectionist is a man with intellect and ambition, while the operator is a man with no ambition, willing to stay at the foot of the ladder all his life." I accept the amendment. It is a very excellent definition.)

WHO SHOULD REPAIR PROJECTOR MECHANISMS?

EDMUND M. BURKE, projectionist of Fort Plain, N. Y., writes, "It is a fact that something like two thirds of all projectionists in these United States and Canada exert but little influence in determining who shall do the repair work on their projection equipment. Theatre managers as a general rule decide that point, and in many cases decide it wrongly. It seems rather obviously unwise to send modern projector mechanism anywhere except to its manufacturer for repairs which it is deemed inexpedient to make in the projection room. Such mechanisms are complicated, very finely, closely constructed pieces of machinery. Certainly no one except the manufacturer himself is likely to have the facilities for making competent repairs that are possessed by the projector manufacturer himself. That seems to be just a plain, common sense assumption. Another thing, when it comes to purchasing new projection equipment the manager very seldom consults the projectionist, or gives much heed to his recommendations. This seems rather unfair and decidedly unbusinesslike."

Friend Burke is entirely correct, insofar as has to do with repairs. Manufacturers of really high-grade projectors have enormous sums of money invested in equipment, some of which is almost unbelievably accurate in construction and operation. Such equipment is necessary when it comes to working in tolerances of one ten-thousandth of an inch, which is necessary in modern high-grade projector mechanism construction. Few if any of the local repair men who undertake projector mechanism repairs have such tools, and very often not the skill to use them efficiently if they had. I thoroughly agree with Friend Burke that when it is necessary to send projector mechanisms out for repair, it is far the better practice to send them to the projector manufacturer. It may possibly cost more, but it is worth more.

As to the other matter, the reason why the projectionist is usually not consulted, or his recommendation given scant consideration, is an outgrowth of a rather impossible situation built up through those many years when the projectionist who really studied his profession, and by such study fitted himself to give the manager intelligent advice regarding projection equipment, was very, very largely the exception. Until quite recently the average projectionist sneered at any one who advised him to study. Study they pronounced to be "the bunk." They therefore were in no position to offer the manager authoritative information, and the managers were aware of that fact.

Finally the advent of sound showed a considerable percentage of them how entirely foolish they had been, with result that they woke up, studied their business to some purpose and are today competent projectionists whose advice regarding projection equipment has real value. However, there still remains a not small percentage who refuse to advance further in knowledge than they think is absolutely necessary in order to hold their job.

The exhibitor and manager cannot reasonably be expected to call the projectionist into consultation unless the projectionist has given evidence that he can offer advice having value. If consulted, how many of you, my friends and brothers, could make a detailed, intelligent comparison of the various projectors on the market, to say nothing of the sound apparatus? If you cannot, then by what right do you expect to be consulted when the exhibitor proposes installing new projectors. Your individual preferences very naturally do not interest him very much. He wants to know which one of the projectors under consideration is likely to give him the best general results at the lowest first-cost and upkeep expense. That is only natural.

The real motion picture-sound projectionist understands that unless he does his work expertly, the entire industry will suffer. That is true for the simple reason that without expert work in the theatre projection room, the finished product upon which the entire industry depends for its living will not and can not be displayed to its buyers at its maximum excellence, which means that future shows will not have the patronage they should and would have were projection of the present show perfect. It requires hard work and lots of it to become a thoroughly competent projectionist, but remember this: "There is no excellence without great labor" in any walk in life.

THE OLD ARGUMENT

FROM TENNESSEE comes this letter, written by a theatre manager:

"Dear Mr. Richardson: Without using names (a manager must not offend too deeply exchanges whom he must do business with. If he does he may be made the goat in a number of ways), will you be so good as to deal with the condition I shall describe, in your most excellent 'Comments' in BETTER THEATRES?

"I own three theatres in small towns. I circuit the film service in them, starting with one and then sending the productions to the other two in succession. The towns are not large. In each I depend considerably upon surrounding farmers for patronage. I cannot afford to use anything but fairly low-priced service. Many of the films reach me in a literally terrible state of disrepair. There are often loose splices, broken sprocket holes and other things, so that the films are not safe to use until they have been carefully examined and repaired by one of my own projectionists. Also, in many cases, either some or all the films are covered with oil so badly that the picture would be ruined if the films were used without first cleaning them.

"I have had the matter up with the exchange manager several times. He refuses to do anything about it, saying that if I want cheap service I must expect that sort of thing. I do not at all agree with that proposition and ask you to be kind enough to tell us (for I believe other exhibitors and managers have similar troubles) what is right in such matters."

An old argument! This exhibitor is entirely right in his contention, unless it is specifically stated in his contract with the exchange that he must be willing to accept film in imperfect physical condition, and most certainly no exhibitor has the right to make or accept that kind of an agreement, unless he receives the film in ample time for his own man to make careful inspection and repair, and he (the exhibitor) is willing to pay the man (presumably one of the projectionists) a stated sum per hour over and above his regular wages for performing the duties of inspector.

As I have many times said, unless otherwise specifically contracted, when an exchange sells "service" to the theatre, it automatically agrees, regardless of the class or price of the said service, to deliver films which have been properly inspected and from which have been removed all mechanical imperfections, such as loose or imperfectly or improperly made splices, broken or ripped sprocket holes and other mechanical faults which may make the films unsafe to project, or which may cause a show stoppage, removed. When an exchange agrees to deliver a "show" it, in the very nature of things, regardless of class or service, agrees to deliver just that, and a number of reels of film which are unsafe to project certainly do not, under any sane interpretation of the term, constitute a show.

As I have many times said, it is no part of the duty of a theatre projectionist to inspect and repair films received from an exchange. He has every right to expect and assume them to be in fit condition for use when received.

As to oil-smeared film, this exhibitor, through no fault of his own, is committing an outrage upon audiences everytime he permits them to be projected in his theatres. However, I wonder if he is quite certain his own projectionists add no oil to the collection. I suppose he is, but may I suggest that he be present some time when the film shipment is inspected, as he says it must be each time, and try to find a reel of film entirely free from oil. Let him then re-examine that reel just before it is returned to the exchange. If it is still entirely free from oil, good. If not, then let him take steps to locate the offending theatre and proceed to hold a war dance with the guilty projectionist, capped by a lay-off of say five days, to be devoted to a study of how to keep oil off a film.

THE CORRECT SIZE OF PICTURE

THE OWNER of the Galen theatre in Marysville, Pa., writes: "My theatre is 85 feet long by 35 feet in width. The seating capacity is 250. Our present screen is 9 x 12 feet, with a projection distance of 85 feet. We use Mazda light source. Is this screen too large for our theatre? What size should we use?"

A picture 10 feet wide would be plenty large for a theatre of these dimensions, insofar as we are concerned with the ability of persons having normal eyesight to see the picture from the rear seats. However, for some reason not quite understandable to me, some people prefer a large picture.

Briefly stated, there is no serious objection to a 12-foot picture in such a theatre, and your patrons preferences should be your guide. What I would do is this: Secure from your supply dealer, on loan, a large-diameter projection lens of proper focal length to project a 10-foot picture. When the audience is not present, install this lens and make all necessary adjustments to get the best possible results on the screen, marking the apparatus so that you may be able to reset quickly and accurately to these adjustments. Restore the 12-foot picture lens, and next evening before you run the last picture, make either personally, or by slide, an announcement, to the audience to the effect that the question has come up as to whether the present size screen or a smaller picture is best, therefore you are inviting the audience itself to be the judge by remaining to watch and act as judges in an experiment—or something to that effect.

My idea in this is that you should let your own audience be the judge as to which size of picture they prefer. However, in order to make this test fully effective and conclusive, you ought to secure some cheap black cloth and make a mask which can be hung over the screen while the test is being made.

The 10-foot picture, as I have said, will be large enough for the theatre and should be considerably brighter than the present one. However, if your Mazda equipment is properly handled, you should be able to secure at least fairly good illumination on a 12-foot picture, except with dense prints.

Such an experiment as suggested might be worked into very good advertising for the theatre. The test could be advertised in such a way that the box office would gain, and at the same time let your patrons know you are doing everything in your power to please them.

HE OBJECTS TO DOUBLING UP

E. JEFFRESS of Crossett, Ark., writes, "Dear Mr. Richardson: I am one who does not approve of the much discussed practice of doubling up reels. Here are my reasons.

"According to my information, the majority of projection rooms where doubling up is practiced, are equipped with small-hub, 2,000-foot reels. When films are doubled up on these spools, I am of the opinion that the life of the prints are greatly shortened. The tension on the film is greatly increased in the lower magazine when large reels are used, because more tension must be applied to enable the takeup to pull the heavy load. The strain on the film is also increased in the upper magazine, for the simple reason that the large reels are heavier than the small ones, hence it is necessary to apply more tension to the upper magazine friction shoes than would be necessary with the 1,000-foot reel, in order to hold the large reel in retard.

"I believe men running Powers projectors will agree that it is almost impossible to get a small-hub 2,000-foot reel to run steadily in the upper magazine. At least that has been my own experience. The reel will start 'weaving' about 100 feet from the end, with result that very often the film will be snapped in two before the end.

"Another thing: When reels are doubled up, the standard cues are eventually eliminated from every other reel of the print, whereupon it becomes necessary for single-reelers to mark the ends of reels for change-over cues. Almost every man has his own method of marking a reel and won't accept the marks affixed by another.

"My third point is that when reels run doubled up, the leaders on Reels 2, 4, 6, etc., are usually cut, and at each cutting one or more frames are eliminated.

"As we all know, sound recording runs 14½ inches, or 19 frames, ahead of the picture. The majority of exhibitors use the same print for both film and disc equipments. When reel leaders are cut, it becomes necessary for exchanges to replace what is cut out with blank film in order to retain the synchronism. The blank film inserted is usually of the silent print type having frame lines running all the way across. If everyone cues the changeover as closely as I do, they will find that at every other changeover a machine-gun pop will be registered in the horns, caused by a leader passing over the sound aperture. Of course it is possible to run enough leader off to get this blank film past the aperture, but if you do, some of the picture will be lost.

"It should not be hard for anyone to see that the man who doubles up reels puts himself at a disadvantage, and puts the man who does not double up at a still greater disadvantage. I am very much in favor of the exchanges sending out film on 2,000-foot reels, provided the reels are of the large-hub type."

It seems to me that Brother Jeffress' last remark is the answer to all this. There is no question but that doubling up reels does do a world of damage to prints, and sets up a very bad situation for projectionists who do not. From the producers' and exchanges' standpoint, there are, of course, very valid objections insofar as concerns the mounting of film on 2,000-foot reels. However, in my judgment the objections are not by any manner of means sufficient to offset the damage done by failure to adopt that practice.

EXACT TEMPERATURES IN H. I. ILLUMINATION

FROM TIME to time correspondents ask what is the exact temperature of the ordinary arc crater floor, and also what is the temperature of the gas from which high intensity light is obtained. To get the up-to-date figures I wrote the National Carbon Company, which should have up-to-the minute dope on such matters. Through Dr. E. R. Geib of the arc department, the company replies as follows:

"The temperature of the crater floor of the ordinary arc is 3,800° K. The temperature of the high intensity gas is approximately 5,500° K."

And what is "K," do you ask? Well, it represents what is called absolute temperature. Dr. Geib says, "If you prefer to state the temperature as Centigrade, our suggestion would be that you use a figure of 5,300° to 5,500°. Should you want a Faherenheit rating, then state it as 9,500° to 9,800°. One of these last two will probably be somewhat more clear to the average projectionist."

While I was at it I asked for a statement of the latest figures of candlepower per unit area of light source in square millimeters. The reply to this was: "(A) Ordinary projection arc, 160 candle-

UNFAIR QUESTIONS IN EXAMINATION

FROM California comes a letter from a projectionist, who says, "I have had five years of experience as a projectionist. Although I have only projected in small towns, I have always tried to put on, as nearly as possible, a perfect show. Here is a question I would like answered: 'Draw a diagram of two machine motors and two dummy motors, synchronous type, in pairs of two, controlled from six stations. What type and kind of switches would you use. Western Electric diagram?'

"This question, stated exactly as above, was asked as an examination question in a Western city. Would you consider it a fair question? Do you believe it is necessary for the average projectionist to know such a thing? Seems to me it is an installation engineer's question."

You are quite right, my friend. It is an installation engineer's question. I think it undoubtedly refers to a Western Electric diagram for a hookup used exclusively in Hollywood and in a relatively few preview theatres. It is manifestly unfair for examining authorities to permit the asking of questions such as this in a projectionists' examination, upon the results of which men must depend for the right to follow their profession and earn a living for themselves, perhaps also for a family.

This is not a hookup which one projectionist in 500 would ever encounter, and that one would have no earthly reason for installing it. It is surely only right and fair that examiners should confine themselves strictly to questions which the average projectionist should and, may fairly be expected to know the answer to. To ask questions concerning highly specialized little-used things in a general examination, is wrong and unfair from every possible viewpoint.

PROJECTION IN PORTO RICO

MIGUEL COLOM of Lares, Porto Rico, writes, "Dear Mr. Richardson: May I thank you for the information contained in your letter. I note your request for information about projection matters here. I am unable to give you all the information desired because I am working for a corporation which has nothing to do with the picture business. However, I do attend to a small picture house in this town, therefore I can give you at least a little of the desired information on projection conditions.

"This theatre gives four shows a week and they pay me only $2 for each performance. At the present time we have two projectors. One is a Simplex and the other a Powers. Sound equipment is Movietone and Vitaphone combined [sound-on-film and disc?]. Movietone apparatus operates without any battery. The factory claims it to be the latest thing in the market. The apparatus works well, but our line voltage varies, and that, of course, is not so good. This could be remedied by having the main wires taken from some other line not all ready overloaded, but the owner of this little theatre always believes in saving money.

"When I was in New York City I noticed that the film came on reels. Here they come in tin cans, the same as are used in studios. Doubtless this is a better shipping arrangement, but I believe it is bad practice to place the film in the upper magazine without any reel, for the film continually rubs against the magazine. Certainly the exchanges should have an expert visit each house from time to time to inspect projectors, rewinders, etc.

"In all the principal cities I have found that most of the theatres have good projectors, with different makes of sound apparatus, mostly Vitaphone and Movietone. In the smaller towns, however, I have seen equipment which is just about half homemade.

"In this island we have state roads reaching every town. Also, each village has its electric plant, and we find some sort of motion picture theatre in almost every one of them [the towns, presumably].

"Projection rooms are, as a whole, good. They are all fireproof, but I have yet to see one with a toilet room. Possibly, however, this is not so necessary, since our theatres do not operate continuously as they do in the United States.

"At San Juan there is a projectionists' union, but outside of the capital city, very few belong to such an institution. Recently the House of Representatives considered a bill providing that all projectionists must be electricians. It did not pass, however, because most of the projectionists are practical men.

"At this time about 50% of the film supplied here has English sound and Spanish titles. In the cities there is mostly Westinghouse and General Electric, some of them at a cost of $15,000. Will you be good enough to advise me as to what is the best movietone in the market for the money, and what it would cost for a house of 1,000 capacity?"

By that last, I presume Friend Colom means to ask what is the best sound-on-film apparatus, and what it would cost for a 1,000-seat house, which is a question I cannot possibly undertake to answer. The cost would depend upon a great many things.

Just what Colom means by saying that they "have Westinghouse and General Electric" in most of the cities at a cost of $15,000, I do not know.

I might recommend that some of our Broadway projectionists who receive something like $100 a week, take a slant at this man's pay—$8 per week. I also would most respectfully suggest to Friend Colom's manager that fluctuation in current makes it impossible to produce good results in projection, therefore that fault, if it is at all possible to do so, certainly should be corrected. While saving money is a very commendable thing for a theatre manager, still, in matters of this kind, a saving may well react in the form of great loss at the box office—a loss far in excess of the amount saved.

Films reach the theatre in rolls over in Europe, too, but they should be wound on reels before projection. It is very poor practice to place a film roll in the upper magazine for projecting. Many theatres in this country do not use the reels on which the film is received. They have special reels, kept in perfect condition, upon which the film is mounted as soon as the film is received.

I should be glad to hear from the officials of the San Juan projectionists' union with regard to projection conditions in that city.

TESTING PROJECTOR VOLUME OUTPUT

THE PRACTICAL Projection committee of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers has already more than amply proved its value, both to the industry and to the Society. It has not only considered the advisability of enabling the projectionist to test the pickup sound level of the idle projector at any desired time, but also has proposed a method of enabling the projectionist to do so.

This method was reported to the society at the Washington meeting. The equipment will doubtless be made available to projectionists in the near future. It is applicable to two, three or any other number of projectors. It consists of an output indicator mounted in the projection room, attached to which is a cord with a plug which may be inserted in any one of several jacks; also a second cord and plug which may be connected to a 110-volt. a.c. circuit. In connection with this device the committee recommends that several lengths of test film carrying 1,000-cycle, 90% modulated sound track be supplied each projection room, this being maintained in stock for use at all times. These lengths of film may be attached at the beginning or end of the reels. They may be run separately upon the idle projector, thus affording a check-up on the output whenever a test is desired, even when the performance is going on.

This is a somewhat inadequate description, but in general it contains the facts. The thing looks good, except that there is objection to the attaching of these sound strips to the reels of productions, because if that be done continuously in theatres, there soon would be much film cut away.

The committee also proposed a device which may be used to enable the projectionist to determine which, if any, of several loudspeakers is inoperative owing to a defective speech coil. In this each individual speaker will be provided with a jack connected into one side of the line beyond the output of the horn panel and the sound projectors back of the screen. This will enable the projectionist to plug an a.c. milleameter in series with each speaker.

Equipment News and Comment

ILLUMINATION DEVICE

● What is called the "new Major Revelation Roundel" has been brought out by the Major Equipment Company of Chicago, as an aid to improved theatre illumination.

Specifically, the new roundel consists in a developed glass designed to be more capable than previous types for the true transmission of light, white or colored. It is adaptable to both fixture and cove lighting.

ORDERS HOLD UP

● According to the statement of the Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Company, that concern's orders during the quarter ending June 30 amounted to $20,343,216, as compared with $20,388,658 during the quarter ending March 31. Sales billed during the second quarter of this year were $21,104,770, almost a million more than those billed during the first quarter. The statement further asserts:

"The employes retail sales campaign of May and June has an important financial bearing on Westinghouse not only at this time, but also in the future. During these two months the employes sold household electrical appliances having a retail value approximating $3,000,000. Employes interested prospects. Dealers completed the sales, delivered the goods and received payment. Prices were not cut. Buyers were given no discounts. Employes received no commissions, but were rewarded with prizes of merchandise based on the value of goods sold."

The latter part of the statement does not concern motion picture theatre equipment directly, but it indicates that there is money available—purchasing power—in the nation, if only we have what the public wants to buy!

BY WAY OF NEWS

● Robert R. French, formerly with the Novelty Scenic Studios, Variety Scenic Studios and the S. O. S. Corporation, has been appointed manager of the Reliable Ticket Machine Company of New York, succeeding Sam G. Lamm, who resigned. The company recently removed to executive offices at 1600 Broadway.

Several recent installations are announced by the Typhoon Air Conditioning Company, Inc., of New York, among them, air conditioning equipment in the Stanley theatre on Seventh Avenue, New York, and the U. S. theatre in Paterson, N. J.

The necessity of avoiding the use of a central decorative lighting fixture of such length as to interfere with sightlines from the third mezzanine caused the adoption of the drum-shaped chandelier, which is in harmony with the ceiling, more modern in character and much better in effect when viewed from the upper mezzanine.

A recognition of the fact that the time-honored flaring sound board around the proscenium opening has been rendered obsolescent by sound amplifying apparatus brought about the simplification of the treatment of the proscenium. An acoustical engineering consideration, as already explained, gave the room its straight walls and flat ceiling, meeting without any cove or artificial treatment at their junction. The adoption of the three mezzanines for practical reasons has at the same time been advantageous in making possible a much more impressive and wider view of the auditorium from all parts of the house than is obtainable where a large balcony cuts off the view of the upper part from a large percentage of the people seated on the orchestra floor, and of much of the lower part of the house from those seated above. This arrangement of the seating substitutes a pleasant, clear view across an open space of the auditorium for the usual unpleasant view down over a sea of heads on an immense, sloping balcony. Entering the mezzanines from the rear and going down to their seats, the patrons will have before them the entire interior, with its warm-toned brown walls of wood, and its slightly stepped and ornamented ceiling.

The fact that there are three balconies creates the impression that the back of the third mezzanine in this theatre must necessarily be much higher above the stage level than the back of the usual large, single balcony. The writer has assured himself that this is not the case, however, by checking up this height with the measurements of two theatres of about the same capacity, both of which have the familiar single balcony. The houses cited are the Palace, Albany, N. Y., and the 86th Street theatre, New York City. In the former, the height of the back of the balcony above the stage is 53 feet, 5 inches, and in the latter this height is 53 feet, 4 5/8 inches. The back of the third mezzanine in the Radio City Cinema will be 54 feet above the stage, an increase of about 7 inches over the two mentioned here.

The Radio Keith Orpheum Corporation's experts in theatre management, picture projection and sound reproduction worked together and with the architects in formulating the requirements of that organization and a liaison man, David Canavan, head of RKO construction department, was chosen to keep in close contact with the architect. Also, a member of the organization who will be connected with the operation of the Cinema and International Music Hall, Eugene Brown, was assigned to collaborate with Clyde R. Place, the consulting engineer, under whose direction the plans for the entire mechanical equipment of Rockefeller Center are being designed and executed. Peter Clark, stage engineer and his staff are working in close relationship with the architects and with Mr. Place. John D. Rockefeller, Jr., and his holding company, the Metropolitan Square Corporation, concerned with the project as a whole and with the Cinema as a part of the development, are represented by the architects, Reinhard & Hofmeister; Corbett, Harrison & MacMurray; and Hood & Fouilhoux. Paul Sabine was consulted on acoustics. Stanley L. McCandless is consultant on lighting.

In Better Theatres

Further description of technical facilities of the Radio City Cinema will be presented in the August 27th issue of Better Theatres in discussions of the equipment itself. Much of the equipment for this theatre is of special design and in some cases it represents departures from common practice even to the extent of technical advancement.

Thomas W. Lamb is the consulting architect for the Radio Keith Orpheum Corporation for the Cinema. Clifford M. Swan is the supervising engineer in charge of the acoustical design and specifications. Barr, Irons & Lane, Inc., are the general contractors for this theatre. Throughout, S. L. Rothafel ("Roxy"), who will direct the Cinema as well as International Music Hall, has been the chief moving spirit so far as the provisions for the type of entertainment to be presented are concerned. It is now his intention to put into practice here his belief that motion pictures have reached a state of development that enables them to stand alone, without the aid of any presentation or other form of stage show, and that motion picture entertainment and stage entertainment should be divorced. That Mr. Rothafel has taken this stand is significant in view of the fact that he was one of the pioneers in the use of presentations and has long been identified with this combined entertainment.

The Todd, Robertson, Todd Engineering Corporation, and Todd & Brown, Inc., are the builders and managers. The former firm is concerned particularly with the general plans for the project, the tenancy of the buildings, the decorative art program and the varied range of real estate activities. Todd & Brown, Inc., oversee the construction of the buildings, award contracts for materials and follow up every practical detail of the building program. But these are not hard and fast lines of demarcation. In nearly every aspect of Rockefeller Center the two organizations overlap to a greater or less extent. The requirements of these two firms have, naturally, governed the architect throughout to a very great degree. So far as the Cinema is concerned, the aim of the collaborators has been first of all to produce a building so designed and equipped as to provide facilities for the advancement of the motion picture as a complete form of entertainment.

York Paramount use has been made of the orchestra pit in the manner suggested.

Having discussed the suitability of use of the orchestra pit as an auxiliary stage in houses of three types, we can now proceed to a discussion of the method of its employment. All of this discussion will be based upon practice generally in use in the Staten Island Paramount theatre and will be governed by principles and laws which that practice has indicated as best suited to the elevator stage in that theatre.

THAT THERE are certain definite rules and principles governing design and decoration of settings and their lighting, in the peculiar proportions of the space available for their employment, is indisputable. In the greater number of theatres the decoration of the auditorum itself must be considered. The available lighting facilities for lighting must be gone into in detail, for the problem of lighting settings on the elevator stage is far more intricate than the illumination of ordinary vaudeville attractions. In using the large stage, light may be projected from any angle and from a variety of points. In the use of the elevator stage it will be well to bear in mind that the sources of the light for illuminating the actors and the setting are limited both as to direction of throw and the number available. The light can come in the majority of cases from one or two directions only, therefore the use of spotlights from the projection booth is strongly recommended. In the Staten Island Paramount practice has included the use of the strip and concentrated beams of light which are obtainable by the use of framing shutters. Special attention should be paid to the spill of excess light, which is common in careless or inadequate operation of projection booth spotlights. The high intensity of the light projected from the booth is most annoying to the audience if there is "spilled" light covering parts of the house other than the exact spot where light is required. The set of 12 spotlights that are located in the front of the balcony rail in The Staten Island Paramount have proved useful for all elevator stage attractions. Several circuits for vari-colored lighting effects are available, all of which prove most advantageous and which, when used in conjunction with the high intensity spotlights, effect a most pleasing and successful combination of illumination.

In those theatres fortunate enough to have the installation of overhead spotlights above the orchestra pit in the ceiling outside the proscenium arch as original equipment, results of surprising beauty and novelty can be obtained by their use. It would be most advantageous to use these overhead sources of illumination for "highlight" effects rather than for foreground work, since the very heavy shadows formed by them would tend to give a gloomy and indistinct appearance to the makeup of the performers. However, this exact effect might be found useful in exits or entrances.

The Staten Island Paramount has been most fortunate in having as original equipment footlights of the disappearing flush type installed along the outer edge of the elevator stage. These lights are controllable from the regular switchboard backstage and have the standard three-color circuits. Although these footlights are not commonly installed in orchestra pits, it would be wise to take advantage of the extra light source available through their use wherever they are part of the house equipment. Naturally the routine of spotlight use on the elevator stage follows that of the grand stage practise. Orchestras should have the soloists picked out by the beam of light as they take the solo parts of the selection being performed. Dance or solo performers of any sort should work in some degree of extra illumination distinct from the stage lighting itself. Only one point should be clearly and carefully emphasized. Do not permit spilled light. On the grand drape on the sides of the proscenium arch or on any part of the house spilled light is a mark of incompetence and carelessness. Sloppy use of light will spoil an otherwise excellent production as thoroughly as any known method.

Another novel process of scenically decorating the small stage is available in the projection booth of the average theatre through the use of the Brenkert projector. This versatile machine may be employed in a variety of ways as a spotlight and as a projector of decorative effects. The theatre equipped with a traveler curtain can make use of this machine in many ways that are out of the question for a house whose grand drape is of the rising variety. There are the effects of moving water and clouds projected upon the screen with the traveler masking as much as is needed of the effect. The effect glasses, with their diversity of pattern which when projected upon the screen or the closed traveler and colored by the use of rotating wheels of colored gelatines, make beautiful effects possible with the minimum of trouble. The Brenkert projector is limited in use only to those media which can be made to fit the effect aperture, and new effects can be made upon demand and need cost but little. The possibilities for the employment of this useful source of light are boundless. For further example, there is the variety of light beam shapes that are at hand in the employment of suitable foci and apertures. Slides depicting any land or scenic effect may be projected upon the motion picture screen with the traveler open, or upon the closed traveler itself. The pattern glasses spoken of before are available in a wide variety of patterns, and the gelatines come in more than sixty shades and tints.

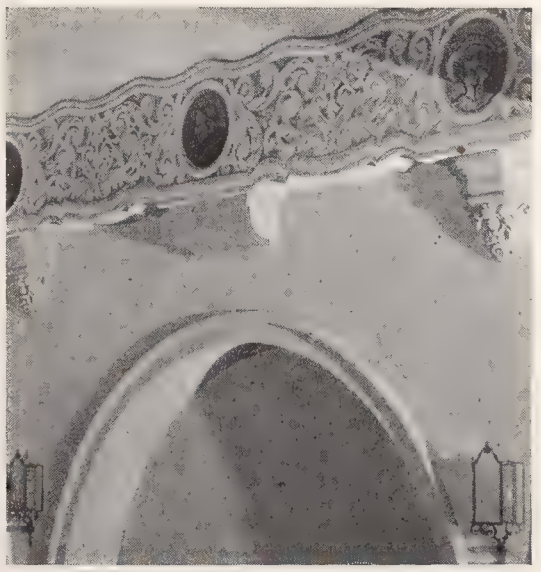
Fire, moving water and clouds and fog may be simulated through the use of effect wheels, as may rain and snow. An interesting effect of drifting fog was recently gained by accident in the Staten Island Paramount Brenkert machine by the projection, considerably out of focus, of the rain effect wheel through a 33 blue gelatine. Plain colored effects similar to spotlighting or strip floodlighting may be gained by the use of suitable aperture plates and angles of projection. In many houses this means of spotlighting will be the only one readily at hand.



IN THE MATTER of suitable settings for the elevator stage at the Staten Island Paramount, it has been found that the type of setting most generally successful is the impressionistic architectural type. That is to say, a setting which suggests the locale of the act rather than a deliberate attempt to duplicate some natural effect. As in the paragraph devoted to lighting, recommendations are strongly on the side of simplicity, yet with no sacrifice of novelty or good taste. That there should be harmony between the setting used and the interior of the house in which it is presented goes without saying. There are certain "atmospheric" houses wherein settings of similar treatment would be most effective and which by the same token would be out of place in a house of Georgian or similar design. As the setting on the elevator stage is outside of the proscenium arch and consequently in the body of the auditorium itself, too much attention cannot be paid to the question of proper harmony of stage setting and house decoration. It has been the approved method at the Staten Island Paramount to use only those settings which suggest the locale. As an illustration of this point, we may consider a setting which is known in that theatre as a House Unit production.

This unit is directly in relation to, and is a copy of, the decorative panels and treatment of the house itself. The design at the base of columns forming part of the architectural treatment of the auditorium, was transferred to the ends of the long backing piece, which is in most cases the piece de resistance of the elevator stage settings, and further designs from the walls of the house were used as borders to the central panel. In this central panel were painted certain figures which appear on the frieze of celebrated Greek ruins. As the house includes Archaic Greek motifs in its decorative scheme, the inclusion of ancient Greek designs in a setting of classic simplicity was appropriate and in good taste.

Other settings include sections which are readily incorporated in a new arrangement. There is, for example, a long low railing of silver cutout work, which is used along the front of the elevator stage to separate the platform from the audience. This railing is built around the cutout duplication of the seal or trade mark of Publix Theatres. It further includes two letters "P" and certain scrollwork features. The railing is used in five separate units that are otherwise in no way similar one to the other.

For the presentation of a band we have made use of the terra cotta and rose and silver architectural design which appears in an accompanying illustration. Other bands have had other settings of a somewhat similar nature.

There is a certain law of vision which causes objects of any height, such as pianos, etc., to assume an elevated or stretched appearance—to lengthen and raise themselves toward the ceiling when viewed from the seats nearest to them. This peculiar phenomenon is present in all elevator stage presentations. It renders pianos spindly-legged and makes thin tall objects assume unnatural proportions. The greatest care should be taken to overcome this effect. It should be kept constantly in mind that the proportions of the elevator stage force upon the designer a long low rectangle, inside of which the dimensions must be kept. The rise and fall of the stage does not usually allow of high settings, nor does the depth of the stage platform itself allow of many courses of scenery. The rectangle with which work is done at the Staten Island Paramount is governed by the measurements of twenty-eight feet in length, six feet in height, and seven feet in depth. There is no trouble in using these proportions except for a dance act. It has been found best to limit the decoration of the elevator stage for dance routines, to a simple setting in the manner of a formal garden. A few small trees, stage grass, a fountain, etc., give the effect of a garden and will not interfere with the dancers. There could be few better examples of the fact that a setting should be a decoration and not the principal focal point of view in the presentation. The performers should never be submerged in the setting used to present them.

The use of beaverboard or some similar wallboard in the construction of the relatively small settings used on the elevator stage cannot be too strongly recommended. The almost negligible danger from fire characterizing it, and the ease with which it can be worked, are two of the most important points in its favor. Add to this the fact that if cold water colors are used, the setting may be altered as to color with a minimum of outlay and trouble by a simple process of washing. Light wooden frames are used to support the board itself, and the design is either cut out with a scroll saw of some kind, or is painted upon the hard surface as it would be upon the almost unworkable canvas. No stretching of canvas or other cloth is necessary and no damage can be done by a reasonable amount of rough treatment.

Although fireproofing of the scenery used upon the lift is not always imperative, it is well to be reassured that the wallboard effects are not in contact with any wiring or source of danger. Spraying of the scenery after completion is in most cities sufficient to comply with regulations, and in a large number this practise is not required if the material of which the setting is made is in itself fireproof to a reasonable degree.

Further improvements in the elevator stage technique will suggest themselves from time to time as the producer becomes more used to the medium with which he is working. Such things as glass-topped trapdoors as light sources in a fashion show, and glass-topped step units in a revue number make themselves felt as necessities when the need for them becomes great.

Although the foregoing notes may seem to indicate a degree of effort in presenting simple, tasteful shows totally out of keeping with the result obtained such is really not the case. The technique of elevator stage presentation does not present great difficulties, and if its limitations and lack of space are taken into careful consideration, much may be done with it.

As a means of tiding a theatre over an unsteady period, or as a means of adding inexpensive and novel effects to a film program, it has great and varied usefulness. Nothing in a theatre's equipment should be idle.

NEW THEATRE PROJECTS

FOLLOWING is a list of new projects in motion picture theatre construction compiled from reports available on June 28. The list also includes remodeling projects and contracts awarded. An asterisk before an item indicates that additional information has been received since a previous report.

Theatres Planned

District of Columbia

WASHINGTON — District Investment Corporation has plans by John J. Zink, 2826 Overland Avenue, Baltimore, Md., for a one-story and balcony fireproof picture theatre. Location not announced. Estimated cost, $110,000.

Florida

MIAMI BEACH—Wolfson - Meyers Theatre Enterprises, Sidney Meyers, president, 9 N. W. Third street, has plans by Robert L. Weed, 2620 Biscayne Boulevard, Miami, Fla., for a Spanish type theatre to be located on Washington avenue, near Fifth street, with seating capacity of 1,000.

Maryland

BALTIMORE—Uptown Theatre Company, care J. S. Cook, Court Square Building, has plans by Edwin H. C. Browne, Fidelity Building, for a proposed new picture theatre, 46 by 150 feet, to be located at 4609 Liberty Heights avenue. Estimated cost, $25,000.

Missouri

KANSAS CITY—Proposed theatre, with seating capacity of about 3,000, is included in the preliminary project for the construction of a civic auditorium. Final plans are now in progress, and will soon be submitted to the members of the city council for their consideration and approval. Location and cost not announced.

New Jersey

NEWARK—City Line Amusement Corporation, 13 Bloomfield avenue, has plans by F. C. Kern, 5 Bloomfield avenue, for a six-story brick and stone-trim theatre, 150 by 200 feet, to be located on Bloomfield avenue. Estimated cost, $150,000.

North Carolina

CANTON—The Strand Theatre plans the erection of a balcony theatre on the State highway at Park avenue and Adams street, 50 by 115 feet, with seating capacity of 1,250.

NORTH WILKESBORO—Leonard Vyne plans erecting a new theatre on site, 50 by 125 feet.

Pennsylvania

WASHINGTON—Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc., H. P. Harris, district manager, Clark Building, Pittsburgh, Pa., plans rebuilding brick, steel and reinforced concrete theatre, including balcony, at 59 West Main street. Architect not made public. Estimated cost, $250,000.

CENTRAL FALLS—Monast Realty Company, L. Monast, 186 Main street, has plans by C. W. Swanson, 21 High street, Pawtucket, R. I., for a brick and concrete theatre to be located at 754-58 Broad street. Estimated cost, $175,000.

Texas

DALHART—O. P. Morrison plans the erection of a modern picture theatre. Architect and location not made public.

GAINESVILLE—Majestic Theatre, owned by Lewis Lindsay, and operated by A. V. Wade, is reported will be rebuilt. It was recently gutted by fire with a loss estimated at $65,000.

LAREDO—William Epstein is reported planning to erect a one-and-a-half-story Spanish type, constructed with brick, structural clay tile and reinforced concrete theatre. Guy N. Trout, Box 684, architect. Estimated cost, $20,000.

Vermont

ST. JOHNSBURY—Plans to rebuild the Globe Theatre have been postponed for the time being. Estimated cost, $150,000.

Virginia

VIRGINIA BEACH—R. B. Walls and C. N. Bayne are reported planning the erection of a modern new theatre on Seventeenth street. Estimated cost, $40,000.

Contracts Awarded

Georgia

*ATLANTA—Ingalls Iron Works, Birmingham, Ala., is reported having contract for 180 tons of fabricated structural steel for Loew's theatre project. Theatre, with exception of four exterior walls and roof, is being demolished, and proscenium wall removed and relocated. New treatment and finish throughout office building entrance and theatre lobby. Theatre construction modern, fireproof, steel, reinforced concrete, metal lath and plaster marble, ornamental iron, aluminum, new electrical, plumbing, heating and ventilating systems throughout with refrigeration plant for summer cooling. All sub-contracts awarded. James McWilliams, Inc., 19 East Forty-seventh street, New York, general contractor.

Maine

BAR HARBOR—G. McRay, 245 Main street, has awarded the contract to P. L. P. Carey Company, 28 Common street, Waterville, Me., for the erection of a one-story concrete theatre, 75 by 155 feet. Estimated cost, $150,000.

Virginia

ROANOKE—Community Theatre Corporation, C. G. Lindsay, president, has awarded the contract to Lubank & Caldwell, Boxley Building, for the erection of a modern theatre on Granda road, Virginia Heights, with seating capacity of 1,000. Estimated cost, $150,000.

Remodeling

Alabama

JASPER—Fire damage to the Colonial Theatre has been repaired. J. M. Johnson, manager.

Arkansas

PINE BLUFF—Malco Amusement Company is reported having installed cooling system in Saenger Theatre, costing $10,000. Arthur R. Swanke, manager.

Florida

KISSIMMEE—The Arcade theatre has been completely remodeled and renovated and will be ready for reopening soon. The work of renovating has been done by E. M. Breese of Kissimmee.

OCALA—About $5,000 will be expended to make improvements to the Ella Theatre, Gordon Reap. manager.

TITUSVILLE—Thomas S. Brandon, who recently acquired the Magnolia Hotel and theatre building, plans remodeling. Exact improvements not made public.

Georgia

ATLANTA—Reported that Capital Theatre, located at 202 Pinetree street, N. W., plans expending about $25,000 to install new equipment.

Idaho

SODA SPRINGS—New sound equipment has been installed in the Idan-ha Theatre. J. W. Laritson, manager.

Iowa

AMES—The Ames Theatre Company plans several new improvements to its West Ames Theatre during the summer months. Joe V. Gorbrach, manager.

Massachusetts

MATTAPAN—Rialto Theatre has been remodeled and reopened. Charles Goldrider, formerly of Salem, Mass., manager.

Missouri

CHAFFEE—New sound equipment has been installed in the Pullman Theatre. Vernice H. Montgomery, manager.

North Dakota

NEW ISIS—New sound equipment, new seats and modern air cooling system has been installed in the New Isis Theatre. House recently reopened. Floyd Junkins, manager.

Washington

TACOMA—Improvements costing approximately $15,000, has been made to the Temple Theatre, recently acquired by John Hamrick. New policy will be presenting return engagements on all leading pictures. Roy Lapin, assistant manager.

not entitled to the injunction, and said:

"It must be accepted as settled that any place in which illegal practices are habitually carried on is a disorderly house. . . . A house in which habitual violations of the law occur is a disorderly house . . . notwithstanding the fact that no single violation constitutes a crime and is only punishable as an act of disorder. . . . The complainant (theatre owner), who asks to have an alleged illegal ordinance set aside, is admittedly violating the law of the state, and desires to continue to do so. It is apparent that the result of an injunction, were it granted, would be to allow complainant, at least temporarily, to continue his illegal practices. Such a complaint has no standing in a court of equity."

Municipal Lease Void

GENERALLY SPEAKING, a lease contract for city property entered into by municipal officials, or other representatives, is void and unenforceable if the terms of the lease may result in financial loss which may be readily anticipated and avoided. This rule of the law is applicable although the city property is intended to be utilized for purposes beneficial to the general public. So held a higher court in the recent case of Myers v. Post (239 N. W. 315).

In this case a city owned a building which was valued at $45,000. Notwithstanding the fact that the property was rented to a financially responsible party at a rental of $3,000 per year under a lease, the board of supervisors of the county authorized the leasing of the property to the city for a period of three years at an annual rental of only $501. This rental contract was made because the fire marshal states that it was essential that the city acquire the property in order to promote the efficiency of the fire department by the use of a portion of the property as a drill field and fire tower.

Certain property owners filed suit to prevent use of the building by the city at the reduced rental. In holding the county officials not entitled to renew the lease contract, the court said:

"It would require strong proof under the present circumstances to show that the indirect benefit to the entire county was the moving consideration in refusing to continue a lease from a responsible person at $3,000 a year instead of leasing it to the city for $501 a year. . . . Even though there may be no willful dishonesty in the transaction, it is a constructive fraud on the rights of the taxpayers of the county."

When Lease Contract Is Cancelled

IT IS WELL settled law that where a contract has been rescinded by mutual consent, the parties are restored to their original rights. In other words, a contract is considered to remain in force until it is rescinded by mutual consent, or until the opposite party does some act inconsistent with the duty imposed upon him by the contract, which amounts to an abandonment.

For instance, in Dickinson v. Lawrence (9 P. [2d] 985), it was disclosed that a property owner entered into a contract with the Midland Theatre Company agreeing to construct a theatre and to lease it to the company for ten years. The agreed rent was fixed at $8,400 per annum, in monthly payments of $700 payable in advance. The property owner agreed to start construction of the theatre on or before January 1, and to have it ready for occupancy by September 1.

Soon after the contract was made the theatre company assigned the lease contract to another person named Dickinson. The property owner failed to construct the building in accordance with the terms of the contract and Dickinson filed suit to recover $35,000 damages. During the trial the property owner introduced evidence tending to show that Dickinson advised the property owner that he owned the lease, demanded that the owner should not build the theatre structure provided for by the lease. Dickinson also stated that if the property owner should complete the theatre the building would remain vacant and unused. It was further contended that Dickinson made these statements for the purpose of preventing the property owner from building any theatre or theatre structure which might be used in competition with the theatres which Dickinson already owned and operated.

The court indicated that such acts on the part of Dickinson justified the property owner in breaching the contract, and said:

"The parties to a contract may at any time rescind it, either in whole or in part, by mutual consent, and the surrender of their mutual rights is sufficient consideration. . . . It is a familiar rule that the parties to any contract may mutually rescind or abandon the same."

Definition of "Acceptance of Full Payment"

WHERE a creditor and a debtor disagree regarding the amount of a debt for rent, or other items, the debtor is relieved from making further payment if the creditor accepts a check having marked thereon a stipulation that the amount being paid is in full payment. Moreover, the fact that the creditor adds certain stipulations to the check before presenting it for payment does not change this rule of the law.

For example, in Meyers v. Acme (138 So. 443) it was disclosed that a debtor gave to a creditor a check having written on the reversed side the following: "Full settlement of account detailed below BK 3649."

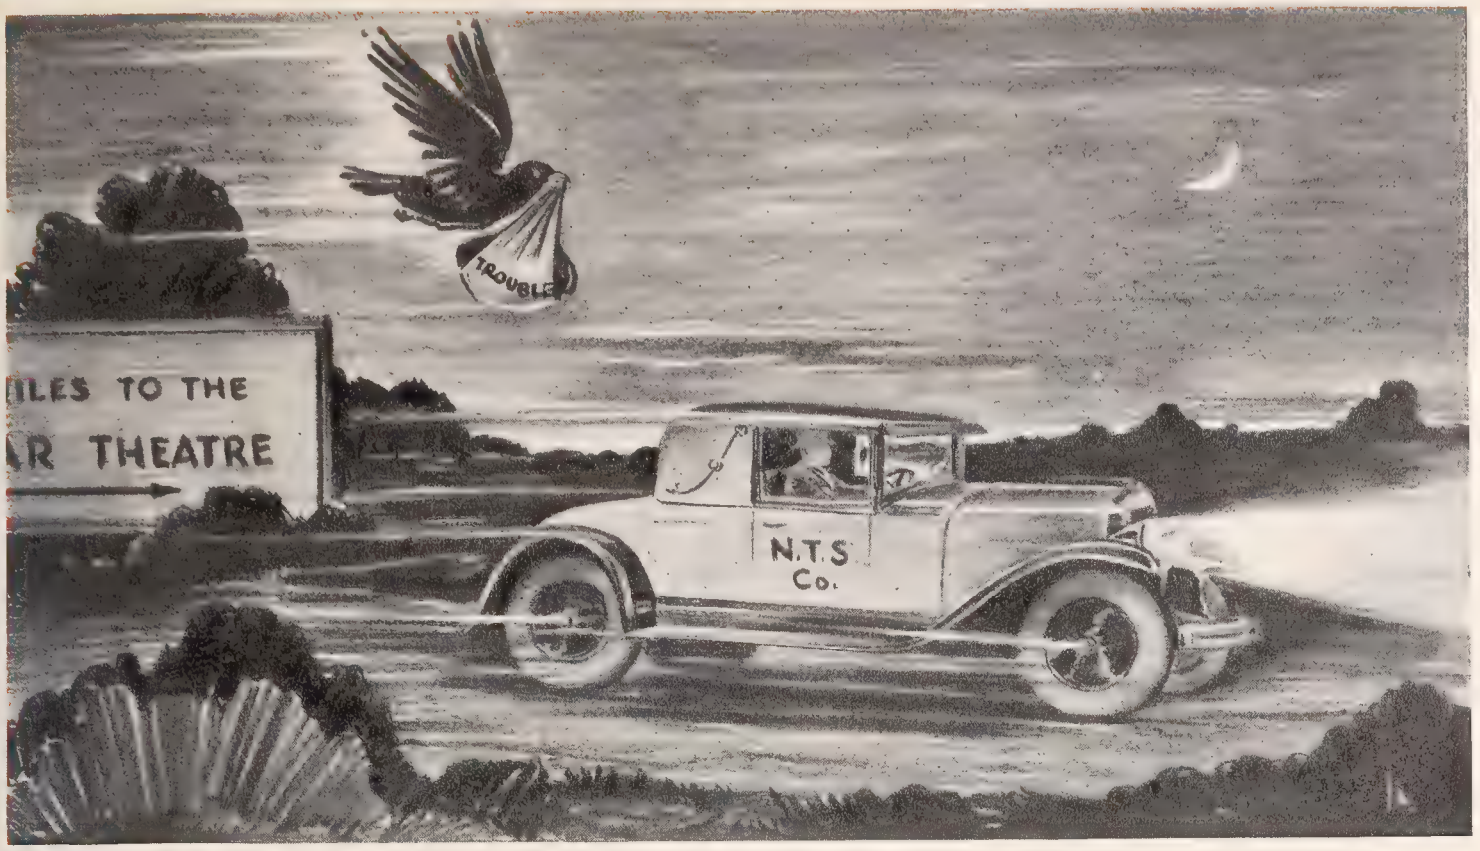
When the check was endorsed below the above-quoted stipulation the creditor wrote in ink above the endorsement, "all rights reserved."

Later litigation developed when the creditor filed suit against the debtor to collect the alleged balance due. However, it is important to know that the higher court held the debtor relieved from further payment, and said:

"The law appears to be well settled that one, to whom a check is tendered containing such a stipulation, must either accept or reject the stipulation, as written, and may not obtain the benefit of the check and, at the same time, avoid the obligation resulting from the stipulation by adding other stipulations intended to nullify the first."

Injunction Against Union

COURTS HAVE held that when picketing drives customers from a theatre, the theatre owner is entitled to an injunction. Also, when one labor union is threatened in its business life by the violence or other wrongful acts of another union, the former is entitled to an injunction.



For illustration, in Nann v. Raimist, (174 N. E. 690), it was shown that two unions, one named the Amalgamated Workers and the other the International Union of America, were accustomed to make contracts with employers who agreed to employ the members of the chosen union to the exclusion of all others.

Some difficulty in operating conditions became apparent between the two unions and the International threatened to drive the Amalgamated out of existence. Its members would go from place to place, would make the methods of its rival manifest to the world, and, in the words of a witness, "wipe it off the map."

An employer, which employed members of the Amalgamated, sued the International and proved that its members denounced the Amalgamated as a "fake" union, a union made up of "scabs." The employer asked for an injunction and a court order restraining interference with its business, and proved that the International members in picketing had driven customers from his place of business. Therefore, the lower court granted an injunction against further picketing and the higher court sustained this verdict.

PLANNING THE THEATRE

Due to the fact that no inquiries concerning theatre construction problems of a nature suitable for publication, were received since the last issue of Better Theatres, the department, Planning the Theatre, conducted by Peter M. Hulsken, is omitted from this issue. If proper inquiries are received before publication of the August 27th issue, the department will be resumed therein.

A Modern Version of a Familiar Old Print . . .

Who hasn't at some time or another seen that intriguing picture of the old time family doctor racing to a dead heat with the stork? Side whiskers fanning the brisk night air, determination lining his honest face, while he pounds ol' dobbin over the tail. Neck and neck they go, the medico and the bird, racing through the night, hell bent on beating each other to "the birthing of another blessed event." There's a sermon in that old print. It depicts devotion to duty—the gospel of getting on the job at all odds.

Ask the National Salesman for a Free Inspection of your equipment. Simple adjustments, recommended in time, frequently save costly repairs or complete replacements later on.

National Service in action presents a remarkable character simile to the old time practitioner. . . . A 'phone call at midnight; a film fire; an impending or actual breakdown; a suddenly discovered shortage of supplies. A National Service Man rolls out of bed and is quickly on his way to send or bring relief. That's why it's often said that "National is both the Doctor and the Nurse Maid to the Moving Picture Business."

MOTION PICTURE HERALD

A CONSOLIDATION OF EXHIBITORS HERALD-WORLD AND MOTION PICTURE NEWS

FROM THE SOIL

¶ As the soil determines the plant, so do communities, institutions, classes and industries inspire, create and give nurture to publications.

¶ The New York Times, without a peer in daily journalism, is most definitely a product of the rich, vast and varied social and economic empire centering in the City of New York.

¶ The Saturday Evening Post is clearly a product of the tastes and desires of the great American middle class, representing its interests and standards in goods and art, and its mores.

¶ Iron Age, a trade journal of high status, reflects most directly the substance and substantiality of the great industrial community of iron and steel.

¶ And in this world of amusement served by the screen, MOTION PICTURE HERALD lives by and expresses the constructive sincerities of a great industry. Those who make the motion picture great confer distinction on The Herald.

MRS. ESTELLE BAKER, THE DAYTON COMPANY, MINNEAPOLIS

"I have been buying merchandise in New York that is colorful. These pictures appeal to me because casts and stories are in that category. A fine line of movies for any theatre. Chevalier in 'Love Me Tonight' suggests a jolly show, and I get the same light, optimistic, encouraging reaction from Harold Lloyd's 'Movie Crazy,' 'The Big Broadcast,' and the Four Marx Brothers in 'Horse Feathers.'"

W. GRIES, STIX, BAER & FULLER, ST. LOUIS

"We have found that people in the Denver area have money to spend and buy if they are thrown against a bargain. It strikes me that Paramount is, consciously or unconsciously, doing that precise thing. I classify pictures as little ones or big ones, and I feel that these eight Paramount pictures, are all big. They should be easy to sell."

BUYERS REFLECT THE BUYING AMERICANS!

JOSEPH ZIFFER, J. L. HUDSON COMPANY, Detroit, Michigan

"If I bought films instead of dry goods, I'd buy all eight on sight. A theatre owner, like any other merchant, must know the present status of public taste and gauge the future trend. The public wants the stars you've got and I believe the pictures have enough of the sensationally novel about them to break down the sales resistance created by the present economic stress"

W. J. SHIELDS, WILLIAM FILENE SONS COMPANY, BOSTON

"In my opinion, the Bostonians I know and the people for whom I purchase merchandise will readily accept eight pictures so alive with star names and story appeal. I believe that theatres that fail to show such movies will be doing their own patrons a great injustice."

ARTHUR R. McFARLIN, B. FORMAN CO., ROCHESTER, NEW YORK

"There are two things I demand in merchandise I buy: First — tested materials; second — up-to-date execution. I would buy these eight Paramount Pictures, because they include both. I know the stability of Paramount. I am sure of the popularity of these stars and recognize the promise of fresh treatment in these stories. If I bought for a theatre, I'd buy the whole group without hesitancy."

WILLIAM J. WOLF, ASSOCIATED MERCHANDISING CORPORATION, NEW YORK CITY

"You need hardly ask me. New York knows its movies. It has shrewd buyers in all lines, and how can their judgment be faulty enough to keep such pictures as 'Movie Crazy,' 'Blonde Venus,' 'A Farewell to Arms,' 'Horse Feathers,' and 'Big Broadcast,' from their theatres. In fact, it shouldn't be hard to merchandise names and titles like these to anybody, anywhere."

MOTION PICTURE HERALD

Vol. 108, No. 6 August 6, 1932

FOR MORE PLAYTIME

WASHINGTON correspondents this week found President Hoover increasingly interested in the possible wide application of the five-day week, and mayhap the shorter working day in American industry, as a step toward amelioration of unemployment and wider distribution of wages. It is said that what is called the "New Hampshire Plan," originating in the New England textile industry, which calls for a ten per cent cut in the working time of persons now employed, would provide jobs for about 3,000,000 of the 9,000,000 now said to be out of work.

The motion picture industry in its very direct service to and dependence upon the working masses should feel itself to be very much a party at interest in this movement. Assuming its application there would be a warrantable presumption of two most directly immediate results, first a marked restoration of buying power among picture consumers increasing the number of potential box office customers, and, second, an improved selling opportunity for the box office in its address to those now employed who would find themselves with more available playtime, which means spending time.

Meanwhile there are words of some cheer from several quarters, including widely diverse sectors of industry, from the corn fields to the cotton mills, where elements of upturn are to be noted. And for our industry, if the reports of our young enthusiasts on the Western front are to be taken at par, the outlook and promise of a higher proportion of rather better amusement product may let us expect that the box office in the coming season will be supplied with a fair array of attractions with which to realize on its improving opportunity.

It is, however, with just a flicker of a smile that one reads in the week's dispatches, one from Herkimer up in New York State, where our Mr. Owen D. Young, of electrical relation to the screen, gave the Associated Press words of wisdom on work saying: "In these days it is necessary to conserve every minute of time and ounce of energy for something more important than talking."

What a thought, when Mr. Hoover is trying to shorten the working time! Mr. Young would have been more quotable if it had occurred to him to remark, against the daily tide of twaddle from high places, that in these days it is important for one to say something when he talks.

GRIM MYSTERY

RARELY indeed does nascent, unproduced screen material in the mere announcement, carry so much promise of adventure and weird compelling dramatic interest as Paramount's project to go down under the sea with the salvage expedition to picture "The Lusitania Secret" where the great ship rests in the gloom of fifty fathoms of green water. There is the lure of treasure, the mystery of the depths where the giant conger lurks, and that ageless, eternal menstruum of romance and fate, the sea. The project represents one of the most remarkable opportunities of the art. It would be possible to bungle and hokum it hopelessly, but the technique of today both in terms of drama and photography encourage anticipation of a unique success. It is pleasant, too, to find the motion picture art venturing afield with daring experiment. It is an evidence of an often unworthy conservatism and play-it-safe policy of borrowing and following precedent in the art which gives the Lusitania project spectacular contrast. Anchors aweigh.

TO THE RACES, AGAIN

FROM the California Olympics comes a forecast that future great athletic contests will discard the clumsy, inaccurate stop watch, in behalf of an electrical timing mechanism which will take records of finishes including slow motion pictures accurate to fractions of a second out to several decimals. This represents a curious cycle, and a California sporting cycle at that. For it was there in the 70's that a sporting problem, the postures of a running horse, involving a bet between Governor Stanford and James R. Keene, led to the assignment of John D. Isaacs, a young technician of the Central Pacific staff, to the problem of photographing records of motion. This work, by a confusion of tradition later erroneously credited to Eadweard Muybridge, is a part of the experimental background leading up to the motion picture of today, which is just now empowered to really do the job right.

JUST now we are aesthetically annoyed at the passing of the old fashioned cork so widely supplanted by the patent crown cap, a flimsy upstart machine product born of a piffling soda pop civilization. A branded cork, brown with age and reluctant to leave the bottle, helped to make the contents important, conducing to the impression that it had been put away really to repose through the mellowing years. Tin gadgets have no quality of romance.

WITH the motion picture's copyright troubles mostly in the background, this week's cables announcing that the French fashion houses are to sew copyright labels in their style creations, beginning at this late date, give surprise. But just fancy the swank of tomorrow when we shall be wearing pants inscribed "by special permission of the copyright owners."

MISS MAE WEST, famous as "Diamond Lil" on the New York stage, has gone to the Coast to appear in "Night after Night." Paramount's publicity now quotes her as remarking that Hollywood "has a sweetening and cleansing effect upon one's views of life." She must be trying to write dialogue for Marx Brothers' "Horsefeathers."

Shadows . . . dark little people in darkest Africa. A study of members of a tribe of Pygmies in the vast Ituri jungle, found by both the motion and the still cameras of Martin Johnson during his latest sojourn in search of cinematographic adventure. This is accounted by Mr. Johnson as the finest still he ever shot, and the scene thus represented is incorporated in the motion picture, "Congorilla," which is the record, in picture and sound, of Mr. and Mrs. Martin Johnson's recent activities in the gorilla country of the Belgian Congo. The production is a Fox release for August 7, 1932, edited by Truman Tally.

EXHIBITORS NAME THE TEN BIGGEST MONEY MAKING STARS OF 1931-32

Final Standings in Canvass of 12,000 American Theatres Cite Five Women and Five Men as B. O. Leaders

The nation's exhibitors have said what they think of the nation's motion picture players. Not into their own personal tastes have they gone, but rather into their ledgers, bringing forth the imperial, if not the empyrean, word of the box office.

Thus in response to MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S nation-wide survey of the industry's ultimate merchants, in which each was asked to name "The Ten Biggest Money Making Stars of 1931-32" at his box office, something of an official "Who's Who," authoritative for the time being, has been obtained. A total of 155 players were named by the responding exhibitors, and of these, the following received the 10 largest number of citations, according to the order in which they are listed:

Marie Dressler, Janet Gaynor, Joan Crawford, Charles Farrell, Greta Garbo, Norma Shearer, Wallace Beery, Clark Gable, Will Rogers and Joe E. Brown.

They, then, are "The Ten Biggest Money Making Stars of 1931-32," according to the highest authority, those who endeavored to sell to the public the pictures in which they appeared during the past season. Over 12,000 theatres were canvassed.

The questionnaire provided the exhibitor with an opportunity to list his nominations in the specific order of their box office record. But although the players necessarily had to be named in some order, many of the returned questionnaires pointed out that the sequence was only approximately based on actual box office criteria, or that there was no such relationship at all. The ratings are therefore based on the number of times a player was cited, regardless of his or her position among the 10 nominations.

Rankings Based on Product

It is to be further pointed out that the box office evaluations represented in the survey are founded upon product, the exhibitors naming the stars who appeared in the 1931-32 pictures that were their biggest box office draws. Obviously the extent to which box office draw is attributable to any one player in a cast, varies from picture to picture, and from community to community.

Analyzed, the survey names the 10 players who appeared prominently in the casts of the 1931-32 product which drew the most people to the box offices of the responding theatres.

Although, as pointed out, the exhibitors did not in every case list their nominations in an exact order dictated by box office returns, such a sequential basis was apparently quite widely observed, and this permits another, secondary, method of rating the players, employing a scoring system. That is to say, for each time a player was named in the first position on the questionnaire, 10 points could be given; in second position, nine points; in third, eight points, and so on down to one point for tenth position.

This method was pursued in further analysis of the nominations, but it made no difference in the names of the players among the first 10 determined on a simple numerical basis. The only change effected was the advancement of Will Rogers from ninth place (as in the numerical and official list) to sixth. All other players retained the order otherwise given them.

The pointage system, however, offers

One Hundred and Fifty-Five Players Nominated by Grosses on Product of Past Year; Dressler on Top

some interesting comment upon the possible relative values of the first 10 players. Marie Dressler, for example, received almost as many citations for first ranking as she did for all the other nine positions combined. Greta Garbo also polled a high first-place vote, as compared with the number of her nominations for the remaining places. On the other hand, Joan Crawford's nominations were largely for fourth place, the number of her points for that position being greater than those for the first three positions put together. Janet Gaynor was high for first place, medium for second, then almost as high for third position as for first.

It will be noted in the official ranking that the first 10 players are equally divided between men and women. The male players, however, place only one of their number among the first six, while the "win, place and show" positions are won by women.

If precision is not demanded, the leading 10 also throw some light on relative popularity of three main types of product, comedy, comedy-drama and drama. Five of the "biggest money makers" devote their talents largely to the more serious forms of drama, three are usually identified with comedy-drama, while two are generally classified as comedians.

Lighter Vein Popular

Comedy and comedy-drama, however, are extensively represented among the 155 players, and when it is considered that throughout the bulk of the feature product the line of demarcation between the two classes is pretty thin, it seems safe to say that the story whose net emotional result is somewhere between a sob and a snicker, is just about what the average American would have as his basic film diet.

It is notable, too, that he has not lost interest in the terrific and fabulous doings of the Wild and Wooly West. And why should he? It is perhaps the only locale indigenous to this land, and while nomads, mischief makers and horsemen ply other regions of the globe, Injuns, bad hombres and cowboys lose their true romantic character as soon as they leave those storied stretches from Canada to the Rio Grande.

Inevitable among the responses was evidence that the exhibitors did not quite know what to do about "teams." The Gaynor-Farrell combination affords an eminent example. In this case, however, a large number of respondents cited them separately, and so, for sake of convenience, they are separated in the listing, each having been given a vote whenever they were listed together. The same method was pursued with respect to Louise Dressler and Polly Moran and any other teams frequently nominated separately. Teams that were never cited except in combination, however, appear in the rankings as a team.

MPTOA PROPOSES REFUSAL TO BUY PRODUCT UNLESS 5-5-5 IS OFFERED

Charges Breach of Faith in "Refusal of Certain Distributor Attorneys" to Agree to Use of 5-5-5 Contract

The executive committee of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America proposes that exhibitors refuse to sign any contracts for new product unless the "advantages of the 5-5-5 contract are offered."

This announcement was made Wednesday night by M. A. Lightman, president of the MPTOA, with the assertion that the "executive committee recommends that exhibitors do not buy product until a more equitable contract is offered." He charged "breach of faith" in the "refusal of certain distributor attorneys to agree to use of the 5-5-5 contract this year."

The statement of Mr. Lightman follows:

"Refusal of certain distributor attorneys to agree to use of the 5-5-5 contract this year is a breach of faith. Their reasons for refusal are too flimsy. It is high time we exhibitors of the country assert ourselves and demand our rights.

"The executive committee of the MPTOA proposes that exhibitors refuse to sign any contracts for new product unless the advantages of the 5-5-5 are offered.

"If exhibitor organizations are worth anything, now is the time to find out. If anyone doubts the sincerity of the MPTOA let them call a meeting of executives of all exhibitor organizations, whether affiliated with Allied States, the MPTOA, or of no affiliation, for the purpose of determining the best course to pursue.

"I will gladly attend such a meeting and urge all MPTOA units to send representatives.

"If ever there was a time for action it is now."

The Lightman statemant was issued from Memphis, headquarters of the exhibitor leader's circuit of theatres.

Mr. Lightman sought definite action some time ago on the 5-5-5 contract, demanding that all distributors comply with the terms of the agreement as formulated at Atlantic City two years ago. At the time of his recent fight for the contract, the national organization leader intimated that the attorneys for the distributors were blocking adoption of the agreement.

Following the completion of the draft of the contract, Mr. Lightman consulted various department of justice officials, and obtained from them opinions which were construed as approval of the legality of the proposed new form of agreement, provided, however, that exhibitors were permitted their choice of the proposed 5-5-5 contract or the contract of the individual distributing company involved.

Eagle to Make Twelve

Al Herman will produce 12 features on the Coast for Eagle Productions, which will be released independently. The first, "Exposed," will be directed by Mr. Herman, and feature Barbara Kent, William Collier, Jr.

THE LAST BALLOT

In the August issue of "Photoplay Magazine," the late James R. Quirk, editor and publisher, made comment on the MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S exhibitor poll on star values. His remarks were, it will be observed, based on the first reports of the poll, not the final returns—but his ballot for Mickey Mouse goes, anyway. Mr. Quirk wrote:

What stars' names bring 'em into the theatre regardless of what picture they play in? The MOTION PICTURE HERALD, a trade publication, asked that question of thousands of exhibitors.

And lo, among the ladies of the screen, Marie Dressler's name stood above them all. Next came Gaynor, Crawford, Garbo, Shearer, Sally Eilers, Constance Bennett, Marlene Dietrich, Barbara Stanwyck, Ruth Chatterton, Ann Harding, in the order named. Wally Beery led the men, with Will Rogers topping Clark Gable and Maurice Chevalier. Buck Jones topped John Barrymore, and the brand new Johnny Weissmuller ran ahead of Ramon Novarro.

Martin Quigley, who owns, and Terry Ramsaye, who edits the HERALD, are square guys, but I call for a recount. My favorite star was below Ronald Colman, George Bancroft and William Powell. If I could I would stuff the ballot box for Mickey Mouse. His is the life. Always nutty and carefree. No bills to pay. No work to do. If a wolf showed up at the door he'd kick him over a mountain.

Two Kansas Circuits Merge For Economy in Operation

Commonwealth Theatres, Inc., and the Central States Theatres Corporation of Kansas have merged, with headquarters in Kansas City. The consolidation is not a physical merger, according to C. A. Schultz, president of the Commonwealth circuit, since both companies have retained their identity. The merger was effected to bring about economies in operation and the benefits resulting from volume purchases.

Fourteen houses are included in the consolidation. Commonwealth has nine houses in Kansas, Missouri and Iowa, while Central States operates five theatres in Kansas. O. K. Mason, president of Central States, will supervise in the field.

Kent Due Next Week

Zukor Expresses Optimism During Philadelphia Talk

"This depression will prove to be a benefit. I am optimistic because the industry has gone back to work," declared Adolph Zukor in an address to 125 eastern Pennsylvania exhibitors and newspaper men on Wednesday at the Bellevue-Stratford Hotel in Philadelphia. The luncheon address was the second in the good-will tour of the Paramount executive.

Mr. Zukor offered a formula which he indicated should spell success for the industry. He advocated good pictures, hard work, sound judgment and the abandonment of the theory that the world owes the industry success.

"We have come to cease to recognize our own shortcomings," said Mr. Zukor. "We think the world owes success to us. Even that did for a time. Now we are taking stock of ourselves." Speaking particularly to the assembled exhibitors, Mr. Zukor continued: "Don't depend on your ability to make a cheap deal with the salesman. Don't use lurid fronts on your theatres. It isn't lasting. You must learn to earn your living through hard work and the use of brains. Honesty with yourself will be your salvation; that and a correction of your own shortcomings."

"The business has shown decided signs of improvement in the last 30 days," the Paramount chief declared. "The depression is past. The increase may not reach the height of previous years, but business is on the upgrade."

"I'm willing to bet all I've got, and this isn't much now, that Paramount will come through," said Mr. Zukor, expressing at the same time complete confidence in the supervision of production now being exercised by Sam Katz and Emanuel Cohen, and in the administrative support of John Hertz of Chicago. He indicated that new Paramount product is "70 per cent action and 30 per cent dialogue."

Mr. Zukor was introduced by Henry Starr Richardson, former newspaper critic, and now city statistician. The luncheon was sponsored by P. A. Bloch, Paramount Philadelphia exchange manager. Mr. Zukor will address Paramount employees and independent exhibitors in New York and Chicago in the near future. Dates for these addresses have not been set as yet. Mr. Zukor, Leo Spitz, Balaban and Katz attorney, and Arthur L. Mayer, advertising and publicity director for Paramount, returned to New York following the luncheon.

TECHNIQUE. (Below) Cameraman Ernest Palmer and his assistants filming Spencer Tracy in a Fox picture as yet untitled, involving pearl fishing.

SPORT NEWS. With the trout reported biting, and her latest picture, "Three On a Match," just about completed (we got that in, anyway), Bette Davis, First National player, hied herself to the mountains with rod, reel, boots and, most important of all, Bette Davis, for this pretty picture.

MILLIONS OF 'EM. But only one James Schnozzle Durante. This new portrait catches the noted ungrammarian in a coy mood. What a mood! What a man! What a beak! And nose and all are in Buster Keaton's new MGM vehicle, "Speak Easily."

TOP O' THE WORLD. And rearin' to go from there. A distinguished camera shot of Buck Jones and his great steed, Silver, as they appear in Columbia's "White Eagle," which has been filmed for the new season in Big Tahunga Canyon.

NO COUNTERFEIT. Loretta Young, Warner player, being modeled for a medalion; Sid Davidson, manager of the Earle theatre, Philadelphia, who had the medalion made as an exploitation stunt; and Adam Pietz, one of the two U. S. Mint metalists who design the nation's coins, if any.

COMING TO AMERICA. In the celluloid only, however. She is Moira Lynd, who is featured in "Illegal," production made at Warner-First National's Teddington studios in England. It will be sold in this country through Vitagraph exchanges.

SECURITY AND SECURITIES. Sacrificing all for the second to win the first, and losing both. Mad with prosperity before they became calm in adversity—such is the story Columbia has wrought around those events of 1929, in "American Madness," from which this scene, with Walter Huston and Constance Cummings, is taken.

DEATH OF JAMES R. QUIRK TAKES ONE WHO HELPED BUILD INDUSTRY

Owner of Photoplay Magazine Lived to See Realization of Many of His Great Visions for the Motion Picture

Untiring Advocate of Morale and Moral Responsibility Without Preachment; Medal Given to Year's Best Film

by TERRY RAMSAYE

James R. Quirk, the man who made Photoplay Magazine, and a large contributor to the motion picture, is dead in Hollywood in his forty-eighth year.

So now I must sit down and try to make good on a promise that has been standing between us these many, many years. It seems vividly like yesterday in today's memories but it was just after Jim had stepped well off into his adventure with Photoplay and I was serving the second year of my novitiate in the concerns of the motion picture. We both had just made the turn into the thirties then.

It was a lush summer's Sunday morning deep in the dunelands of Indiana where Lake Michigan goes curving down lazy sand shores bleached tawny white in blazing sun, making bluer the water that rolls off north to Mackinac and a dark and luring shadow black of the greenery of the forest south and inland.

We just sat on the beach and talked about Things. Little Frances, just big enough to heft in her father's hand, was building a sand house for her doll just above the teasing menace of a tiny surf, and she's the grown up Miss Quirk now.

Jim had great visions for the motion picture and great anticipations for Photoplay that day, and, as I reflect now, he lived to see many of them rather well realized, too. Somewhere miles off in the Hoosier hinterland a farmer church bell rang, and so we drifted off into casually serious talk, as young men will, about religion and immortality, and the ends of things,—all, it seemed, was very remote from us and that sparkling beach that summer morning. It came upon us both that perhaps we were getting unnecessarily concerned, maybe a shade abashed at ourselves, self-classified as hardened newspapermen, to be dwelling on such somber abstractions; so to take the curse off the situation with a jest, we closed the subject with a mutual promise and a handshake to the effect that "come what may—the survivor will do a swell obituary for his friend."

Occasionally down the years there have been reasons for references to that pact, and now the day has come.

Jim was a merry fellow, quite as much fun at work as at play, and never, I think, very sharply distinguishing one from the other. He was born up Boston way the fourth of September in 1884, of Irish extraction and carrying with him all his days the lilting humour of his heritage and a gay diction with a softened impress of Yankeeland upon it. He went to school in Boston, including Boston University Law School, with a dash of the Institute of Technology, and emerged into newspaper work with the Boston Herald. He newspapered about variously and once was an editor on the Washington Times. He went west, colouring his meerschaum, and got some valuable magazine experience as managing editor of Popular Mechanics in the days when it was rising to a position of dominance in a field of its own making. After that came a fling at the great open spaces of Wyoming and then a return to Chicago and the writing of copy, this time for an advertising agency.

Jim had a flair for phrasing things in words of popular appeal, and so it chanced that when the W. F. Hall Printing Company of Chicago, along in 1914, found itself with a leaflet called "Photoplay Magazine" on its hands, taken over for the printer's bill, it turned to him with the offer of the editorship, for a salary and interest. Photoplay was hardly more than a half-sprouted seed then, and to the critical eye it looked more like a slightly damaged egg.

There followed a long process of vigorous upbuilding, setting the magazine apace with the rising motion picture. Casting about for staff Jim, through Ray Long, then with Red Book, or Bob Davis of Munsey's, or both, came upon Julian Johnson, who was writing rather better than most New York publicity men about music and shows, and took him out to Chicago to be the chief staff contributor and presently the editor. This was the beginning of that very considerable roster of names which helped make Photoplay and whom Photoplay helped to make significant in the literature of the screen, including Randolph Bartlett, Delight Evans, Frederick James Smith, Agnes Smith, Adele Rogers St. Johns, Bland Johaneson and many another. He used, too, to go somewhat afield from the motion picture to bring the names of important writers in other sectors of publication to the support of the motion picture and Photoplay. From the beginning Jim, a ready and sharp critic, had a vast respect for the motion picture as an institution and a valiant desire for an increasing self-respect and responsibility on the part of the masters of the art and industry. He was the first to recognize the importance of the director and the coming day of the writer for the screen. He foresaw and laboured with the problem of coordinations between the arts as the motion picture grew up to full stature. He had a basic faith and credo and through all the career of Photoplay he kept true to it,—some of the time through years when the industry was far from as sympathetic or as appreciative as it became in time.

It was along in 1920, when I had grown weary of the making of much film and had fled to the pinelands of Long Island to raise a garden and dig clams, when Jim and his business associate Robert Eastman came along to lure me back to labour with an assignment to write a history of the motion picture for Photoplay "to run a chapter a month until it is through." It was of a piece with Jim's outlook on the industry that a contribution could be made by a sincere job of telling its whole story shorn of myth and the clutter of falsehood which was deeply colouring all its tradition.

There is tribute to Jim's professional integrity in the fact that he was willing to wait through well near two years of research before a chapter went into type, and that he presented the progressively unfolding story, with most generous support of a continuously widening field of inquiry, here and abroad, through no less than thirty-six installments of "The Romantic History of the Motion Picture," covering three years, which is likely to stand for many a year as the record for magazine serial publication. It was his encouragement and enthusiasm, too, which helped me pile more research on and do the whole job over again for book publication in "A Million and One Nights."

There were adventures aplenty for both of us in the serial story, and not a little fun. About the time that Chapter XVIII, going into the second year, was mailed to him, I was fishing a delectable pool in the Canadian wilds just where Lake Nipigon starts down the wilderness stairs to Lake Superior. A courier du bois, a glum Cree Indian messenger, came paddling up forty miles of river from the railway to deliver me a telegram from New York:

WHAT YEAR IN YOUR STORY WILL WE GET TO MARY PICKFORD?

JIM

Jim had a deal of excitement and fun out of life with peaks of high emotional intensity. He had the curious ability to retain for the motion picture, which he knew so intimately back stage, a feeling of glamourous appreciation which enabled him to be the interpreter in the printed word, to and for the public, with rare success.

Photoplay grew up as swiftly as the motion picture grew and Jim was deeply conscious of the inter-relation of interests. His magazine was a continuously improving job of publication, done with a feeling for typographical beauty, good printing and an appreciation of the better standards of American life. With no tinge of preachment or mentorship he was a continuous and untiring advocate of a morale and a moral responsibility for the motion picture.

The Photoplay Gold Medal, an annual award to the maker of what is deemed the best picture of the year, established as the outstanding recognition of the industry, is a consistent expression of the policy that the publisher sought to apply. It has never gone to a picture with a remotely questionable element.

Some years ago he acquired ownership of the magazine, continuing in close association with his activities Miss Kathryn Dougherty, secretary, treasurer and business manager of the company from its beginning and widely known to the industry as "K. D." A number of other publishing projects have accompanied the rise of Photoplay, including a business publication known as "Opportunity." To all of them Jim gave a share of his enthusiasm, but Photoplay was ever foremost and it is for the making of it that he will be remembered.

Jim was a member of the merry company wherever editors and writers and picture makers met. He belonged to the Lotos, the Chicago and the New York Athletic clubs, and was a member of Artists and Writers. In the earlier Chicago days of Photoplay, before he moved to Broadway, he was a moving spirit in the now historic "White Paper Club," an informal array of literary workers who met on Wednesday noons at the famous de Jonge's cafe in Monroe street. There the late Emerson Hough was the imposing raconteur at the head of the table, while all about were Ray Long, Edgar Rice Burroughs, Edwin Balmer, with James Oliver Curwood down from Michigan now and then, and most any literary figure who strayed through Chicago's "Grand Crossing." And after luncheon every now and then we went over the way to the Mutual projection room to see the newest Chaplin comedy fresh from Hollywood. Some considerable part of Chaplin's subsequent highbrow repute in America grew out of the appreciation of those sessions.

Jim leaves two daughters, Frances Denton, eighteen, and Jean North, fourteen, the offspring of his first marriage, and his widow, May Allison, once a star of the screen, whom he married in 1926. His home has for some years been in Fifty-seventh street, New York, but a large proportion of his time has been spent in Hollywood in contact with motion picture production affairs.

All too many members of that old Chicago coterie, among them Emerson Hough and Jim Curwood, have in the years between gone over the great divide—and now Jim has gone, too. And if they meet again I am sure it will be another "White Paper Club."

Funeral services for Mr. Quirk were held in Hollywood Wednesday. He will be buried at Kensico, New York, Sunday.

AN APPRECIATION broadcast BY MARTIN QUIGLEY

A memorial program to the honor of the memory of Mr. Quirk was broadcast Wednesday night over the Blue network of the National Broadcasting Company, under the sponsorship of M. H. Aylesworth, president of NBC and a friend of the dead publisher. Martin Quigley, publisher and editor-in-chief of Motion Picture Herald, made an intimate address on the life and work of Mr. Quirk, saying:

We are here to do honor to the memory of a man who worked importantly in the cause of the whole people in his service to the motion picture. As every publisher should be, Jim Quirk was in a high degree a servant of the public and also of the art and industry with which he elected to identify himself through a long and vigorous career as the builder, the publisher and the editor of Photoplay Magazine.

Eighteen years ago Jim and I, each in our separate activities, started as young men, fresh from the newspaper field, to write and publish in behalf of the motion picture and the public. We had all these years a cause in common to enrich our friendship and so tonight perhaps I can best testify to the hopes and faith of his work which is now so sadly ended.

We can readily remember him tonight as he was then at the beginning of his real career, because he had the quality of enduring youth. He was a gay, blithe, blonde lad with eagerness in his voice and always a look of earnest interest in his smiling Irish eyes. Jim grew in experience and wisdom but that was the only mark of the years upon him. Life was always merry fun for him, but never a joke. The sophistication which so often makes men grow bitter with their disappointments in life never touched Jim. For him the world was born fresh and new every morning. Deep in his heart was an abiding belief in the realities of this world and the next—and this, to his whole career, was a brightly burning lamp of hopefulness.

The rise of the motion picture has been a strenuous evolution from those nickelodeon days up to its modern dominance of theatrical entertainment for the millions. Jim Quirk, sitting at his desk there between them, spoke to the picture makers in the voice of the public and to the public of the endeavors of the makers of pictures. He began, from the days of our first acquaintance eighteen years ago, to urge acceptance of the motion picture on the plane of a real art, and to urge upon the motion picture community an appreciation of its great responsibilities, responsibilities in terms of entertainment, in terms of clean attainment, and with standards of ethics and morals which should truly reflect the great wholesome majorities of these United States.

In editorials addressed to audiences of the millions, Jim Quirk stood forth in his enthusiasm for the motion picture as entertainment for all of us. In the offices of New York and in the studio councils of Hollywood, he has been heard by printed word and in person calling upon and encouraging the motion picture to serve the real America.

And through his writings, too, down these eighteen years, he has portrayed the personalities of the screen in printed word and printed picture in terms which have made them mean more to you—and in words that have, I think, made these personalities more aware within themselves of their very large responsibilities to you and to the wholesome ideals upon which the civilization of this nation is founded.

He was the first to tell the real human stories of such figures as D. W. Griffith, Mack Sennett, Mary Pickford and Charles Chaplin, and from that day on he carried forward the best that there has been to say of the motion picture in its traditions, its methods and its personalities.

Jim used to call his office at Photoplay "The Grand Crossing" because there so many of the great stars, the famous directors and chief executives of the world of the screen so often met. There on those informal occasions he exerted some of his most important influences on the career of the motion picture and its makers. He spoke the truth straight out as he saw it, whether it was bitter or sweet, but he always said it with a smile that made it count.

There was in Jim, too, an ability for winning confidences. The stories that came from his lips and those that he set down on paper were after all but a small part of what he knew about the living, loving, striving communities that we call Hollywood and Broadway. He always kept the faith and looked for the best.

In the passing of Jim Quirk you and I have lost a friend—there are millions of you to bear and share that loss, and I, with my friend gone, will feel much less alone if you will join with me now in saying "Goodbye, Jim—and God bless you."

EXHIBITORS FACE 5 PER CENT RISE IN COST OF ACCESSORIES OF SOUND

Parts Suitable for Both Radio and Theatre Reproducers May Be Subject to Manufacturers' Levy of Federal Revenue Law

Theatre owners are threatened with an increase of approximately five per cent in the costs of certain new vacuum tubes, dynamic units, amplifiers, speakers and power packs. Many of these parts are made by the manufacturers of radio equipment, and where accessories are suitable both for radios and theatre sound reproducers they may be subject to the new federal revenue law which provides for a five per cent levy on the manufacture of radios and phonographs and on parts for both. Although the tax is a levy on manufacturers, it is understood that the electrics and equipment makers are planning to pass the tax on to theatres and other users by increasing factory prices if the government rules that taxes must be collected on theatre parts made by radio manufacturers.

Legal departments and executives of important manufacturers and the motion picture electrical companies have been quietly debating the situation for two weeks or more. Interpretation of the tax measure differed insofar as the taxability of theatre parts is concerned and attempts were made to obtain a Government ruling. When the problem was presented to officials at Washington they pointed out that where theatrical vacuum tubes, amplifiers, speakers, dynamic units and power packs are not suitable for radios, even though manufactured by radio makers, they are not subject to the tax. However, under the wording of the act, it was said informally by Internal Revenue officials, the "suitability" of the apparatus and not the use to which it is put controls its taxable status. The taxability of equipment used in theatre sound systems hinges on a single phrase of Section 607 of the 1932 revenue act applying a tax on apparatus "suitable for use in connection with or as part of radio receiving sets."

Manufacturer May Appeal

While omission of the word "suitable" would have made possible the exemption of all material not actually used in radio sets, it is explained, such action would have greatly intensified the difficulties of administration, since it would then have been necessary to follow each piece of apparatus from original manufacturer to final user to determine the use made of it.

By applying the tax to all material suitable for use in radio sets this work of collecting the revenues has been simplified.

However, it was suggested by officials of the bureau, if any manufacturer of theatre sound systems using apparatus suitable for radio sets desires, he may file an application for consideration of the question whether the parts in question are exempt from tax as not suitable for use for radio purposes.

The bureau is not "hard boiled." Officials are said to recognize that if two theatre sound systems are manufactured, one of which uses parts suitable for radio purposes and the other employs material which cannot be so used, the former is at a great disadvantage if held subject to tax. They have no desire to work a hardship on anybody, it was learned, but they are faced with the task of interpreting the law in conformity with the apparent intent of Congress—if they fail to do so, Congress will censure them or the United States Supreme court will hold their action invalid.

The tax provided under section 607 of the law applies to "chassis, cabinets, tubes, reproducing units, power packs, and phonograph mechanisms." No mention is made of other apparatus or of parts for use in the taxable items. Under this language, there is, it was said informally, some room for consideration of the question whether theatre sound parts, sold as such, would fall within the scope of the provision. The same consideration holds true for the completed theatre sound system.

Because Electrical Research Products cannot engage in radio merchandising, having been barred from the home field by terms of a patents agreement of the large electrics, that company makes few vacuum tubes for theatre systems which are also adaptable to radios. But RCA Photophone, which is one of the largest radio manufacturers, makes several theatre tubes which are suitable for radios and vice versa.

Part of Revenue Measure

The radio tax is part of the Federal revenue measure which was enacted by Congress in June, and recently several manufacturers of amplifiers and speakers in the Midwest claimed that the tax is also applicable to theatre users. The larger electrics in New York, including Electrical Research Productions and the Photophone division of RCA Victor, then stumbled upon the problem and a series of company discussions followed.

An executive of one important tube distributor declared that in the event the Government had ruled to include theatre vacuums, his concern would be forced to pass on the levy to exhibitors in the form of increased costs of manufacturing because competition in the field is so keen, he said, that an additional 5 per cent might spell the difference between profit and loss. However, in view of the fact that the tax is purely a manufacturers' assessment, it could not be passed on in the form of a tax. It would have to be included in the sales price and represent an increase in sales price. The tax is on actual cost of manufacture.

Theatres To Seek Exemption From Electrical Energy Tax

The federal tax on electrical energy is a subject of discussion among exhibitors everywhere. Like the radio tax, this levy is an outgrowth of the recent revenue act and Dan C. Stewart, collector of internal revenue for Western Missouri, is to seek a ruling from the commissioner of internal revenue at Washington as to whether motion picture theatres are entitled to exemption from the three per cent tax on electrical energy.

Ruling Sought as to Whether Theatres Are Entitled to Exemption from 3 Per Cent Levy on Electrical Energy

Users of electrical energy for industrial purposes are exempt from the new tax and it was said that theatres claim exemption because they manufacture an image and should be classified as an industrial consumer.

An investigator from Mr. Stewart's office has been at the offices of the Kansas City Power and Light Company for a month to pass on what concerns using electrical energy can be classified as industrial.

It was pointed out that every time a firm claims exemption it is required to state the reasons in writing and the claim is decided in Washington. If a theatre contends it has been taxed when it should not have been, the tax must be paid and a protest made. The tax is paid to the companies supplying light and power, which in turn pay it to the government.

The internal revenue office at Kansas City points to the Revenue Act of 1932 for an explanation of what constitutes industrial consumption of electrical energy. While officials there do not believe motion picture theatres are subject to exemption, they say the question requires an official ruling from Washington, which will be had.

Initial Returns on Admissions Due on August 1; Below Estimate

First revenues from the 1932 Federal tax bill levies on theatre admissions and other services and commodities will reach the Treasury at Washington about August 1, covering the period from June 21, when most of the miscellaneous taxes became effective, to June 30.

Approximately $3,775,000 a month is estimated as the return from the new admission tax, applying to all admissions in excess of 40 cents. For the last third of June, therefore, the return should be about $1,250,000.

Final figures of the Treasury for the fiscal year which ended June 30, last, show that corporation tax collections amounted to $629,566,115, a decline of $396,826,533, or more than one-third, as compared with the fiscal year 1931, while individual income taxes totaled $427,190,581, a decline of $406,457,216, or nearly 50 per cent.

With recent indications pointing to an upturn in business, however, Treasury officials are confident that the receipts under the new tax law will closely approximate their estimates, and continued industrial improvement will put them ahead of the amounts anticipated.

In view of recent conditions in all branches of the theatrical industry, however, some doubt is expressed at Washington that admission tax returns, for the next few months at least, will meet expectations.

PARAMOUNT WILL FILM SALVAGING OF LUSITANIA, TORPEDOED LINER

Culminates Closely Guarded Plans of Two Noted Marine Authorities to Lead Expedition to Bottom of Irish Sea

Paramount Publix Corporation will film the salvaging of the SS Lusitania at the bottom of the sea. Exclusive motion picture rights to the expedition have been obtained for a reported price of $45,000, after negotiations which lasted more than one year.

Behind a recent publicity announcement from Paramount saying that the company had started to cast a new picture, "The Lusitania Secret," and the bare statement that the film will concern the salvaging of this famous vessel, lies an interesting story of the culmination of closely guarded plans of two noted marine and exploration authorities to lead an expedition down several hundred feet to the bottom of the dangerous Irish Sea, where at a point off the old Head of Kinsale, Ireland, a German submarine torpedoed and sank the Cunarder early in 1917.

Simon Lake and H. H. Railey formed a partnership more than a year ago to head a Lusitania salvage expedition to attempt recovery of $5,000,000 in the ship's safes. They organized quietly on an elaborate scale and immediately began to enlist the latest salvaging aides of science, including the new Lake tube, which sinks like a well to the ocean's bottom, and from which all salvaging activities center. Also, they drafted the new and powerful Westinghouse undersea light, which is intended for salvaging and undersea motion picture work. It is understood to have a light radius of 60 to 75 feet and is in the form of a tremendously large bulb which is so powerful that it can be lighted only in water. The light will play an important part in the undersea filming.

Interested in Byrd Expedition

Mr. Railey was interested with Richard Byrd in the Antarctic expedition and was responsible for obtaining much of the equipment and supplies used on that trek to Little America. Paramount had the filming rights to the Byrd expedition and because of this and the contact at the time between Byrd-Railey and Paramount, Mr. Railey first approached that company on the Lusitania proposition.

Simon Lake, noted naval architect and mechanical engineer, is a salvaging expert and undersea authority. He invented the even-keel type of submarine torpedo boat, building the first experimental "sub" in 1894. He also built the Argonaut, which in 1897 was the first submarine to operate successfully in the open sea. He has designed and built many undersea ships for the United States and foreign countries and is an inventor and builder of submarine apparatus for locating and recovering sunken vessels and their cargoes. At his laboratories in Stratford, Connecticut, he is currently engaged in designing and completing equipment for use in the forthcoming Lusitania expedition.

One year ago, Mr. Railey began negotiations with Paramount Newsreel for filming of the Lusitania salvage. Shortly afterward Paramount executives recognized feature possibilities and immediately launched plans accordingly. They engaged James Bernard Fagan, playwright, to write a story, and later assigned Cyril Hume and Martin Flavin, of the Paramount studios, to adapt it to the screen. Unlike the Byrd motion picture, the Lusitania film will have human interest sequences besides exploration and salvaging treatment, although the undersea phase will be highlighted. Already Richard Bennett, Gene Raymond and Frances Dee have been assigned to important roles. No definite date for sailing has been determined.

Paramount will combine its newsreel and regular studio production forces in the filming of "The Lusitania Secret." Two feature cinematographers and possibly three or four newsreel men will accompany the expedition. A director and limited technical crew, besides a few players, will complete the company.

The Smith-Lake Lusitania Salvage Expedition recently offered the rights to Fox Film at a price reputed to be considerably higher than that which Paramount had offered. Negotiations were conducted with Richard A. Rowland, Fox production executive, who said the other day that the deal never passed the stage of preliminary discussion. In the meantime, Paramount officials were reluctant to discuss their participation in the expedition.

Usually, salvaging rights to steamer wrecks are sold to salvagers by Lloyd's, Ltd., English ship underwriters. The rights are leased on a time basis and if the salvager is not successful at the expiration of the agreed date, the rights automatically revert to Lloyd's. Several proposals have been made over a long period to salvage the Lusitania, but none materialized or the attempts were unsuccessful. It is said that the Lake-Railey combination already have had divers on the Lusitania for preliminary surveying of the wreckage.

Metro-Goldwyn Net Reaches $1,351,823 for 12 Weeks

Metro-Goldwyn Picture Corporation reports net profit of $1,351,823, after expenses and federal taxes, for the 12 weeks ended June 4, 1932, which compares with net profit of $1,947,975 for the 12 weeks ended June 5, 1931. Net profit for the 40 weeks ended June 4, 1932, was $3,262,630, after expenses and federal taxes, which compares with profit of $5,483,414 for the 40 weeks ended June 5, 1931.

During the 12-week period in 1932, gross profit was $2,767,762. Operating expense is noted at $1,281,286, leaving an operating profit of $1,486,476. Net profit before federal taxes was $1,536,163; federal taxes amounted to $184,340, and miscellaneous income was put at $49,687.

Western Electric Sues on Transfer Of Its Equipment

Western Electric has instituted a suit against the operators of the Gibbs theatre, Youngsville, Pa., which, in the nature of a test case, will legally determine whether or not Western Electric sound equipment may be transferred without express authorization from the company, as patent holder.

The suit has been filed in the United States district court for the western district of Pennsylvania. Under the terms of Western Electric's contract for the renting of sound reproducing equipment to motion picture theatres, the company claims, the equipment is leased for a term of years to an individual theatre. A transfer of the equipment to another theatre, the company indicates, may be undertaken only by mutual consent—in other words, with the authorization of Western Electric.

The equipment in question was originally installed in the Strand theatre, Greensville, Pa., the operators of which subsequently filed a petition in bankruptcy. Following a sheriff's sale of the equipment, among other effects, to meet rent in arrears, the equipment was acquired by A. W. Gibbs for his Gibbs theatre.

Western Electric's suit claims infringement of 29 patents, and contends that use of the equipment in any but the Strand theatre is a violation of its patent rights. This suit is the first of its kind in which Western Electric has engaged.

Fox Theatre Trustee Upheld; Sue William Fox for Million

The Continental Bank and Trust Company was upheld in New York supreme court last week in its management of the Fox Theatre property in Brooklyn, after the Flatbush Avenue and Nevins Street Company had defaulted on a $6,000,000 bond issue. Justice Schmuck denied an application of Louis Grocco, bondholder, to oust the trustee and appoint a new trustee.

Also in supreme court last week, William Fox was sued for $1,000,000 on his guarantee to that extent that the Fox Theatres Corporation would carry out the terms of a contract made in March, 1927, with Herbert Lubin for the purchase of 750,000 shares of the Roxy Circuit, Inc., and $2,500,000 of debentures of that corporation. Payments were to be made in yearly installments. A default in payments due last March is the basis of the suit. The Chicago Title and Trust Company, holding the interests of the transaction, is the plaintiff.

Will Rogers Signs New Fox Contract

Will Rogers has signed a new contract to make four more pictures for Fox Films. "Jublio" will be the first.

FRENCH QUOTA DECREE HITS U. S. PRODUCERS

New Regulations Require That "Dubbing" Be Done in France; American Film Interests in Protest; Censorship Included

American producers are seriously affected by the new French quota, officially declared in effect last week by the Minister of Education in Paris. The decree, retroactive to July 1, will run to July 1, 1933.

"Dubbed" pictures are particularly affected. Under the new regulation, all "dubbing" of foreign language pictures must be done in France. In addition, foreign language films may be shown in only five theatres in the Paris district and five other theatres in France.

American film interests in Paris are understood protesting the imposition of the decree to governmental officials. An official communique stated: "It has been decided, instead of fixed regulation, to introduce continuous daily surveillance of the market, acting as the circumstances require."

Censorship Included

Censorship of all importations is also contemplated in the decree. A statement says: "Certain countries by their methods of production, or the extent of their market, could annihilate or at least compromise the French industry if the government did not reserve the possibility of safeguarding French producers."

"The public order which necessitates exclusion of certain films contrary to the morals or prejudicial to the good name of the country is no less concerned than the defense of our motion picture art," the government indicated in officially announcing the decree.

There is a certain amount of agitation gathering force in Washington for retaliatory measures by the American government, it is understood. The suggestion has been made that similar importation restriction be imposed against French gowns and perfumes.

MGM will perhaps be most seriously affected by the French quota, since the company "dubs" dialogue for its foreign versions, including French, in Hollywood. A majority of the other major distributors "dub" their foreign language versions in the country concerned.

Substance of the Decree

The text of the new film regulations appeared in the Journal Official on July 29, in the form of nine articles. The substance of these articles is as follows:

Article 1. The regulations are applicable for the period from July 1, 1932 to June 30, 1933.

Article 2. Narrowly defines what constitutes French film.

Articles 3 and 4. Designate categories of films that will be automatically approved for censorship and exhibition without formality, as follows:

French films, as defined in Article 2; also, when produced in countries maintaining no restrictions on French films, all films speaking French language; silent films; newsreels; advertising films; films with musical accompaniment but without spoken text or songs; shorts of less than 900 meters; and all foreign language films with superimposed French titles provided shown in not more than five theatres in the Paris area and five theatres elsewhere in France.

Article 5. The following films may, however, be excepted from the foregoing unrestricted categories and subjected to individual examination:

Films prejudical to the good name of France; dubbed films calculated to lower the esthetic standards or injure national producers by reason of inferior production costs.

Article 6. Films produced in countries maintaining restrictions against French films or in France by nationals thereof will be treated on the basis of strict reciprocity.

Article 7. Requires all dubbing to be done in France; also that dubbed films be clearly designated as such when exhibited; also specifying by name the country of origin, the actors seen, the actors heard.

Article 8. The Minister of Education will announce the conditions under which foreign language films may be shown in more than the ten theatres previously mentioned.

Article 9. The Minister of Education is charged with the execution of the foregoing decree.

The regulations are signed only by the Minister of Education and the President of the Republic.

Radio Now Set Internationally

RCA Communications, Inc., has announced the completion of provision of facilities for handling radio programs between the United States and many foreign countries, including England, France, Germany, Switzerland, Italy, Spain, China, Argentina, Dutch East Indies and others.

The company has worked on the development for several years with the National Broadcasting System, and has recently been serving the Columbia Broadcasting System in its international programs, according to W. A. Winterbottom, vice-president and general manager of RCA Communications. He indicated that the recent addition of a special switchboard at the company's central office in New York enables the coordination of foreign programs with the schedules of this country. Experiments by the company's engineers in the specialized field of international broadcasting have been carried on since 1923.

Young and Brent Meet the Press

Loretta Young and George Brent, Warner stars who have been vacationing in New York following a series of personal appearances on Eastern stages, gave a tea for the press at the Hotel Pierre on Tuesday, prior to their departure for the West Coast Wednesday.

Theatres Aiding 'Depression War' In Philadelphia

Plans for a "depression war" in Philadelphia and vicinity were formed at a conference held in Mayor J. Hampton Moore's office last week when leaders of the motion picture industry met with the mayor to outline the campaign. The program is similar to that used during the World War and a squadron of four-minute speakers will appear in 800 theatres in Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware, speaking on different phases of the situation, such as the hoarding of money and the unemployment situation, while motion picture reels carrying appeals to "buy now and secure the future" will be shown in all theatres.

William Goldman, chairman of the committee representing the motion picture industry and general manager of the local Stanley-Warner Company, outlined the purpose of the campaign to the mayor. Following the conference, Mayor Moore issued a proclamation calling upon citizens to enlist in the war against economic depression, stating that he regarded the movement as an important step in the cause of employment and better times. The mayor stated that a committee to direct the campaign would be appointed within a few days.

Among those who conferred with the mayor were, in addition to William Goldman, Abe L. Einstein, also of the Stanley-Warner Company, Lewen Pizor, president, and George Aarons, secretary of the MPTO of Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern N. J. and Delaware; M. S. Landow, president of the Philadelphia Film Board of Trade and Jack H. Greenberg, secretary.

Civic and industrial leaders of Wilmington, Del., expressed their complete endorsement of the movement, and promised Mayor Moore of Philadelphia their complete support.

Balaban and Katz Will Not Demand Blanket Protection

Balaban and Katz, major Chicago circuit, will buy individually for its various houses this season, working out protection in each case, because the circuit believes blanket protection infeasible, according to Barney Balaban.

The circuit will seek blanket protection only over houses charging less than 20 cents. Rapidly changing industry conditions make it impossible to formulate any blanket protection, insists Mr. Balaban. He indicated that the circuit is not opposed to the single feature policy provided competitive situations eliminate the double bill. Mr. Balaban has been engaged in a series of meetings with Chicago owners on protection and double features.

HIGHER MUSIC BROADCAST RATES GOING INTO EFFECT SEPTEMBER 1

1933 Figure 3 Per Cent of Charge Stations Make to Advertisers, 4 Per Cent in 1934 and 5 Per Cent in 1935

New licensing rates for the radio broadcasting of copyrighted music will be put into effect September 1, E. C. Mills, general manager of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, announced this week.

The new licensing fees will be based on a percentage of the total revenue obtained by radio stations from time sold to commercial advertisers. During 1933 the American Society will ask 3 per cent of the charge which radio stations make to advertisers; during 1934, the rate will be advanced to 4 per cent, and for 1935, and thereafter, a permanent rate of 5 per cent becomes effective.

Contracts by which Electrical Research Products, Inc., is authorized to act as intermediary between motion picture producers and the society in the recording of copyrighted music for the screen and the collection of copyright fees will expire on September 5. Negotiations are now being conducted for a renewal of the contract to continue Erpi's performance of this service which, it is said, is rendered on a cost basis.

Mr. Mills said that broadcasters who do not subscribe to these terms will not be permitted to play copyrighted music.

The Society's former licensing terms for radio stations involved a fixed fee determined according to the power of the individual broadcasting station, the population within its radius and the amount of commercial time sold by the station. During recent years these fees have averaged in the neighborhood of $900,000 annually, whereas $3,000,000 would have been produced on the basis of commercial time sold last year had the 3 per cent rate been in effect.

Biggest User

"Developments in the music world since 1924," said Mr. Mills, "have made radio the biggest user of copyrighted music, although it remains one of the smallest sources of revenue for authors, composers and publishers.

"In 1924 radio broadcasters contended they were not performing copyrighted music for profit, during their efforts to contest attempts to license them. The U. S. district court for the eastern district of New York denied this contention, holding that music broadcasting was a performance for profit, and this decision was later upheld by several other courts in deciding suits which were brought to test the earlier decision."

"Radio broadcasters," he said, "then sought to obtain amendments to the copyright status but were not successful, and thereafter the American Society began to license radio stations for the performance of copyrighted music. Radio, at that time, was just a by-product of performing rights, but it quickly became important when it supplanted the piano and phonograph in the home, curtailing much of the revenue of composers from these sources.

Composers' Revenues Off

"In later years, the closing of theatres and the decreasing use of orchestras by ballrooms and restaurants lowered composers' revenues further. At the same time radio was demanding eight times as much music as ever before, due to the fact that the average life of a song after broadcasting became popular was only 90 days, whereas formerly it had been 18 months. Throughout this period the composers' revenue from radio stations was only $900,000 annually, and this sum had to be divided among all authors, composers and publishers' societies the world over."

The new rate schedule, Mr. Mills said, will effect smaller performing payments for 310 radio stations, and substantially larger ones for more than 100 stations. Statistics show, he said, that in 1931 radio stations sold $75,000,000 worth of time to commercial advertisers; that radio manufacturers sold $309,000,000 worth of radio sets, and that manufacturers of radio station apparatus sold $20,000,000 worth of installations.

"Over $400,000,000 worth of business," Mr. Mills said, "was done through the medium of radio broadcasting, using copyrighted music primarily. For the right to use this music radio broadcasters paid the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers less than $1 out of every $400."

Mr. Mills said that in view of these facts there was little likelihood that the American Society would modify terms of its new rate schedule. Broadcasters who do not subscribe to the new schedule will be obliged to perform uncopyrighted music only, or else retain their own composers. He believes it probable that both procedures will be used to some extent and said that the American Society would not attempt to influence or oppose any such course of action adopted by the broadcasters.

New Cell Ready in England

Western Electric plans to place on the market in England shortly what is described as an improved photo-electric cell, an all-British product, according to information from London. A caesium cell, it is said to be an improvement over the potassium type now in use, in that it has greater sensitivity. The caesium cell has been in use in the United States for several years. Patent difficulties are said to have delayed its introduction in England.

Gaumont British Backing Welsh Pearson in England

Gaumont British is behind a refinancing plan for Welsh Pearson, Ltd., former British producer, according to advices from London. Welsh Pearson has been assigned three first rank pictures for distribution through the Gaumont subsidiary.

To Sign Papers In Cleveland Suit

Independent exhibitors of Cleveland and distributors are in substantial agreement on the terms of settlement of the Cleveland zoning suit which has been pending against exchanges, according to Samuel Horwitz, counsel for the exhibitors, while in New York early this week.

The papers embodying the agreement were submitted to Gabriel L. Hess, counsel for the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, on Tuesday for the final approval of distributors. It is expected they will be signed by both parties by the end of the week.

Telfair Knight Returns to Peacock's Shanghai Offices

During his visit in New York, Mr. Knight worked out a new financial structure for his company in cooperation with the directors. He also negotiated a contract with RKO Radio Pictures for distribution of Radio product in the Chinese territory. Mr. Knight took with him a print of Frank Buck's "Bring 'Em Back Alive" for prerelease in Shanghai.

Wisconsin Lawmakers Get Blue Law Repeal Bill in '33

A bill for repeal of the Wisconsin blue law will be introduced when the state legislature again goes into session on January 1, 1933. The legislature has not met since the blue law was voted down by statewide referendum. In the HERALD's survey (July 23 issue) of legislative activities of the first six months of the year, the Wisconsin situation was summarized as follows: "Citizens voted to repeal the state blue laws and the subject was referred to the legislature, which has not taken any action."

Sam Katz to New York

Sam Katz, Paramount executive, leaves the Coast on Friday in Hal Roach's plane, accompanied by Edward Hatrick. They will fly to Chicago, from which point Mr. Katz will continue to New York by train. He is expected to arrive on Sunday. It is anticipated that he will return to the Coast shortly.

New Detroit House Opens

Detroit's newest motion picture theatre, the Carlton, recently opened. Philip Gorelick, of Regal Pictures Exchange, is owner but the house will be operated under lease to John Igna. The Carlton seats 900. It marks the second theatre built in the city during the past two seasons.

WRITER SEES ECONOMY IN STORY PURCHASES

MGM Chief Scenarist Foresees Improved Picture Quality by Careful Selection; Six Companies Buy Twelve in July

Improved picture quality and important economies in story buying activities are foreseen by C. Gardner Sullivan, executive scenarist with MGM, as a result of the more careful selection of story material now being exercised by large producing companies.

Mr. Sullivan attributes the smaller total of monthly story buys this summer to the new consideration being given the purchase of production material. During July, a total of only twelve stories were purchased for production by six companies, and this number compares with purchases recorded during several preceding months.

"Stories are no longer purchased merely to keep some other company from landing them," Mr. Sullivan said. "At no time in the history of the cinema has such detailed consideration been given stories up for purchase, and before any deal is closed nowadays the producer has a definite person in mind for the lead."

He pointed out that when curtailments became necessary in Hollywood, studios found their vaults filled with costly story material which there will never be any chance of converting into pictures during existing conditions.

"Stories are selected now as they are needed," Mr. Sullivan said, "and only those that are perfect from every angle ever get past the reading stage. The result is that theatre-goers will see an improved product this fall."

The twelve story buys reported by production companies during the month of July were:

MGM

"The White Sisters," play and novel, by F. Marion Crawford.

"The Painted Veil," magazine story, by W. Somerset Maugham.

"The Lady," a play, by Martin Brown.

"Brief Rapture," a novel, by Polan Banks.

Paradise Pictures, Inc.

"Step Children," an original story, by Alec Moss.

Paramount

"The Shining Shark," story, by Vicki Baum.

RKO Radio

"The Sun Also Rises," novel, by Ernest Hemingway.

Universal Pictures

"She," novel, by Rider Haggard.

Warner-First National

"Daylight," original story, by John Cornwall.

"Wax Works," play, by Charles S. Belden.

"Women in Prison," play, by Dorothy Mackaye and Carleton Miles.

"The Lowdown," original story, by Houston Branch.

FRANK C. WALKER

Free-Lancing Is Boon to Studios

"The growing trend toward free-lancing among players of the first rank has created an open market which offers producers bigger and better casts than have ever before been available to them," said Joe Brandt, president of World Wide Pictures, now on the Coast. He leaves for New York on Friday following production conferences.

"The system is profitable to both players and producers, not only insuring stars with drawing power, but also highly competent players for the supporting cast, a very important factor in production. On the other hand, seasoned character players find they are sufficiently in demand to make the free-lance system profitable.

"With so many splendid players in the open market, including not only popular marquee names, but brilliant character performers, it is possible for companies which do not have players consistently under contract, but cast productions individually, to offer perfectly-balanced casts consisting of well-known leads, and highly capable players in the secondary roles."

Universal Six Months' Loss is $340,307.73

Universal Pictures Company, Inc., and subsidiaries last week reported loss of $340,307.73 for the six months ended April 30, 1932, after all charges, including $321,909.57 depreciation on capital assets. The statements indicated total current and working assets at $8,433,200.78. Current liabilities were listed at $1,929,556.50.

Frank C. Walker New Democratic Party Treasurer

Frank C. Walker, for the past seven years general counsel for the M. E. Comerford motion picture interests in New York, Pennsylvania and New England, has been appointed treasurer of the Democratic National Committee.

Mr. Walker, equally prominent in political and motion picture circles, who has been serving as assistant treasurer since the meeting of the National Committee in Chicago recently, assumes the post left vacant since the resignation of James W. Gerard last spring. Mr. Walker also acted as pre-convention treasurer for the Roosevelt organization.

James A. Farley, national chairman, expressed the gratification of himself and Governor Roosevelt at the acceptance of the post by Mr. Walker. He said:

"I think the Democratic National Committee is extremely fortunate in securing Mr. Walker's services as the new treasurer. A close personal friend of Governor Roosevelt for many years, Mr. Walker acted as treasurer for the very informal pre-convention activities of Governor Roosevelt's friends and has been at all times one of those consulted regarding the strategy of that campaign."

Born in Plymouth, Pa., Mr. Walker's family moved to Butte, Mont., while he was a boy. He was graduated in 1907 from Notre Dame University, of which he is now a trustee. Following graduation, he joined his brother, J. T. Walker, a state senator, in the practice of law at Butte. Engaging in politics there, he was at one time district attorney and served as a member of the state legislature while a resident of Butte. A leader of that session of the legislature which first elected Thomas J. Walsh to the United States Senate, Mr. Walker has for years enjoyed a close friendship with Senator Walsh, as well as with Senator Burton K. Wheeler, also of Montana.

Mr. Walker left Montana in 1925, but without severing his connection with the Montana law firm, to assume the position of general counsel with the M. E. Comerford interests, locating at the New York headquarters. Mr. Comerford is an uncle of Mr. Walker.

Married to the former Miss Hallie Boucher of Butte, Mr. Walker has two children, Thomas J. and Laura Hallie. They are residents of New York.

Paramount Arranges Payment

Paramount-Public Corporation last week deposited with the Chase National Bank, New York, trustee, funds in payment of the coupon due August 1, 1932, on its 5½ per cent gold debentures.

Columbia Declares Dividend

Columbia Pictures on Wednesday declared a regular quarterly dividend of 75 cents per share on the preferred stock, payable September 1 to stockholders of record August 18.

SAYS PICTURE THEMES REDUCED ATTENDANCE

Mistaken Policy Has Taught Public That Entertainment Has Vanished, Declares Floyd St. John, Coast Distributor

The basic cause for lowered theatre attendance is the fact that the industry in general has been turning to "themes based on sex appeal," with the result that the public has come to learn that entertainment is going from the motion picture theatre, says Floyd St. John, owner of the Cooperative Film Exchange with headquarters in San Francisco.

Mr. St. John, for sixteen years a distributor of independent productions on his own account, has a sizeable following on the West Coast, and keeps his ear close to the ground of exhibitor opinion. He has his idea of the problem of the industry, and his words have a bite to them.

"The huge shrinkage in the motion picture theatre attendance has a cause far beyond present business conditions," said Mr. St. John. "The president of one of the producer-distributor-exhibitor organizations has been quoted as saying that the 40 per cent shrinkage in theatre attendance brings many of the bigger producing companies to the verge.

"Entertainment Has Vanished"

"Without going into house cleaning economic problems of not only production but theatre costs and high-geared, high-priced, high-pressure distributing organizations, the fundamental cause of the shrinkage in theatre attendance is due to the picture industry generally catering to the "themes based on sex appeal until the paying patrons have learned that entertainment has vanished from the picture theatre.

"The over-capitalized theatres, in their attempt to keep open, have demanded of their publicity departments such exploitation as would bring in the business, and to enumerate a few examples clearly illustrating how far that demand has been complied with, peruse some of the following lines in our daily newspapers, which show the trend of the times:

" 'Havoc.' 'Taunted by her smile — haunted by her kisses—men lied, stole, betrayed, and killed—in an unholy struggle for the soul of this woman.'

" 'Shanghai Madness.' 'Shanghai—glamorous, perilious, treacherous—luring a beautiful girl to explore its evil heart and all but destroyed her.'

" 'Mazda Lane.' 'The glitter—the glamour —the laughter—the tears of Broadway, where girls with wishbones wear sables and girls with backbones wear rags.'

"These examples are neither outstanding nor exceptional. The paying public has soured on such trash.

"Motion pictures have possessed quality of such huge magnitude that they have educated and entertained the millions of not only America, but the world. That they will continue to do so as long as the sun shines is undebatable. When the socalled fifth industry becomes the filth industry, no wonder it is shaken to its very foundations.

"When the screen turns back to entertainment for the masses, education for the majority, and a palace of amusement for all, just that quick will it bring back its just patronage.

"Some producers are making an honest effort to make clean, wholesome pictures, pictures which can be viewed by the entire family, but unfortunately, these are not in the majority.

"If our exchange could get fifty-two pictures a year as full of entertainment and as clean as "County Fair," we would soon be in command of the picture business here. It follows that other distributors throughout the world would be in the same position.

"It is not lavish sets, scantily dressed women, sex appeal, that create pictures and entertainment. It is good, wholesome stories of love, romance, travel, with plenty of action that will make the dimes and the dollars come back to the box office and produce once more the prosperous condition to which the motion picture industry is rightfully entitled."

Universal Shifts Personnel In Western Sales Division

Universal has made several personnel changes in the western division, under E. T. Gomersall, as a result of the resignation of Kenneth Hodkinson, San Francisco manager. Barney Rose, Denver manager, has assumed Hodkinson's post, and is replaced in Denver by Jack Langan, former Sioux Falls manager.

Eddie Gruenberg, Sioux Falls salesman, has been promoted to Langan's place. William Baker, St. Louis manager, has transferred to Detroit on special assignment; J. E. Garrison, former Minneapolis manager, is the new St. Louis manager, and Frank Mantzke, Minneapolis salesman, has been promoted to manager there.

Wilson Heads Publicity For Reliance Pictures

Harry D. Wilson, formerly handling publicity for the old First National Pictures, Jackie Coogan Productions, United Artists and the Edwin Carewe films starring Dolores Del Rio, has joined Edward Small, independent producer heading Reliance Pictures Corporation.

Mr. Small plans the production of a feature, with the chief role centering about Joe Palooka, newspaper comic strip figure originated by Ham Fisher. George Bancroft's future film appearance will be made through an association with Mr. Small. Several stories are being considered in the selection of a vehicle for the former Paramount star.

Lee Will Not Direct Gloria Swanson Film

Rowland V. Lee, scheduled to direct Gloria Swanson's first British film, has terminated his connection with Miss Swanson and has joined Alexander Korda to direct two features.

YOUNGCLAUS RULING "OBSTACLE" TO AMICABLE SOLUTION OF ZONING

Van Hyning Asks If "Misleading" Reports Declaring Protection Illegal "Are Intended To Smother Independents"

Declarations that the federal court decision rendered recently in the Youngclaus zoning and protection suit will react unfavorably toward exhibitors generally were made late last week by two important MPTOA state units.

The decision places a serious obstacle in the way of arriving at a solution of national zoning and protection problems, according to E. Van Hyning, chairman of the national zoning committee of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America and president of the Kansas-Missouri state organization.

C. E. Williams, president of the MPTO of Nebraska and western Iowa, said that "the actual effect of this suit will no doubt be to delay materially any organized effort being made to reasonably control or limit protection for a long time. Is this of any benefit to the small independent exhibitor anywhere?"

No Appeal Will Be Taken

No appeal of the federal court decision will be taken by any of the defendant exchanges and distributors who were parties to the suit, according to Bruce Bromley, principal defense attorney.

"There is nothing to be gained by appealing Judge Munger's decision," Mr. Bromley said. "Distributors were merely enjoined by it from enforcing the one zoning plan which was found to be objectionable. Zoning and protection themselves were not pronounced illegal in the decision and are still applicable and enforceable in the territory."

Terminating months of litigation, Judge T. C. Munger in United States court at Omaha ruled early in July that group protection or zoning is illegal, but he did not undertake to adjudicate the right of individual distributors to grant protection in dealing separately with exhibitors. The decision concluded the suit brought by William N. Youngclaus, an independent exhibitor of Madison, Neb., against all distributors and exchanges which signed a group zoning agreement in July, 1930, for the Omaha territory. A permanent injunction was granted. Allied States Association immediately, and on occasions since the decision has declared it to be a victory. Allied's unit in Iowa and Nebraska backed Mr. Youngclaus in the action.

Mr. Van Hyning, in current statement issued from Kansas City, indicates that the stand taken by the Allied Theatre Owners of Iowa and Nebraska was directly at variance with the intent of the zoning plan as negotiated and drafted in 1930 through the efforts of the Nebraska MPTO. He declares reports that the court held protection was illegal are misleading and asks whether they "are intended to smother the independent exhibitors who contributed cash to finance this litigation and become inquisitive as to what they got for their money."

At present, Mr. Van Hyning is attempting to renew zoning for 1932-33 in Kansas City territory through exhibitor negotiations with distributors.

His statement, which may be accepted as representing the sentiments of the MPTOA, follows in part:

"The decision does not declare whether or not a lawful agreement can be made to limit protection in the form of a uniform zoning plan, which is the particular question in which intelligent exhibitors are interested. The court apparently assumes the right of a separate distributor to grant any amount of protection to a theatre by private contract. He did not 'hold that protection was illegal,' as certain interests seem to insist. Quite the contrary.

"The only probable result of the decision will be to effectively block any further organized effort to reduce or limit protection and to remove protection abuses until the case is finally determined on appeal. In the meantime the complex and troublesome problems of protection and run are getting no better fast. Nothing constructive towards their solution is offered by this prolonged litigation. Its only effect has been to block any real progress in the way of practical self-control. Independent exhibitors will place the responsibility for the confusion and disruption of orderly progress on the false leadership that stirs up these devasting controversies with no honest intention of improving conditions for the small independent exhibitors.

"The Uniform Zoning Plans that were worked out in certain territories were definitely abandoned by the distributors over two years ago because of this and other litigation and agitation by a few socalled exhibitor leaders. How they can honestly oppose the only method ever suggested for definitely limiting the protection of the larger theatres over the smaller houses perhaps they can explain to their dues-paying members. The local exhibitor organizations affiliated with the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America and many others have continuously urged the distributors to resume these local negotiations and extend their active cooperation in solving the problems and removing the abuses in protection through uniform zoning. The need for this self-control by open negotiations is not changed in any way by this decision; it just places another unnecessary obstacle in the way of a final solution."

Charges Attempt To "Mislead"

Mr. Williams also referred to "a studied attempt in some quarters to mislead exhibitors as to what was decided by the court in the Youngclaus case, particularly that 'protection was held illegal' in this decision." He said a reading of the court's opinion will show the court 'held' quite the contrary: that the court assumed 'the right of the distributors separately and individually to license the exhibition of pictures by contracts giving to the exhibitor the exclusive right of exhibition for a period of time.'" According to Mr. Williams, the injunction "does not prevent or even limit in any way the amount of protection that may be granted by private contract."

"This decision can have no immediate effect," he said. "Over a year ago the distributors generally announced that they were withdrawing participation in all uniform zoning plans because of this litigation. As a result we understand they were generally abandoned; any uniform zoning plan depends ultimately on the active cooperation of the distributors for its effectiveness. The actual effect of this suit will no doubt be to delay materially any organized effort being made to reasonably control or limit protection for a long time. Is this of any benefit to the small independent exhibitor anywhere?

"We are actually back to where we were three years ago, before zoning negotiations were initiated, with the larger theatres bargaining privately with the distributors, forever increasing protection, playing one distributor against another to gain competitive advantage in protection and run. When the smaller subsequent runs and adjacent theatres deal for pictures, they will find the prior-run protection already fixed by private contract with the distributor, to which the subsequent-run exhibitor was not a party and which neither he nor the distributor can change."

GROUP URGES UNIFORM SLOGAN FOR THEATRES

Uniform use of a brief, forceful slogan by all theatres in their advertising is the suggestion offered by the Independent Theatre Supply Dealers Association, with headquarters in Kansas City. Repetition of a slogan such as "See a Movie Today" would have a beneficial cumulative effect, the Association believes, as a constant reminder of the enjoyment the screen affords.

The trade press could cooperate by inviting slogan suggestions, the Association points out, indicating that the most effective slogan might be best obtained in this way. The Association is further of the opinion that the trade press could perform an important service in acquainting the exhibitor with the use of the adopted slogan in theatre advertising.

"Use of such a slogan should entail small cost, if any, as it could be inserted in regular theatre advertisements without the requirements of extra space, and would not interfere with the theatre in its effort to sell its current attraction first," according to R. G. Tannehill, secretary of the Association. Tannehill says a slogan embodied in theatre advertising "would by repetition value make all theatre advertising cooperative toward generally increased attendance."

Deal On to Buy RKO Interest in Trans-Lux Corp.

A deal for the purchase of RKO's 50 per cent stock interest in Trans-Lux Corporation is expected to be consummated within the next few days, according to Percy N. Furber, chairman of the board of Trans-Lux Daylight Screen Corp.

"RKO has obligations of its own which will not permit it to participate in the expansion plans which have been formulated by Trans-Lux, so Trans-Lux will carry on its development program alone following the purchase of the RKO stock interest," Mr. Furber said.

The Trans-Lux newsreel theatre on Broadway was closed last Friday for an indefinite period. The second New York Trans-Lux theatre, at 58th street and Lexington avenue, is now being operated on a combination program policy, exhibiting feature pictures in addition to newsreels and short subjects. A product deal will be continued by Trans-Lux with RKO, by which the latter will supply Trans-Lux with newsreels and short subjects.

Publix and Arthur In 4-City Pooling

Terms covering a four-city pooling of theatres have been agreed on between Publix and Harry Arthur Theatres Corporation, of New Haven, Conn. The deal, which is expected to be consummated soon, involves five Publix theatres in New Haven, Hartford, Worcester and Springfield and all of the Arthur houses in the same cities.

Arthur Theatres Corporation assumes management of the Publix theatres under the terms.

Debrie Reorganizes American Branch of Equipment Concern

Andre Debrie, head of the French camera and equipment company bearing his name, has returned to France after reorganizing his American corporation, Andre Debrie, Inc., of America, which is now fully controlled and operated under the direction of Mr. Debrie from Paris.

The New York office, at 115 West 45th Street, is in charge of H. R. Kossman. A service department has been installed in the New York office to service all Debrie equipment in the country. A Coast office, for which Mr. Debrie arranged on a visit there, will be definitely announced shortly.

Omaha and Des Moines Publix theatre division offices were combined this week under Evert R. Cummings, division manager at Omaha. Territory which comprises all of Nebraska and Iowa includes about 40 houses and will necessitate a new alignment of districts.

TORONTO MADE SCENE OF QUOTA ARGUMENT

Cooper Answers Boylan's Outspoken Championing of British Films; Kearney Asks Equality; Film Week Dropped

by W. M. Gladish
Canadian Correspondent

Two weeks of the Imperial Economic Conference have passed and more of the battle with regard to Empire film quotas and the encouragement of British films has taken place at Imperialistic Toronto than at the Conference in Ottawa itself. There has been much talk in hotel rooms and offices and in the newspapers but there is not the slightest official indication that the subject of British films has been mentioned once behind the guarded doors of Conference assembly. But everybody has said that the discussions will occupy a period of a month or six weeks and a lot of things can and will happen before the Empire statesmen sing the National Anthem in farewell.

Insofar as the preliminaries are concerned, Major J. C. Boylan, chairman of the Ontario Board of Motion Picture Censors, has entered the lists as the one outspoken Canadian champion of British film and he has done so with a flourish of much newspaper publicity. After criticising the resolutions of independent exhibitors against any form of compulsory film buying in Canada, Major Boylan got under the skin of the independents by declaring that "the best elements of the Canadian public are calling for more British-made motion pictures." This brought forth heated replies in which it was suggested that, as a public servant, Mr. Boylan should stick to his censoring duties and leave trade developments to those directly concerned, or words to that effect. One of those who took issue with him on a single point was Col. John A. Cooper, president of the Motion Picture Distributors Association, who challenged the necessity of raising censorship fees against British films by Mr. Boylan's board when the latter was showing a good financial profit on its operations. Oscar Hanson, general manager of Allied Exhibitors of Ontario, has been the champion of the independents against quota proposals and against Major Boylan.

Kearney Asks Equality

The British film trade delegate to the Ottawa Conference has been raising considerable attention in Canada in behalf of the British industry through interviews and publicity. He is M. Neville Kearney, whose official title is: Head, Film Industries Department; Secretary, Film Producers Group, Federation of British Industries, London. Mr. Kearney has been pressing for an "equality of market opportunity" for the British producers, but he has said that he does not favor artificial methods of obtaining distribution of British films. He said:

"It is readily recognized that films made for public entertainment must stand or fall on their merits, whatever their origin. All the British producers ask is that British-made pictures shall not, as the result of agreements, financial associations and the direct or indirect foreign control of theatres and theatre circuits, be placed in a position of disadvantage on the screens of the Empire as compared with the foreign product."

Mr. Kearney declared that if artificial barriers prevented the British picture getting an opportunity in British countries, then it was not unreasonable to expect that some suitable section should be taken to break the "vicious circle" shutting Empire entertainment out of sections of the Empire.

Recommended resolutions of the Federation of British Industries on film quota requirements are still before the Imperial Conference, but there is yet no announcement of the appointment of a sub-committee of the Conference to deal with the question. When this takes place, there is a probability that representative men of the film trade in Canada will be called to Ottawa to offer their views. In this connection Mr. Kearney said that the three appointed representatives of the British industry are awaiting the call from Ottawa and will proceed from London without delay. These are Isidore Ostrer, C. M. Woolf and John Maxwell.

Film Week Idea Falls Flat

Insofar as Canadian trade matters are concerned, a proposal for an Empire Film Week at the Conference, when British films would be featured on the screen of the Dominion, has fallen flat. Canadian exhibitors hesitated because of the political aspects of the quota issue. In Ottawa several independent and circuit theatres have been making a play with British pictures but, with the Canadian capital somewhat crowded with Empire representatives, this has obviously been a matter of good local business. As expected, some newspaper editors of Canada have raised the patriotic angle in discussing the film situation, but there are just as many editors who are questioning the advisability of any compulsory buying for any business.

Pathe Exchange Net for 26 Weeks Equal to $2,146.40

Pathe Exchange, Inc., and subsidiaries report a total net profit of $2,146.40 for the 26 weeks ended July 2, 1932. Total net income for the period was $290,185.56, with deductions for administrative and selling expenses, interest on funded debt, provision for bad debts and depreciation put at $288,039.16.

The period is divided into two divisions of 13 weeks each. During the first, the net profit was $36,028.98 and in the second the net loss was $33,882.58. The report notes that during the period involved expenses included a substantial amount of non-recurring expense on litigation.

HOLLYWOOD PREVIEWS

Warners' "Life Begins" Is As Outstanding As It Is New, Says Meehan; And There Are Others

by LEO MEEHAN
Hollywood Staff Correspondent

There is no question as to which is the outstanding picture previewed the past week. It is "Life Begins," from the Warner-First National incubator. The last word is used advisedly, for, listen to this, the entire action of the picture takes place in a maternity hospital! It deals with birth, and the tragic consequences which sometimes attend. There never has been a picture remotely resembling it; and possibly for story interest, intense, throbbing drama interlaid with natural comedy (the about-to-become-a-father stuff), there never has been a more gripping picture.

Rumors have been leaking out of the Warner plant these past several weeks to the effect that "Life Begins" was something very unusual, very courageous, daring, sensational. The spontaneous applause which broke out in the preview audience heralded confirmation of previous reports. Women went out with tear-stained faces, men with glistening eyes.

The rather commonplace subject of childbirth has been pretty much taboo in pictures up to now. Here is one to challenge anyone who thinks it is not a screen subject. Don't get the mistaken notion it is clinical, either. It is intensely human, understandable, sincere. The Warner production staff and the Hays office have worried considerably about the possible reaction of censoring bodies. Well, if they don't pass this one and tack a gold star on it, mothers had best quit having babies and studios better begin making Grimm's fairy tales exclusively.

And There's "Horsefeathers"

Still further proof that exhibitors may anticipate better and better product this fall is the latest insane opus from the Marx Brothers, entitled "Horsefeathers." It is uproarious. Paramount, in this number, contributes one of the funniest, nuttiest films ever made. Many who have seen it in preview consider it better than either "Cocoanuts" or "Monkey Business." It certainly is up to standard with those, to say the least for it.

Paramount also previewed the latest Tallulah Bankhead picture during the week, "Devil and the Deep." Outstanding are several sequences which take place in a submarine, not a new locale for picture stuff, but the melodramatic significance of those in this story, together with the expert realism contrived, make them highly entertaining. The picture also marks the return to the screen of Gary Cooper, after many months of rest and foreign travel which extended into darkest Africa. Gary seems to have taken on some polish and sophistication with this world travel. Yet he is handsome as ever, with fine poise, and the role offers opportunities for interesting characterization. Watch a newcomer to Paramount, Charles Laughton. As the insanely jealous husband of Bankhead this fine actor from the stage gives one of the most intriguing screen performances of the year. As for Bankhead, she still is Bankhead, with a better part and better story material this time; but whether she is ever going to make the grade as a screen star is left in doubt.

Real Entertainment

Warners turned loose another real mirth provoker, and one of the first of a series to use the romance and drama of radio for a subject. It is called "Crooner," and features David Manners and Ken Murray as the pioneer of the radio and night club crooners, and his exploitation manager. In a novel manner it shows how band leaders came to use the megaphone to soothe the feminine listeners into the realm of the gaga. And it is all very funny, besides having some snappy music to keep things entertaining.

Jaded reviewers who must see scores and scores of pictures as they are previewed here in Los Angeles from night to night, really are starting out now with pleasant anticipation. Most of them are catching the studio conviction that producers, with their sleeves rolled up, are hammering out real entertainment.

Union Charter Revoked

The charter of Operators' Local 165, Cincinnati, has been revoked and about 12 members, including the officers, expelled by the International. The International took the action, it is claimed, when the local refused to obey orders to withdraw pickets from 30 independent houses in Cincinnati. Clyde Weston, New York representative of the International, is in Cincinnati conducting negotiations.

Leahy Succeeds Sam Jaffe

Fred Leahy has been named production manager at the Paramount Coast studio following the resignation of Sam Jaffe. Richard Johnston has been named assistant to Mr. Leahy, whose post may be made permanent. Jaffe's resignation is said to have been caused by a disagreement with Josef Von Sternberg, director.

An editorial from PRINTERS' INK entitled

"PARASITE MEDIA"

MOTION PICTURE HERALD

1790 BROADWAY NEW YORK CITY

"A man authorized to speak for a great industry which each year invests millions in advertising, in commenting on the rate editorial which appeared in PRINTERS' INK for June 16, was particularly pleased with these questions asked of advertisers:

"How many media are on your list because the publication is a nice fellow?

"How much are you charging up to advertising that should properly go into your charity account or selling expense?

"How much are you squandering in classes of media that have yet to prove their value or because of your president's vanity?

"This close observer of trends and wastes in selling and advertising wants another question asked:

"How much are you spending in parasitical publications which without authority or real standing, representing nobody but their publishers, get advertising from you on false promises and improper methods?

"In a letter reproduced in PRINTERS' INK last week, P. D. Saylor, president of Canada Dry Ginger Ale, Inc., said: "Real reduction in advertising expense can come only when we all make it our business to know more about what we are buying."

"Certainly much money is now being wasted in certain parasite publications which have no real reason for existence. The executive anxious to reduce advertising costs should first look into such wastes. He would then have more money to invest in proved media.

"As George W. Hill, president of the American Tobacco Company, said in PRINTERS' INK in this connection:

"From my point of view proper advertising is cheap — quite cheap enough. The results are what count."

"Advertising, withdrawn from irregular, worthless and parasite media, invested in result-getting space by men who know values thoroughly, is the procedure to which every stockholder is entitled.

SHOWMEN'S REVIEWS

This department deals with new product from the point of view of the exhibitor who is to purvey it to his own public

THE concept of this department is that the exhibitor is concerned not with any critic's idea of "how good?" or "how poor?" but rather with the question of precisely what the product is and what is to be done with it when and as it is played. The exhibitor, in general, is concerned with the special aspects of strength and of weakness in the product, its appeals and shortcomings, that he may adequately deal with it when he becomes its sponsor to his public. These "review" pages aim to aid the exhibitor as the retailer of the merchandise concerned.—THE EDITOR.

Horsefeathers

(Paramount)

Comedy

When the Four Marx Brothers made "Cocoanuts" and then followed it about a year later with "Monkey Business," every one thought they had about reached the limit in their own peculiar brand of absurd nonsense. Now comes "Horsefeathers" to prove that we all were mistaken.

For sheer foolishness, without any rhyme or reason unless it be to demonstrate that their laugh creating abilities are unlimited, "Horsefeathers" is about six and one-half reels of super-hilarious mirth. The story follows one general nutty trend that is divided into five episodes.

The opening is like the start of an old-time musical comedy, when Groucho arrives to become president of Huxley College. The action is fast and furiously funny, climaxed by the entire student body joining in the chorus of his inaugural song with the dignified, bewhiskered faculty becoming the dance ensemble.

Next is Harpo as a dog catcher, Harpo who has two prop lampposts, a big one to lure the big dogs and a tiny one for the little fellows.

The picture jumps into the speakeasy episode and more nonsensical fun, then to the apartment of the vampirish college widow with the four brothers traveling at a dizzying pace. Following this there is a side-issue kidnaping sequence, when the two roughnecks that Harpo and Chico are supposed to shanghai turn the tables on them. Then comes the great football game between Huxley and Darwin that is one continuous howl.

In "Horsefeathers," your audiences will find everything they want in the comedy line. Some of it is quite spicy, particularly Groucho's dialogue and songs. It hardly seems necessary to tell your patrons that this is a comedy picture, but to get over the full idea tell them in all your advertising and publicity copy that you cannot find adjectives silly enough to describe this whirlwind of foolishness. Naturally you will feature the four brothers as a unit and there is no necessity to try to individualize on personalities.

You can safely put your personal endorsement on "Horsefeathers," guaranteeing it as one of the best and funniest pictures of the season. If you go in for ballyhoo, there is no limit to the nutty stunts you can concoct. The picture is suitable for all types of audiences and it would be wise to start talking about it several weeks in advance. You can well afford to spend a little extra money advertising it, for "Horsefeathers" should be a box office bell-ringer in every house it plays.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Crooner

(First National)

Comedy-Drama

Here's a neat radioland yarn that's full of comedy, yet at the same time a story that contains healthy human interest. It's timely in subject, it should have plenty of appeal for the women folk, but likewise is the kind of entertainment that should please both sexes and all ages.

Briefly, the story relates the career of the leader of a college band that is about to go on the rocks. Suddenly the boy discovers that the ladies go wild about his singing. His sweetheart is always trying to encourage him and when his talent is revealed, she hires a high-pressure publicity man to put him across. The P. A.'s personal opinion doesn't prevent him raving about the crooner in the press. Before long the boy is the rage of the nation. Then, with affluence, he becomes swellheaded and takes a nose dive. His army of fans deserts him fast. Only the girl remains in his corner. He sinks to oblivion, blowing a horn in a third-rate cabaret. There, his lesson learned, he lays his plans to climb the ladder of fame again.

With plenty of new names that are now beginning to be box office, plus a story that is essentially a comedy, but also has more than its share of drama, plus the inside stuff on how the power of the printed word will make almost anybody famous, together with the novelty of how things are conducted in a big national broadcasting station, you shouldn't have much difficulty in selling this picture.

For your own information, Ken Murray, as the press agent, has a role that practically enables him to steal the picture. His brand of wisecracking will bring plenty of laughs.

The title is sufficiently alluring to enable you to stir up plenty of interest. If you have any kind of a tie-up with a radio station, don't neglect to take advantage of it, using the song and musical numbers from the picture. Also, if you can arrange to broadcast some of the numbers over a loudspeaker system to the sidewalk in front of your theatre, that will help. The picture is clean and clever throughout, is suitable for all kinds of audiences and is okay for children.

Put your shoulder to the wheel on this one, making use of all the uptodate showmanship you possess. Get as many people in to see your opening performances as you possibly can and the box offices' grosses should be a pleasant surprise.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by First National. Directed by Lloyd Bacon. Based on a story by Rian James. Screen play by Charles Kenyon. Photographed by Robert Kurrle. Film editor, B. Bretherton. Release date, August 20, 1932. Running time, 70 minutes.

Devil and the Deep

(Paramount)

Drama

This picture is another version of the eternal triangle—a jealous husband who is a madman, a wife who has always been true, and a man who did not know she was married. It is climaxed by sequences that are decidedly unusual.

It presents Tallulah Bankhead in what is perhaps the best role of her screen career. It marks the return of Gary Cooper after a prolonged absence. And it is the screen debut of Charles Laughton. They are your names, and although Laughton is a newcomer and unknown to screen fans, he will be known after they have seen the "Devil and the Deep," for in his strong character role he practically takes the picture away from the two leads.

The locale is a naval base on the shores of Africa, where Sturm is the commander of a submarine. He is intensely jealous of his wife, who he believes is continually having affairs with other men. It is evident that he is mistaken, but he treats her with insane cruelty and drives her out of the house. She meets Lieutenant Semper, but does not know that he is a naval officer. Nor does he know that she is the wife of his commanding officer. They spend a night on the desert. Sturm is vividly suspicious. He knows that his wife is slipping from him.

The submarine is about to sail. Mrs. Sturm knows that her husband, in his mad jealousy, is planning something terrible. She rushes to the submarine to warn Semper. Sturm traps them in his cabin. Deliberately he causes a collision and the submarine sinks. Semper, convincing the crew that the commander had gone insane and had done this to wipe them all off the earth, takes command. Calling upon all the latest submarine life saving devices he sends the crew, Mrs. Sturm and himself to safety, while Sturm perishes.

Here are the points which you must consider in this picture. Despite a great ballyhoo campaign, Tallulah Bankhead has yet failed to show real strength at the box office. Nor has Gary Cooper in his last pictures been any too hot. The other names, including Laughton, don't mean a thing.

But, as previously pointed out, Miss Bankhead has a role which permits her to be more effective than ever before—not brilliant, but rather, effective, in her peculiar type. She supplies the drama that Cooper makes romantic. Whether you can build on Gary Cooper depends on how he has gone over with your patrons before. You can tell them this, that in "Devil and the Deep" he is more dynamic, more real and pleasing than he has been in a long time.

Laughton is an actor whom your patrons will be talking about when they leave the theatre. Although it hardly would be logical to play him up over the leads, the more attention you can concentrate on him the more interest you will create in this picture.

From the story angle you want to ring in the idea of men trapped on the floor of the ocean in a submarine by a madman who would sacrifice them all to revenge himself on his wife and her lover. These climatic sequences are spectacular, with a lot of undersea photography, showing the crew using modern apparatus to escape from the sunken "sub."

The picture is adult entertainment, but it is going to take plenty of work to put it across to much better than average figures.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Downstairs

(MGM)

Comedy-Drama

For about two and a half reels this looks like the kind of vehicle that would restore John Gilbert to the popularity he enjoyed in the silent days. Gay, snappy, brilliant, with clever dialogue and smart sequences, it is at first a romantic comedy. Then it becomes tragic drama. A pleasing Gilbert dominates it at the start, then a grim, straight-laced Paul Lukas takes charge and carries it to the finish.

The story concerns the servants of an aristocratic family in Austria. The locale is mainly the servants' quarters—downstairs. Karl arrives to take the post of chauffeur. It's the wedding day of Albert, the head butler, and Anna, a parlor maid. Gilbert is a romantic fellow, always on the lookout for a pretty girl to love. The fact that Anna is just married doesn't prevent him from playing up to her. He and Karl are friends. He is also a pal of every other servant in the house, particularly Sophie, a cook, who has been saving her wages for many years.

When Albert discovers Karl getting too friendly he fires him, but Karl has something on the baroness and is able to hold his job. The baron decides on a fishing trip. Albert must go. He warns Karl to keep away from his wife. Karl tells Anna that Albert told him to keep her company and he wines and dines her in a little inn. It's all clever up to this point, entertainment that would click with the majority of fans.

But when Albert returns unexpectedly from the fishing trip and learns about the party of Karl and Anna, the picture turns dramatic. He seeks a way to get rid of this presumptuous chauffeur. The occasion comes as the baron and baroness prepare for a hunting party.

In the wine cellar Karl tries to pursuade Anna to run off with him. He has bilked Sophie of all her money. Albert discovers them. He and Karl fight and wreck the cellar. Karl makes up to him. Together they drink a bottle of wine. There's another fight, and after Karl knocks out Albert with a bottle he flees—only to fall into a vat of wine that Albert has ordered Francois to fill. Karl drowns.

Because of the construction of the picture it is not going to be easy to devise the selling campaign that would have been a cinch had the story continued in its initial vein. Then you would have had a John Gilbert that you really could shout about. As it is, it would seem that a line carrying the idea of Gilbert as both a gay, romantic hero and a ruthless love pirate would be the most proper approach. Don't get too enthusiastic about him, but don't forget there are a lot of women with whom Gilbert is still a favorite. Likewise, sell Lukas to the women, but don't create the impression that this is entirely a woman's picture. It might be of some assistance in your campaign to stress the fact that Gilbert, himself, wrote the original story of "Downstairs." The other names in the cast, Virginia Bruce, Baclanova and Reginald Owen, although they are good in their parts, will not be of much assistance.

The picture is family type entertainment. There is nothing lavish about it, and it would not be well to talk too much about baronesses, countesses, and so on lest your patrons get the idea that it is too toney a piece of film entertainment.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

White Zombie

(United Artists)

Drama

A thrill picture with a somewhat different theme, this independently produced effort offers the exhibitor numerous opportunities for unusual show-selling.

At the outset it is emphatically suggested that the "horror" implication be avoided. There are other angles to be utilized to good effect, without the necessity of splashing "horror" and "monster" all over the campaign. Doing so would probably frighten away a goodly portion of the potential audience.

The title can be made to awaken considerable interest. Briefly, the Zombies, a product of the superstition-ridden island of Haiti, are supposed to be corpses, lifted from the grave, who, minus both soul and mind, respond to the wish of a master influence. They are supposed to be in a "dead-alive" state, under the spell of hypnotism, or something like it. The Haitian law, it is understood, takes some note of such a possibility. Your advertising may well emphasize the questions: "Who are the Zombies?" "Do Zombies really exist?" and the like. Teaser copy of that nature should be effective prior to the opening of the film.

Make every effort to build up an intense curiosity in the why and the what of the theme. Promise something unusual in the nature of a tense and mysterious exposition of a superstition which is deep-seated among the natives of Haiti. Indicate strongly that a girl and a young man, just married, become cruelly enmeshed in the web of superstition, the girl falling under the power of the "White Zombie," played with force by Bela Lugosi, who is called Murder, and under whose will the Zombies work.

There are few cast names of real importance. Lugosi is the best selling name. Madge Bellamy is the girl, Robert Frazer the planter who becomes involved with Lugosi when he attempts to take the girl for himself. John Harron is the young man and Joseph Cawthorn the missionary who finally, aiding Harron, breaks the spell of Lugosi. None, with the possible exception of Cawthorn, offers anything of particular value in the matter of performance. It will be necessary, therefore, to concentrate on the theme and the strange circumstances of its development.

Do not neglect lobby and marquee display designed for the same purpose as the advertising copy. The Rivoli in New York achieved good results and much pedestrian attention from a lobby group acting as the Zombies are said to act.—Aaronson, New York.

Edgar Wallace Story

This will teach America little except that Britain needs directors in order to infuse motion into pictures. A London trade audience agreed that this story, based on Edgar Wallace's stage thriller, turns out all stage and no thrills. Actors are mishandled in some way as to appear always on the meander, just talking lines into the "mike," and never once creating any illusion of anything doing. The reputations of most of the leads leave nothing to account for this lack of conviction, for they have all done work of high calibre in other films.

The story is of Mark McGill (Harold Huth) gang leader, dope smuggler and murderer, who persuades the pretty sister of his dead colleague that it was Inspector Bradley of Scotland Yard who really killed the boy. Li Yoseph, an old crook associate who knows that McGill did the killing, threatens to "spill the beans," so he has a taste of McGill's gun also, and his body is dropped into an underground river. Bradley suspects McGill, and knowing that old Li Yoseph was a spooky individual he decides to play on the fears of McGill by sending mysterious notes to him apparently in the handwriting of Li Yoseph, in which he promises to "return from the dead seeking vengeance."

Meantime the Inspector has fallen in love with the sister, who is likewise thirsting for vengeance on her brother's murderer. McGill tries to hide behind the girl by making love to her and winning her confidence and then getting her stealthily to carry dope supplies. She is caught by the police, but Inspector Bradley gets her off. Later she discovers that McGill is a double crosser, and Inspector Bradley a not too bad lover, and with her aid Bradley is able to track McGill to the river headquarters where he lands his dope. Bradley turns up disguised as the dead Li Yoseph and gives McGill a fright from which he recovers only when the handcuffs are fixed.

There are situations which ought to have made something, but W. Kraemer, German director, has missed fire, with resulting tedium, triteness, and general debility of plot and dialogue. It may just scrape by in the small halls, but will mean little to "particular" American audiences.—Mooring, London.

THE NEW YORK SUN,

Karl K. Kitchen Presents

Where the Next 'Craze' Is Coming From and Why—Tales of the Big Town.

By KARL K. KITCHEN.

Although I am not the seventh son of a seventh son, it is not difficult for me to predict that the next "craze" will be concerned with Bali and the Balinese. But unlike most prophets I will set forth the basis for my prediction. And unless I am very much mistaken you will agree that it is all very much clearer than any glass ball a crystal gazer ever peeked into.

Within the next few weeks New Yorkers are going to see the first full length film about Bali, hear the first authentic Balinese music and visit the first exhibition of native Balinese art, which will be shown along with a group of canvases painted in that far-out South Sea isle by a well-known American artist who recently returned from a long sojourn there.

Of course quite a few round-the-world tourists have already stopped at Bali for a few hours, and even more stay-at-homes have read Paul Morand's glowing description of it, illustrated by Covarrubias. But the first comprehensive idea of this unspoiled spot will be disclosed a week from next Wednesday night, when Charles T. Trego's film "Isle of Paradise" will be shown publicly for the first time, at the Vanderbilt Theater. Incidentally there will be but one showing of the film—at the present time, at least. But if it doesn't cruise those who see it to look up travel literature about the South Seas I'll be very much surprised. For this film about this little-known island off the coast of Java is the real thing. Except for a few badly photographed and inconsequential "shorts" it is the first film to be made in Bali. Not only was it made without Hollywood actors or director, but it has no ridiculous love story of a handsome visitor and a beautiful native, or vice versa. The film shows the daily life of a typical group of Balinese natives—how they work and play, fish and hunt, sing and dance, eat and sleep in one of the most beautiful islands in the world—one of the few places in the South Seas which has escaped the influence of missionaries.

Over the luncheon table yesterday Mr. Trego told me of the six months he spent making this picture in Bali. And then to convince me that he had not exaggerated about the beauty of the cafe au lait natives of the opposite sex he showed me the film.

'Isle of Paradise' Is Film of South Seas

"ISLE OF PARADISE," a sound picture produced, filmed and directed by Charles T. Trego, with a native cast, on the Island of Bali, and presented at the aVnderbilt Theatre.

All the lyric beauty of the Southern Seas has been camera-captured for Broadway stay-at-homes in the delightful picture that won the tribute of audience applause at its premiere last night. Unfortunately, this event was for charity and no further showings are definitely scheduled. NEW YORK EVENING POST.

A Tropical Idyll

LAST night at the Vanderbilt Theatre, and for one night only, there was given a showing of Charles Trego's Balinese idyll, "The Isle of Paradise." The performance was in the interest of charity, and any one with a charitable spirit and a grain of common sense should take this picture and put it on for a regular Broadway run. It is a simple and quite lovely study of native life on the island of Bali, that earthly Nirvana which is getting itself entirely too much talked about either for the good of the natives or of those expectant travelers who look to it as their refuge from the woes of Western civilization. Bali, if we can believe as we surely must, what we see in "The Isle of Paradise," is much too good to remain unspoiled for very long.

Mr. Trego has used his camera with sensitiveness and understanding, with the result that his picture makes you want to pack right up and head for the Dutch East Indies. He combines pictorial beauty with a penetrating depiction of Balinese customs, and the entire record glows with warmth and ineffable beauty of his subject. There are entrancing scenes of the countryside; the natives working in the rice fields, bartering at the market place, working at their handicrafts—It is a matter for regret that "The Isle of Paradise," instead of "Igloo," didn't find its way into the Rivoli. Charity may have needed it, but it is "Igloo" that needs charity.

UNUSUAL PHOTOGRAPHIC BEAUTY AND FASCINATING NATIVE LIFE MARK THIS AS DISTINCTIVE PICTURE.

Bali, located in the Dutch East Indies, is the happy island depicted in this production. Both its scenic splendor and the beauty of its women live up to the extravagant heralding they have had. The picture, made by one Charles Trego over a period of six months spent on the island, is a consistently fascinating affair in which everything just seems to happen in its natural way without being forced or rushed. It genuinely carries out the spirit of the legend that Bali is the one place on earth where happiness is made a business. The natives are shown going about their daily occupations and in various celebrations and ceremonies. Highlight of the ceremonies is the elaborate festival surrounding a cremation. Accompanying talk, written by Richard Mack, is delivered by David Ross, the popular radio announcer. The production also has a synchronized musical score by Jimmy Bradford composed of pleasing native melodies. Fine camera work and the artistic eye employed by Charles Trego in photographing the island's beauties have much to do with the general distinctiveness of the production. It will appeal particularly to those who like the unusual.

DAILY NEWS,

"ISLE OF PARADISE" BEAUTEOUS

By IRENE THIRER.

"Isle of Paradise," an Adolph Pollack production, directed by Charles T. Trego and presented for one night at the Vanderbilt Theatre.

Last evening's presentation of "Isle of Paradise," a gloriously photographed record of the pleasurable activities of a day in beautiful Bali, was in the nature of a preview. The showing at the Vanderbilt Theatre benefited certain charities. We regret to say that the picture has not yet been booked into a house for a run. But it will be.

And we'll let you know when and where—as soon as we find out. Because, if you're a travelogue fan, and if you especially like such reels when they're heart-breakingly lovely in scene, and calm and peaceful in tempo, you'll certainly want to see Mr. Trego's "Isle of Paradise."

There is no suggestion of a romantic theme in this pictorial account, as there was in the late Mr. Murnau's "Tabu." Yet we can compare "Isle of Paradise" with no other film but the aforementioned. It has the same idyllic rhythm; the same majesty of nature. Not that we're actually making comparisons. The locales are different.

The former told a definite love story—a legend. The new film reveals a typical day in the lives of these simple, colorful, handsome, clever, wealthy people of Bali, in the Dutch East Indies.

Mr. Trego and his cameramen have obtained scenes in the rice fields, in the lagoons and at the looms. They give us a cricket match—not the British kind, but a fight between two crickets. They feature several impressive ceremonies, one in which temple dancers perform their weird dance; another a cremation, probably the costliest of all ceremonies and the most profound.

They spend thousands of dollars on the tremendous towers created for the cremation. This is the most important of the day's events. And it isn't an every-day occurance either. The director was just fortunate enough to catch such a ceremony during his six months in Bali, filming the picture.

Then there are bull races, kite flying games, fishing, weaving, jewelry and pottery fashioning. And when these people aren't at work, they know how to play, and how to go to market.

"Isle of Paradise" moves along in its hour's worth of celluloid slowly, gently, with ease. It isn't the most exciting of adventure films. Yet it's a picture of definite charm.

NEW YORK EVENING JOURNAL

Java "Paradise" on Screen.

"Isle of Paradise" had a one-night-only showing (benefit performance preceded by music and dances) at the Vanderbilt Theatre last vening. Its future engagements are still undetermined.

It's a lovely pictorial study, a camera narrative of the natives on the island of Bali, which is just off the coast of Java. The Balinese, according to this piece, which was photographed—and very nicely too, by Charles Trego—are a graceful, handsome and amiable people who lead a tranquil and happy life devoted to fishing, syimming, the growing of rice and the making of costumes for a continuous series of picturesque ceremonies.

One is also shown a cremation, which appears to be the signal for numerous side-show attractions, such as cricket fighting, bull races, kite flying and exotic dancing. The island is undeniably beautiful, and why shouldn't the natives be happy if all they have to do is fish, swim, step out in colorful pageants and grow rice (with no indication that it's to be made into rice pudding)?

Ballyhooless Bali

New Travel Film, Soon to Be Released, Reveals Ideal Life on a Remote Island

THERE is no ballyhoo in Bali. The Coney Island "touch," which has fast become the underlying motif of faraway places that one dreams of visiting some day, is conspicuous by its absence in this little-known island off the coast of Java. Not only are there no radios, ice cream cones, airplanes or scenic railways featured in this isle of paradise but even the influence of the earnest missionary has thus far neglected to make itself felt. The charm and lure and grace that Tahiti and other better known tropical islands were thought to possess has passed on to Bali by the divine right of its retained realism.

For, while it has been reported by the more seasoned and blase traveler that there are certain South Sea islands that put on a show for tourists, very much in the manner of New York's Bowery and San Francisco's Chinatown, the natives of Bali are completely indifferent as to the opinion, curiosity or entertainment possibilities the foreign visitor may hope to derive or receive from his stay in their land.

They work in the rice fields, fish in the lagoons and return to their homes after a day's labor to fashion jewelry, work on a bit of carving or spend an evening at the looms.

The most comprehensive idea of this unspoiled spot will be revealed when Charles Trego's film, "Isle of Paradise," is released. Six months ago Mr. Trego, then an enthusiastic amateur photographer, arrived among the Balinese. It was his purpose to spend a few weeks in this fascinating spot "shooting" the natives with that harmless weapon known as a moving picture camera. But the young man became so intrigued with life among the natives that he has returned only to show his celluloid record of their activities.

THE BALINESE, it seems, know how to live. First of all, they boast a caste system. And, while an ambitious nouveau riche American may ultimately succeed in gaining an invitation to tea with Mrs. Vanderbilt, a belle of Bali, emanating from the workers, could never hope to "crash" a party given by the ruling class, nor would the latter presume to expect to be included in a gathering of priests. Nor are members of the various castes disappointed or unhappy in their definitely appointed state.

The women of Bali have always enjoyed the freedom which our younger generation has been demanding. Perhaps "freedom"—is scarcely explicit enough, for the so-called double standard prevails on the island. Balinese girls are permitted to have as many unquestioned romances as they see fit before marriage, but once th big names in the cast, the picture is well acted and carries a ring of sincerity. No attempt has been made to film a lavish production. The action is confined to three or four main sets, with a few incidental shots that color the picture as would be expected when a metropolitan paper breaks forth with a series of "scoops."

The story is about a super-crook, Roger Bradley, who buys a paper in order to divert attention from the operations of his gang. Although he slathers the front pages with stories of the gang's depredations, he seeks to stir up the public against the inefficiency of the Police Commissioner. Although audiences will sense that Bradley is the master mind, the element of suspense is maintained continually until the suspicions of Dan Gridley, a cub reporter, are aroused. Then through some clever work, which everybody else thinks is just dumb luck, Dan traps Gridley and his gang.

This picture is essentially in the program classification. The producers evidently shot just to turn out good entertainment at a minimum cost. The title and the idea of the story are both timely. While there is nothing unusual about the title that can be used to stir up patron interest, there is plenty in the story that can be used for that purpose. Undoubtedly you will be able to get cooperation from your local newspapers with this picture, inasmuch as it steers clear of most of the things that the press has objected to in other pictures. There are no drunken reporters, no speakeasy scenes, no hardboiled managing editors. Rather the story is one that might happen to any newspaper if a gang of smart crooks obtained control of it.

The absence of big names makes it necessary for you to concentrate on selling a story that should please. Get over the idea that it's good entertainment, presented in an easily understood way.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Musical Romance

There is solid foundation for an appeal to the music-loving members of your community in this German production, in which scenes from "Tannhaeuser" and "Tales of Hoffmann" provide a rich background, with notable singers participating. There is also a departure from much of the German-made product in the climax, the fire which rages through the opera structure. Here is material which knows no boundaries of geography or speech.

The music factor returns and reaches its greatest force in the star's delirium, as was commented upon in detail by Joseph O'Sullivan in his article in last week's issue.

It is a story of grand opera, ambition and love. Gustav Froehlich, secretary to Gustav Gruendgens, patron of opera, is commissioned to arrange for a meeting of his employer with Alexa Engstroem, thus far singing minor parts. She thinks her tete-a-tete is with Froehlich, and leaves when Gruendgens appears. Gruendgens had arranged that she be given an important part in "Tales of Hoffmann." Gruendgens learns of Froehlich's love for the singer and discharges him. Both attend the premiere of the revival. Fire starts on the stage and both have the one thought of rescuing the new star. Gruendgens reaches her first but is overcome by the smoke and Froehlich carries her to safety.

If your patrons are at all familiar with names of German film and opera, you have for them Gustav Froehlich, who starred in "Ein Walzer vom Strauss," "Liebeskommando" and "Zwei Menschen." And there is Jarmila Nowotna, prima donna.

The dialogue is entirely in German.—Rovelstad, New York.

German Comedy-Drama

This adaptation of a rather well known Berlin stage success, "Sturm in Wasserglas," having been arranged much along the lines of the stage and technique, adapts itself less readily to the regular run American patronage on the basis of special showings, than is the case with the more musically constructed pieces from the German studios.

More than in those other instances, a knowledge of the German language is necessary to reasonable enjoyment. It is something of an effort to follow the plot structure, lacking the language, due to the absence of superimposed subtitles in English on the one hand, and the more thorough reliance on dialogue for pace than in the usual German effort, on the other.

Amusing situations, in this instance, are peculiarly reliant upon the lines, of unquestioned sparkle, if the hearty reaction of an audience be any criterion. That at the Little Carnegie Playhouse in New York, intimate cinema specializing in foreign product, gave complete evidence of the entertaining qualities of the effort.

The film, then, is a potentially successful product only for those houses, wherever their location, which may with a degree of certainty draw upon a German-speaking population for patronage. Those who, knowing their German, see the picture will not be disappointed, for the story is clever and cleverly handled, the performances of uniform good quality, and the dialogue, as noted, possessing a sparkle of real humor.

Offer this as enjoyable adaptation of a German comedy-drama, for Germans.—Aaronson.

Produced by Sascha-Felsom Film. Distributed by Protex Trading Company. Directed by Georg Jacoby. Composer, Peter Herz. Manuscript by Walter Wassermann and Walter Schlee. Release date, July 7, 1932. Running time, 70 minutes.

Mickey's Busy Day

(RKO Radio)

Laugh Provoking

This bit of genuine laugh provoking entertainment concerns a gang of kids who enter into a competition for a prize for the cleanest lot in town. They turn the field around their club house into a beauty spot, but just as they have finished along comes a garbage truck and dumps a load of tin cans. It's almost time for the judging and the whole neighborhood is turned into a battleground of flying cans. The introduction of machine guns and howitzers that toss cans by the dozen is novel. Inasmuch as the names of the kids in the Larry Darmour production are the same as those featured in the Fontaine Fox cartoons—Mickey McGuire, Stinky Davis, and so on—you may be able to build a little extra interest on this one by referring to the Fox newspaper sketches. "Mickey's Busy Day" should get lots of laughs from the grownups and ought to be a riot with the kids.—Running time, 18 minutes.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

War Babies

New Comedy Series

This is the first picture in a series in which the Baby Stars, children ranging in age from eighteen months to three years, make a travesty of famous big pictures. Here they parodize "What Price Glory." The story is the scene in the little cafe just before the troops go up to the front. There are a Captain Gag and a Sergeant Flirt who mimic the "Sez You-Sez Me" roles of Lowe and McLaglen. A tiny 2-year-old miss is the center of contention between Gag and Flirt. The youngsters are exceptionally well trained and go through their business in a manner almost certain to bring plenty of laughs. Notable is the musical scoring behind the picture with a twenty-piece orchestra supplying the effects. The novelty of such young children, unaided by the presence of adults, should give audiences a kick.—Running time, 9 minutes.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

The Pie-Covered Wagon

Fast Moving

This time the tiny Baby Stars burlesque another old favorite, "The Covered Wagon." The picture, second in the series, is played just as a group of youngsters in your neighborhood would re-enact a picture for their own fun after they have seen it. It's fast moving, as you would expect when an attempt is made to crowd the highlights of a feature into about 900 feet. The story is where the party of pioneers is ambushed by a tribe of Indians. When the pioneers' supply of ammunition runs out, they send a messenger, a dog, to the fort for help. The help comes when the soldiers dash up with a wagon loaded with pies. The kids hurl the pies around with gleeful abandon that should bring plenty of laughter from adults and youngsters. There is a well trained dog that leaps up and climbs over a fence about ten feet high. This novel type of entertainment, with tots in the diaper age, has plenty of production value behind it and it may catch popular fancy.—Running time, 10 minutes.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

The Wild Goose Chase

(RKO Radio)

Excellent

An excellent number of the Aesop Fables series produced by Van Beuren. The two animated figures go in search of the pot of gold at the end of the rainbow after a prelude of flowers and animals dancing in the rain. In the castle of the giant are many grotesque figures, the whole being in the nature of a fairy tale. The subject is unusually fine for young children. Synchronization is good.—Running time, 7 minutes.

Vastly Amusing

Unusually amusing to the audience of today is this material, a re-run of several of the bits of heavy drama which kept them on the edges of their seats when the motion picture was quite young. Seen are juvenile Helene and Dolores Costello, with their father, Maurice; Blanche Sweet, Jack Bunny and a number of others. These shorts are certain to draw amused chuckles from any audience.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Powers To Have 20 Ready by Fall: 16 Branches Open

P. A. Powers said this week that he will have 20 feature pictures ready for distribution through his new company, Powers Pictures, by September 15. Twelve are already completed, including accessories and press sheets. Two will be ready within one week and the remaining six are scheduled by mid-September.

Powers Pictures has opened 16 key city branches since April 1 and within three weeks the company will complete its new national exchange system, according to Mr. Powers.

Features already completed are:

"The Limping Man," with Franklin Dyall and Margot Grahame; "Bridegroom for Two," Gene Gerrard and Muriel Angelus; "Her Strange Desire," Laurence Olivier and Nora Swinburne; "My Wife's Family," Gene Gerrard and Muriel Angelus; "The Shadow Between," Godfrey Tearle and Kathleen O'Regan; "Trapped in a Submarine," Sidney Seaward; "The Gables Mystery," Anne Grey and Lester Matthews; "The Flying Fool," Henry Kendall and Benita Hume; "Her Radio Romeo," Gene Gerrard and Jessie Matthews; "Carmen," Marguerite Namara and Tom Burke; "Fascination," Madeleine Carroll and Carl Harbord and, "Skin Game," Edmund Gwenn, Phyllis Konstam and Jill Esmond.

The two productions to be completed in the week are "Bill, the Conquerer," with Henry Kendall and Heather Angel, and "The Woman Decides," with Adrianne Allen and Owen Nares. The remaining six pictures to be included in the Powers first 20 are in various stages of production.

RKO Signs for Columbia Films

RKO and Columbia have closed a deal whereby RKO will book the complete 1932-33 lineup of 48 Columbia features in the theatres of the circuit over the country. Columbia will also have an outlet on Broadway, with product booked into the RKO Mayfair, Palace and Hippodrome, and later into the motion picture theatre at Radio City. Columbia short subjects are also included in the booking deal.

Columbia's feature schedule includes: "American Madness," featuring Walter Huston and directed by Frank Capra; "Washington Merry-Go-Round," directed by James Cruze; "The Bitter Tea of General Yen," with Barbara Stanwyck; "The Night Club Lady," "In the Jungle," with Wheeler and Woolsey, and several others.

NOMINATION STARTING FOR ACADEMY AWARDS

Ballots Out October 1 for Final Voting, All Secret; No "Consolation" Trophies; Limited Banquet Attendance Favored

by LEO MEEHAN
Hollywood Staff Correspondent

Nomination of candidates for the annual awards of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences will begin in Hollywood next week, and will close September 15. Tellers will canvass the nominating ballots between September 15 and 20, and on October 1 ballots will be mailed to all members for the final award voting, which will close November 1. These votes will be canvassed at the annual banquet on November 10, the winners announced and the awards made.

Nominations this year will be made by secret ballot. Heretofore, branch members made their nominations and signed the ballots. It was the opinion of this year's awards committee that such a procedure mitigated against free and unbiased choice, that a branch member might give extra consideration to the product of the company employing him if he had to sign his name, or that other personal factors might enter into his selections. The final balloting, by all members, will also be by secret ballot, as heretofore, so that the awards this year will be made upon choices in no way governed except the personal preferences of those eligible to vote. There is little room for playing politics.

No "Consolation Awards"

There will be the usual ten awards of gold statuettes to the various winners, but there will be no "consolation awards" of bronze trophies, as there have been on occasion in the past. These regular awards will be for: best performance by an actor, best performance by an actress, best direction, best cinematography, best art direction, best sound recording, most outstanding production, best original screen story, best adaptation, most important scientific or technical achievement of the year. This last mentioned award will not be by ballot, but will be made by a board of nine qualified judges who will take notice of all achievements whether specifically nominated or not.

The question of special awards is still being considered. Foremost among them is the one of making an award for short subjects. This has been debated several times in the past, but no satisfactory method ever was worked out. It is likely that the short subject awards may be divided into three classifications: best general or novelty subject such as newsreel, scenic, travelogue or the like; best mechanical subject, such as cartoons; best comedy subject.

A modification has been made in the matter of nominations for individual achievements, such as acting, writing, cinematography. Last year the persons receiving the five highest votes in their respective branches were declared the nominees, and their names were submitted to the membership for the final voting. This year only the three highest will go on the final ballot.

On the other hand, an increase will be made in the number of nominees for the most outstanding production of the year. Instead of five nominations there will be eight, with the further proviso that one company is eligible for more than one nomination. The producers branch will vote on this subject, and the eight pictures which receive the highest number of votes, irrespective of who made them or how many are from a single studio, will be submitted as the nominees.

Each branch selects its own nominees. For example, the actors branch nominates the candidates for the awards to actors and actresses. However, in the cast of the technical awards for photography, sound and art direction, there will be a change this year. Heretofore all members of the technicians branch, irrespective of their personal qualifications, voted on all three subjects. This year, only the photographer members of the branch will vote on the photographic nominees, art directors on that subject, sound men on their nominations.

All names tied for thirds will be printed on the final ballots sent to all members. In the case of sound awards, five samples will be submitted by each studio, these to be run for the members of the sound section of the technicians branch. They will pick the best three to five samples. Arrangements will then be made to have these projected for all members of the Academy, so that they may vote for the winner.

Special Awards Restricted

In order further to eliminate the possibility of politics entering into the matter, it has been determined that no special awards shall be made except upon a three-fourths vote of the awards committee. Special awards are handled by the awards committee. All the regular awards are through branch nomination and final vote of the entire membership. Members engaged in short subject production are being consulted in working out a plan for special awards in this field. The awards committee, of which David O. Selznick is chairman, is composed of three members from each of the Academy branches.

It is the consensus among Academy members that this year's banquet shall be limited rather strictly to the membership. Last year's affair was considerable of a bust because of the large attendance of outsiders, as well as inefficient handling not altogether the fault of those in charge. The American Newspaper Publishers association was in convention in Los Angeles at the time. They and their guests were invited. Vice President Charles C. Curtis was a visitor here also. A good many political invitations were extended. The result was that a well intentioned effort to show the guests characteristic California hospitality resulted in members being shunted into the background, or worse. And artists, being temperamental, did considerable wailing! So it is likely that some of the "three-ring-circus" aspects of the last dinner will be eliminated this time.

"SUCCESS HAS TURNED THEIR HEADS"

ELY E. SEFF, Theatre Manager, Sioux City, Iowa

EXCLUSIVE RUNS— AND "GRATITUDE"

To the Editor of the Herald:

MGM has set out to eliminate the small exhibitor and subsequent runs. Is this gratitude for what the small exhibitor has done for MGM in the past?

I can well remember, without going back very far, the time when MGM could not get into circuit run houses. They were new in the field and the major circuits were skeptical as to MGM's possibilities. Who then bought and exhibited MGM's product? Who paved the way and built the foundation for the MGM of today? No guesswork here, and the same man is now slowly being pushed right out of the picture and cast aside like an old shoe. These are the signers of the early MGM contracts when MGM needed friends and supporters.

Success has turned their heads, but the worm must turn. The circuits and producers will come and go, but the small independent exhibitor will always remain. He was one of the pioneers in the field and will never be eliminated. We are getting away from the question. I ask you again, is this MGM's gratitude?—Ely E. Seff, Manager, Rialto and Loop Theatres, Sioux City, Iowa.

P. S.—Now playing every foot that MGM makes.

SOPHISTICATED PICTURES

I take belated exception to "Comparison of 'X' and 'Y' Proves Simple Dramatic Picture Pays," an article which appeared in Motion Picture Herald dated April 16.

I studied my grammar school lessons in a theatre office and before my university made me an alumnus I had been at various times everything from janitor to manager in a theatre, including usher, stage hand and publicity man. My father, Louis Schlichter, was for many years a theatre owner in Baltimore.

My exceptions to your article are of two natures. First, as to the methods involved.

(a) No two pictures can possibly be fair examples of two types.

(b) Your compilation was not weighted for the week to week variance in theatre attendance, difference in natural draw of theatres, season of run, added attractions such as stage shows, et cetera.

(d) My exceptions are not with the conclusion that was reached, but with the methods used in getting it.

My second exception is one of definition. In general, everyone knows what a sophisticated picture is, and in general exhibitors are apt to agree that romance and illusion pay better than sophistication, but, in particular, what is this bogey sophistication?

Is the clamor of the outspoken minority making our pictures too intellectual, too intelligent? Should material termed sophisticated be written down? Out here in Hollywood we have an enterprise called the Hollywood Bowl. During the summer season tens of thousands of the masses hear symphonies under the stars for twenty-five cents a seat if you have a season ticket. There are not five thousand people in the state with a fine musical education, not half that number able to define accurately a concerto. In spite of all that, Bach and Beethoven, Wagner and Tschaikowsky have not been displaced by Billy Rose and Irving Berlin. They use real musicians to please these music ignorant music lovers, famous conductors to please these two-bit music fans.

These people who are pleasing the masses, or have pleased them in other times, do not have to gather in a bohemian circle, light the incense at the altar of their own intellectuality, and assure their own immortal superiority by wailing about the prostitution of their art and the necessity of writing down to the peepul. The really great, many of whom were of the people, many of whom considered themselves artisans rather than artists (except for publicity and to overstuffed patrons of art), worry more about writing up to the people. They are not half baked literati blaming stupid audiences for failures due principally to their own inability (let's go highbrow) to establish rapport.—Karl von Vetter Schlichter, 1017 N. La Jolla, W. Hollywood, Cal.

Dialogue and Trailers

In the issue of July 23 Motion Picture Herald remarked editorially:

"Word now seems to come from high places that a high resolve has been made to insist on adherence to a code of advertising practice forbidding suggestive phrases and pictures, in the motion picture business. This would be much more interesting and exciting if the makers of motion pictures had not laid down a formula of negation with respect to the Production Code. . . ."

Enclosing a clipping of the editorial, Mr. J. A. Decatur of Lynbrook, L. I., describing himself as "just a reader of the Herald," writes in as follows:

"How do you like this for dialogue?

"I saw it in a trailer for the 'Cohens and Kellys in Hollywood' at Fox Lynbrook theatre last night:

"Scene—The Kelly home.

"Kitty Kelly, the daughter, received a letter from the 'Consolidated Film Co.' inviting her to Hollywood for a screen test. She reads letter, and then one of the characters exclaims:

" 'If you go to Hollywood you'll be made.'

"At this point Kelly, her father (Charley Murray) says:

" 'And I'll go with her to see that she's not.'

"Are you listenin', Mr. Hays?"

WANTED: ADVICE FROM EXHIBITORS

To the Editor of the Herald:

Wanted: Exhibitor advice.

Hazards are now so great in picture production that those concerned with it are concentrating more earnestly than ever before upon the selection of story material.

Hollywood Herald, your small brother out here in production community could render a valuable service to production executives, writers, directors, if you could induce some of your thousands of exhibitor-readers to write me suggestions as to story material. I would like to print them in Hollywood Herald. I am sure the people here would be greatly interested in suggestions as to type of material, specific stories or plays, themes—anything which would help to guide them in making pictures most saleable at the box office. We know out here we're all in the same boat, that we won't prosper unless the exhibitor does well.

For once, no company is attempting to lay out a hard and fast program a year in advance. All are open to timely suggestions. Exhibitors ought to be helpful. After all, they're the boys out there in the trenches.—Leo Meehan, Editor, Hollywood Herald, Hollywood, Cal.

ALWAYS SHEKELS FOR GOOD FILMS

To the Editor-in-Chief of the Herald:

Your writeup in the Herald of May 28 issue, on origin and development of stars, has tempted me to take a leaf from my diary dated September 18, 1925, after an interview with a film salesman.

Boy, oh boy, how these film salesmen ease us when we think we are confiding to them peoples' likes and dislikes. We were sincere, but were soon told the producers were not trying to please the hicks; as long as the pictures click on Broadway, they should worry.

Why, in a few years we are going to do away with stars; it will be production, all in production. And don't be surprised if (X) builds all their own theatres and does away with you independents.

Producer, distributor, exhibitor, one unit, all one great unit.

We told the salesman: "You might be right, but you forgot to eliminate one thing; are you sure they won't do away with the audience, to have everything their own way."

We will ever remember how he laughed. Oh no, said he, that's where our shekels come from. Well, as far as I can see, there are stars and always will be—independent exhibitors and always will be—shekels for good movies and always will be—an audience always waiting to see decent pictures.

Where is the producer to make them? Always individual minds, ready to write good stories. Let's find them. Yours for a greater Herald.—Mrs. F. C. Reinecke, 1000 Thorndale Drive, Akron, Ohio.

THEATRE RECEIPTS

The total of theatre receipts for 104 theatres in 20 major cities for the calendar week ended July 30, 1932, reached $1,251,722, a decrease of $3,200 from the total for the previous week. During the preceding calendar week, ended July 23, 105 theatres in 20 cities recorded a total gross of $1,254,992. One new high individual house record was established during the more recent period, while nine new low records were noted. This compares with no new "highs" and six new "lows" for the previous week.

SELECTIONS

Made by RITA C. McGOLDRICK

The estimate given to each of the following films is a united one offered by representatives of seven organizations previewing motion pictures in Hollywood. Their unanimous judgment was reached in a series of conferences.

The groups are: General Federation of Women's Clubs; International Federation of Catholic Alumnae; National Council of Jewish Women; National Society of New England Women; California Congress of Parents and Teachers; Los Angeles Branch of Association of University Women.

AMERICAN MADNESS (Columbia). Walter Huston, Constance Cummings, Kay Johnson, Pat O'Brien.

A timely and stirring picture that shows the power of confidence, sanity and faith in human integrity over distrust and financial fear. Strong dramatic treatment is combined with fine acting and expert directing. Family.

BACK STREET (Universal). Irene Dunne, John Boles, George Meeker.

A sincere and splendidly acted adaptation of the novel by Fannie Hurst. The subject matter is sordid but is finely handled. All groups agree to its technical excellence. D.A.R. feels that the picture justifies the irregular life of the woman in a way that precludes the organization's recommendation. Adults.

BEYOND THE ROCKIES (RKO-Pathe). Tom Keene, Rochelle Hudson, Julian Rivero, Marie Wells.

A new twist to an old plot makes this Western story unusually entertaining. The beautiful scenery, spirited action and believable characterizations should be especially enjoyed by juniors. Family and Junior Matinee.

BRING 'EM BACK ALIVE (RKO Radio).

A remarkable picturization of the Van Beuren-Frank Buck expedition into the jungles of the Malayan Strait and Sumatra to capture wild animals for the zoo and circus. Family and junior matinees.

BY WHOSE HAND? (Columbia). Ben Lyon, Barbara Weeks.

A murder mystery melodrama with a San Francisco express as the scene. Swift action, thrilling situations and good comedy are combined with no slackening in the story development. Adults.

CONGORILLA (Fox).

Produced by Mr. and Mrs. Martin Johnson, this stands in the top rank of recent travel-adventure films because of its entertainment value and its educational emphasis. Family.

DANGERS OF THE ARCTIC (Explorers Film Co.)

This adventure film is based on an expedition into the Arctic under the leadership of Earl Rossman. The reindeer herds are impressive in their great numbers. Family.

FORBIDDEN COMPANY (Chesterfield). Sally Blane, John Darrow, John St. Polis, Norma Drew.

A clean romance of youth interpreted with a simplicity and sincerity that makes it wholly convincing. Family.

HELL FIRE AUSTIN (Tiffany). Ken Maynard, Ivy Merton, Nat Pendleton.

This Western, which concerns a champion rodeo rider, has a fresh angle. The horsemanship of Ken Maynard should delight the younger members. Family.

IGLOO (Universal).

This picture of life among the Eskimos is recommended for its unusual photography, its educational value and the interesting examples of sacrifice and heroism displayed. Some scenes are too tragic for young children but it is of unique interest for adults and family audiences.

ISLE OF PARADISE (Adolph Pollak Production).

The island of Bali in the Dutch East Indies is the lovely setting of this picture, made by Charles Trego during six months spent there. Fascinating subject material and exceptional camera work give distinction. The interpretative talk (written by Richard Mack) is given by the well known radio announcer, David Ross. Family.

MADAME RACKETEER (Paramount). Alison Skipworth, Richard Bennett, George Raft, Evalyn Knapp.

Alison Skipworth has lifted the rather ordinary drama of this picture into a place of distinct importance, with one of the most amusing and vivid characterizations of the year. "Madame Racketeer" is not family audience material although it has no objectionable spots; but it is outstanding adult entertainment.

MAKE ME A STAR (Paramount). Stuart Erwin, Joan Blondell.

An entertaining sound version of "Merton of the Movies" by Harry Leon Wilson. The shots of stars going about the lot and to "previews" add interest. All ages and junior matinees.

MAN CALLED BACK, THE (Tiffany). Conrad Nagle, Doris Kenyon, John Holliday, Juliette Compton.

An adaptation of Andrew Soutar's novel "Silent Thunder," of the English doctor who, blaming himself for a child's death, becomes an outcast, but is brought back through a woman's belief in him. A mystery element adds to the dramatic value. Adults.

MARKED MEN (Universal).

McKENNA OF THE MOUNTED (Columbia). Buck Jones.

An exceptionally good story of the Northwest Mounted Police, with commendable continuity of plot, swift action and fine photography together with the beauty and intelligence of the horse Silver.—Family.

MY PAL, THE KING (Universal). Tom Mix, Mickey Rooney, Paul Hurst, Noel Francis.

Tom Mix, exhibiting his wild west show, becomes the friend of the boy king and exposes a plot. The struggle of the boy king and his tutor against drowning may prove harrowing for a nervous child. Ootherwise it is excellent family entertainment and suitable for junior matinees.

MYSTERY RANCH (Fox). George O'Brien, Charles Middleton, Cecilia Parker.

This Western is based on the story "The Killers" by Stewart Edward White. Unusually fine outdoor photography and expert riding make the picture suitable for family audiences.

OLD DARK HOUSE, THE (Universal). Boris Karloff, Ernest Thesizer, Eva Moore, Melvyn Douglass.

J. B. Priestly's thriller is given a close reproduction on the screen, worthwhile for those who like a gruesome mystery. Adults and young adults.

REBECCA OF SUNNYBROOK FARM (Fox). Marian Nixon, Ralph Bellamy, Mae Marsh, Louise Closser Hale.

It has moments of fine humor, real beauty and important characterization. We believe it will find its way to a distinguished rating among family audience pictures of the season.

ROAR OF THE DRAGON, THE (RKO Radio). Richard Dix, Gwili Andre, Edward Everett Horton, Zasu Pitts.

An ultra melodramatic treatment of a story of Chinese banditry. There is some fine photography but its over-sensational emphasis may prove nerve-racking entertainment for some audiences. Adults.

SIGN OF FOUR, THE (World Wide). Arthur Wontner, Ian Hunter, Isla Bevan, Graham Soutten.

One of the best known of the Conan Doyle stories, it concerns the finding of hidden jewels by two army officers and the revenge of the convicts. Adults and young adults.

SON OF OKLAHOMA (World Wide). Bob Steele.

A Western story of a hunt for a hidden gold mine, and of parents finally reconciled. Family. Suitable for all school grades.

STOKER, THE (Hoffman-Allied). Monte Blue, Dorothy Burgess, Noah Beery, Natalie Moorhead.

A Peter B. Kyne story of a young man who, going to Nicaragua to rebuild a broken career, finds both adventure and love. Adults and Young Adults.

STRANGE INTERLUDE (MGM). Norma Shearer, Clark Gable, Alexander Kirkland, Ralph Morgan.

Eugene O'Neill's notable play comes to the screen admirably condensed and with no deviations. Adults only.

SUCCESSFUL CALAMITY, A (Warner) George Arliss, Mary Astor.

TOM BROWN OF CULVER (Universal). Tom Brown, Slim Summerville, H. B. Warner, Richard Cromwell.

A picture of unusual interest with Culver Military Academy as a setting and its emphasis on self control as a requisite for character building. Family entertainment but outstanding for high school age or junior matinees.

TWENTY-SIX MARTYRS OF JAPAN (Made in Japan in 1931 by Nikkatsu Studios).

It shows the Christianizing work of the

SELECTION OF PICTURE SELECTIONS

Catholic Church in Japan in the sixteenth century. The theme is deeply religious and valuable as an historical document. A reverent subject, presented in a beautiful and artistic manner, and well worth the attention of the serious audience. Family.

VANISHING FRONTIERS (Paramount). Evalyn Knapp, Raymond Hatton, Ben Alexander.

The story of a cross section of American history of which we know too little, the military government of California in 1850 and the confiscation of property held by the Spaniards. It provides fine family audience material.

WAR CORRESPONDENT (Columbia). Jack Holt, Ralph Graves, Lila Lee.

A war correspondent in China meets with personal and international complications. It is average entertainment.

WASHINGTON MASQUERADE (M G M). Lionel Barrymore, C. Henry Gordon, Karen Morley, Nils Asther.

A story of the disintegration of character of a brilliant midwest lawyer who goes to Washington and comes under the pressure of political lobbyists. A remarkable characterization by Barrymore. Adults.

WHAT PRICE HOLLYWOOD (RKO Pathe). Constance Bennett, Lowell Sherman, Gregory Ratoff, Neil Hamilton.

A clever and satirical study of Hollywood. The Women's University Club recommends it for adults only. Other groups consider it suitable for adults and young adults.

J. C. JENKINS—HIS COLYUM

Auburn, Ind.

Dear Herald:

At Angola we swapped yarns with our old friend, Joe Brokaw. Joe still runs the Brokaw theatre and says he eats T-bone steak on Mondays, but can't afford it on other days because Sundays are the only days he uses black ink.

Joe is a student of marine history, especially the biography of Paul Jones, and you know Paul said, "Don't Give Up the Ship," that's why Joe takes his belt up another notch every Monday morning and grabs his saber and sallies forth to do battle in the interest of the Brokaw theatre. The banner of success will ultimately wave over the Brokaw unless Indiana goes back to the Government.

L. A. Turner is the manager of the Strand, one of the small circuit of theatres operated, as we understand it, out of Chicago. Mr. Turner recently managed a small circuit in Seattle, Wash., but resigned that position to take the management of the Strand. Boy, that salt air out in Seattle has got this hay fever breeze of Indiana beat a mile. You can take it from us, we've been in Seattle a lot of times. That boy Turner is game, don't forget that, and Mrs. Turner is just as game as he is, and that makes a mighty good team.

Here in Auburn we found Hobart Hart and Wayne Smith still operating the Court theatre and four or five theatres in neighboring towns.

The Court measures up to all the requirements of a first-class house and Mr. Hart does the heavy chores for the circuit while Mr. Smith looks after the mechanical requirements, being a graduate electrical engineer and a well known teacher of that subject. In order to keep themselves well occupied they operate two very fine dance pavilions, one at Hamilton Lake, a summer resort which they operate in the summer, and the Silver Moon, which they run in the winter. Both of these places are operated in a very orderly manner which has gained for them a wide reputation. They employ a band of 10 pieces for these pavilions.

Mr. Hart drove us down to Ft. Wayne and introduced us to some of the boys there, which is what we call "Service." Among others, we met Mr. W. C. Quimby, who owned and operated four of Ft. Wayne's downtown houses which he recently sold to RKO. He still has the Lincoln, which he operates as a second-run house, when he isn't playing golf.

Mr. Quimby built the Emboyd, which is the most beautiful independently built theatre we have ever seen. Grauman's Egyptian and Chinese in Hollywood haven't a thing on the Emboyd for beauty. This theatre is the only one in RKO's chain of five in those parts which is in operation, the balance being closed.

We are pretty strong for W. C. Quimby. He's the type of man who ought to be living west of the Missouri. He tried to get us to stay over and go out and play golf with him, but when he told us he shot a 76 par course in 78 we said, "O! O! Nay, nay, Bobby Jones, you can't get us out there to make a monkey out of us." Then he said he shot the next round in 118, but that was done to bait us. He's a wise old fox. Ft. Wayne looks like a quiet Sunday in our home town, but she's no different from many other factory towns we have visited.

Jack J. Gross manages the Emboyd for RKO. Formerly he managed the RKO houses in San Francisco and Oakland. He's a swell fellow and we hope he doesn't get the Indiana hay fever. If anybody can keep the doors open in the Emboyd Jack can do it, for he seems to have a knowledge of the business not always found in circuit managers. Our judgment is that RKO picked a winner when they picked Jack for the Emboyd.

We drove yesterday through a little town called Bumpus. If Indiana can't find a better name for a town than that it's no wonder they call 'em Hoosiers.

A lady asked us if the Elks drank. We told her that the Republicans, Democrats and Bull Moose did, but we couldn't say about the Elks, as we were not a member of that lodge. She said her husband belonged to the Elks and she was told that they drank, and asked us how she could tell. We said: "Well, lady, if your husband comes home from the lodge singing 'Sweet Adeline' you may be assured that he has not been drinking Pluto water."

If you ever go through Columbia City don't fail to call on H. E. Hancock of the Columbia theatre. He's a 100 per cent guy and he operates a 100 per cent theatre. Not only that, but he invited us over to a cafe and took the slack out of our belt. They may make better ones, but they are not working overtime at it, and we haven't found them yet. He informed us that his gross intake for the past six months was less than 50 per cent of the six months previous, which didn't sound so good. The trouble we find with these Hoosiers is that they want to visit so doggone much. If we'd listen to them we wouldn't make over a couple of towns a day, and then just see how many of these boys we'd miss. But, as we said before, don't fail to visit the Columbia theatre.

Lon Dunning has sold his Strand theatre at Warsaw to John R. Boyce. Lon is as uneasy as a fish out of water, for he had been in the business so long that he thinks that Flora Finch is the wife of Wallace Beery. We'll betcha he will be back in the harness soon.

Over in South Bend the other day we had an expert painter doll up April Shower, and boy, you ought to see her shine. He took a spraying rig and sprayed pea green paint all over the hood and now she looks like Cleopatra out on dress parade. She's a warm baby now.

Huntington has three theatres, and b'gosh they are all open, but the managers put cold packs on their heads every night after the show. We didn't see the manager of two of them, but we met Herbert Glanier (we hope we got the name right), who manages the Tivoli. Herb is a relic of the old "legit" days and was a trouper when trouping meant something. He thinks that the "Squawies" are a flat tire compared to John Dillon, Lottie Crabtree, Henrietta Crossman, Maude Adams, The Isle of Spice, Uncle Tom's Cabin and the bloodhounds, and so do we. In fact, we both agreed we'd sooner see Uncle Josh Spruceby in the "Sawmill Scene" than to see Clark Gable make love to Polly Moran, and Clark is pretty good at it, too.

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 137.—(A) What various types of condenser are available for use with the electric arc? (B) How far apart should condensers be spaced? (C) Why should a collector lens never be in actual contact with the converging lens? (D) When using a plano-convex condenser, does the collector lens send forward a parallel beam of light?

Answer to Question No. 130

Bluebook School Question No. 130 was: "(A) Describe a 4.5-inch diameter meniscus-biconvex condenser lens. (B) Describe a 4.5-inch-diameter plano-convex lens. (C) Describe a 6-inch diameter biconvex lens of 6-inch focal length. (E) Of what is a meniscus-biconvex condenser composed? (F) Why are the convex sides of two plano-convex condensing lenses placed with their convex sides next to each other?"

We did very much better this time. (Gosh, last week was awful!) Those answering acceptably are Lester Borst, C. Rau and S. Evans, S. G. Williams, G. E. Doe, R. J. Arnston, William Broadbent, T. VanVaulkenburg, Bill Doe, John Dillwoody, Tom Turk, Nic Granby, Seymour Carroll, John Ahrenson, T. R. Peters, Dan Holler, P. Jackson and B. Diglah, John Williams, H. B. Coates, A. Zerach, K. L. Knight, H. D. Schofield, J. L. Travers and R. L. Singer, J. G. Gates, C. Peters, John Wentworth and William Sellers, L. D. Richards and S. T. Conners, D. Lambert and T. Davis, J. Cermak, A. Gibson, Jack Weiller, C. Tamper, L. Fudlow, T. Rathburn, L. Burke, F. Burker, F. B. Gamble, M. McGuire, D. Birdoll, A. H. Mitzer, P. D. Thompson, A. F. Duke and P. R. Daniels, T. McGruder, T. Taylor, F. Davis, B. Davidson, S. T. Jones, H. L. Loew, J. Billings and T. U. Grant, T. L. May, A. Breaston, D. Lode, F. F. Franks, A. Wells, A. Bailey, R. T. Sindell, D. Warren and L. Warren, P. T. Garling, F. Ferguson, H. Sicmann, T. Whitnath, L. M. Timmers, G. Decson, R. Michaels, H. B. Billings, R. Singleton, D. L. Barton, D. L. Simmons, S. T. Jones, G. Tinlin, M. R. Tonlin, C. Ray and L. F. Hurlbutt, F. C. Hagmyer, G. Farmann, L. Patry and D. L. Sicler, T. R. Peters, D. L. Sinklow, P. L. Toeping, T. Murphy, A. Geibto, S. T. Jones and D. Mason.

After careful examination I have selected the answer of G. E. Doe on Section A as best for publication. He says, "A 4.5-inch-diameter meniscus-biconvex condenser consists of a collector lens having a slightly concave surface next to the light source, the opposite or front side being convex, and a bi-convex converging lens (convex on both sides) mounted with relation to each other essentially the same as are plano-convex condensing lenses. This combination was once used to some extent on the theory that it was more efficient than the plano-convex condenser. Later it was very largely, if not entirely, discarded. It was presumed to, and did, present a longer distance from its optical center to the aperture for any given distance from face of converging lens to light source, than did any other known combination. Also, because of the concave surface of the collector lens, the light reflection from the rear surface of that lens was less than that which occurred with the plano-convex. However, why ask questions concerning practically obsolete equipment when there are so very many things in use which we really, or most of us at least, need to be questioned about?"

I think I will answer that query right here and now. The successful, really efficient projectionist must understand not only the equipment directly under his charge, or which he may be called upon to manage, but also he must understand basic principles, which in greater or less degree apply to all equipments of any given class. I asked this question to see just what you knew about a meniscus and a biconvex lens working together. You named the two principal points; namely, longer distance condenser to aperture for any given arc distance, and less loss through reflection at the rear face of the collector lens. This last item seems almost negligible, but it really is not, for the reason that the face of the collector lens next to the light source is more or less fogged very soon after it is cleaned, therefore the reflection loss is a rather serious one at the outer zones of the lens.

(B) Messrs. Rau and Evans say, "A 4.5-inch-diameter plano-convex lens may be described as a section whose flat surface will have a 4.5-inch-diameter cut from a sphere of optical glass. The sphere actually cut off would be slightly larger in diameter than 4.5 inches, the diameter being afterward reduced to that dimension, thus providing an edge of substantial thickness, not less than one-sixteenth, or exceeding one-eighth of an inch. The flat surface of the piece is, of course, polished. If the aforesaid sphere of glass from which the piece be cut is seven inches in diameter, the focal length of the lens resulting from the above procedure will be seven inches. If the sphere be 6.5 inches in diameter, it would be 6.5 inches in focal length, and so on."

As to Section C, we will listen to S. G. Williams, who set the matter forth thus: "A 6-inch-diameter biconvex lens of 6 inch focal length, would be a round glass disc having two convex surfaces, the curvatures of which would both be the same and equal to the curvature of a sphere 12 inches in diameter. The focal length of the lens would be equal to that of two 12-inch focal length plano-convex lenses placed plane to plane."

Correct! It would surprise you how many fell down flat on that one, several (one a projectionist in a large New York City Broadway theatre) saying such a lens would merely be a sphere of glass 6 inches in diameter, confusing it with a plano-convex lens, apparently, of a focal length of 6½ inches.

Section D.—Blank due to an error.

Section E is well answered by Messrs. Rau and Evans, who say, "A meniscus-biconvex condenser is composed of two lenses, one a meniscus having a slightly concave surface facing the light source, and a convex surface on the opposite (front) side. This is the collector lens. The converging lens of the combination would be a lens which is convex on each side. This is known as a biconvex lens."

Replying to Section F, Lester Borst says, "Were the plano-sides of the lenses of a plano-convex condenser placed facing each other, a convex surface must face the light source, with the result that the angle presented to the incident light by the outer zones of the lens would be very much greater than it would be the case were a plano surface in that position. The loss by reflection would therefore be very much greater than it would be with the converging lens reversed. So much for the collector lens.

"With the convex side of the converging lens facing the aperture, there would be slightly less loss by reflection between the lenses, but the condition at the front side of the converging lens would be such as would greatly increase the necessary angle of refraction at the outer zones, with the result that spherical aberration would be increased over that set up with the plano sides of the lenses facing outward."

May I compliment the following on the excellence of their answers: John Wentworth and William Sellers, Tom Turk, Rau and Evans, Lester Borst, G. E. Doe and William Broadbent.

MEETINGS

MOTION PICTURE HERALD presents each week a calendar of events and meeting dates of exhibitor and production associations and other non-commercial organizations in the industry. The secretaries of all such associations are urged to forward to the editor necessary data for inclusion herein, of both regular and board of directors meetings.

AUGUST

Associated Motion Picture Advertisers has suspended regular weekly meetings and open forum during the summer, but will resume in September, at Sardi's, West 44th Street, New York. President, Ed Finney; Secretary, Al Sherman.

Weekly meetings of the new Advertising Code Committee will be held in Hollywood for the next two months. Meetings are subject to call.

Allied Theatres of Oregon, Inc.: Convention in August, date undetermined. President, Edward Fautz; Secretary, William Cutts.

4—Independent Motion Picture Producers' Association: Monthly meeting at Trem Carr Studio, 6048 Sunset Boulevard, Hollywood. President, M. H. Hoffman; Secretary, Nat Levine.

Southern California Exhibitors Association: Regular meeting, Los Angeles.

5—International Allied Theatrical Stage Employees and Motion Picture Machine Operators—Local 37, Studio Branch: Directors' meeting preceding regular meeting, at 6472 Santa Monica Boulevard, Hollywood. Business Representative, Lew C. G. Blix.

8—International Allied Theatrical Stage Employees and M. P. Machine Operators—Local 37, Studio Branch: Monthly meeting, 6472 Santa Monica Boulevard, Hollywood. Business Representative, Lew C. G. Blix.

Masquers' Club: Monthly meeting, 1765 North Sycamore Avenue, Hollywood. Harlequin, Antonio Moreno.

International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers—Local No. 40, Studio Branch: Meeting of executive committee, at 5402 Hollywood Boulevard, Hollywood. President, H. D. Martin; Secretary, A. P. Speede.

9—16 mm. Association: Semi-monthly meeting and luncheon, at Hotel Victoria, New York.

Allied Theatre Owners of New Jersey, Inc.: Regular meeting at 303 West 42nd Street, New York. President, Sidney E. Samuelson.

Assistance League: Semi-charity and social organization. Board of directors' meeting, 5604 DeLongpre Avenue, Hollywood. Managing Director, Mr. Lee Ray Turner.

Federated Motion Picture Studio Crafts: Weekly meeting of 14 studio locals at 2560 North Beachwood Drive, Hollywood. President, Harry W. Scott; Secretary, Richard L'Estrange.

Motion Picture Operators' Union, Hollywood Branch: Regular meeting, at 1489 West Washington Boulevard, Los Angeles. President, C. C. Harden.

Allied Theatre Owners of California: Semi-monthly meeting, 1584 West Washington Boulevard, Los Angeles. President, G. A. Metzger.

Motion Picture Operators' Union: Monthly meeting, 1489 West Washington Boulevard, Los Angeles. President, C. C. Harden.

10—Breakfast Club: 3213 Riverside Drive, Hollywood. President, Carl Laemmle; Manager, Harold B. Link.

Allied Exhibitors of Ontario: Directors' meeting and annual election, at Toronto.

12-13-14—Independent Theatre Supply Dealers' Association: Annual convention, three days, at Hotel Stevens, Chicago.

14—Film Technicians: Meeting at Hollywood Chamber of Commerce or Knights of Columbus Hall, Hollywood. Business Representative, Carl Kountz.

Assistant Directors' Association: Regular meeting, 6636 Hollywood Boulevard, Hollywood. President, Harry W. Scott; Executive Vice-president, Richard L'Estrange.

16—Allied Theatres of Michigan, Inc.: Board of Directors' meeting, at 607 Fox Building, Detroit. President, Glenn A. Cross; Secretary, John Niebes.

Western Associated Motion Picture Advertisers: Semi-monthly meeting and luncheon, at Writers' Club, Hollywood. President, Frank Whitbeck; Secretary, Carlisle Jones.

Assistance League: Weekly board of directors' meeting, 5604 DeLongpre Avenue, Hollywood. Managing Director, Mrs. Lee Wray Turner.

17—Breakfast Club: 3213 Riverside Drive, Hollywood. President, Carl Laemmle; Manager, Harold B. Link.

Brotherhood of Studio Carpenters—Local 946: Weekly meeting, 6474 Santa Monica Boulevard, Hollywood. Business Representative, J. F. Kearns; Secretary, W. E. Sparks.

233 Club: Semi-monthly meeting, 6735 Yucca Street, Hollywood. President, John LeRoy Johnston; Secretary, Abraham S. Goldman.

18—United Scenic Artists: Monthly meeting, 2560 North Beachwood Drive, Hollywood. Executive, William B. Cullen.

19—International Allied Theatrical Stage Employees—Local 37, Studio Branch: Directors' meeting, 6472 Santa Monica Boulevard, Hollywood. Business Representative, Lew C. G. Blix.

23—International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers—Local No. 40, Studio Branch: Regular monthly meeting.

16 mm. Association: Semi-monthly meeting and luncheon, at Hotel Victoria, New York.

Allied Theatre Owners of New Jersey: Regular meeting, at 303 West 42nd Street, New York. President, Sidney E. Samuelson.

SEPTEMBER

Weekly meetings of New York Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce will be resumed early in September, at headquarters in the Times Building, New York City. President, Charles L. O'Reilly.

26—Mayfair Club: Monthly gathering at Biltmore Hotel, Los Angeles. President, Fred Niblo; Secretary, Irving Thalberg.

Universal Buys Old Serials For Release During 1933-34

Universal has purchased, for release in the 1933-34 season, the talking film rights to three old silent serials, which attained popularity many years ago, "The Perils of Pauline," "The Exploits of Elaine" and "The New Exploits of Elaine." Pearl White was the star of "The Perils of Pauline." No star for the talking version has been selected.

In addition, Universal has decided upon "Robinson Crusoe" as a fourth serial for release during the 1933-34 season. "Robinson Crusoe" was made by Universal in 1922, in silent form.

New Educational Series

Educational plans release of a new series of six adventure short subjects, produced by Harold Austin, who has already completed three—"Captured Elephant Sharks," "Wild Cats and Wild Boars" and "Bloodhounds and Mountain Lions." Mr. Austin leaves for Alaskan waters shortly to film material for the remaining three, which will be concerned with fishing.

Italian Comedian in Shorts

Arthur Barbera-Rubin plans a series of six two-reel subjects starring Farfariello, noted comedian and a singer of Italian folk songs. Michael L. Simmons and Joseph K. Foster will do the scripts. B. K. Blake will direct.

Jack White Joins Fox

Jack White, former short subject producer, has joined Fox as a producer and director. "Rackety Rax" will be his first directorial effort.

Paramount to Film Westerns

Paramount will produce several Zane Grey western stories for next season, the first to go into work being "The Heritage of the Desert." The Grey films will replace the Larry Darmour productions originally announced on the 1932-33 schedule.

CHICAGO

Dave Dubin is the new manager of the Educational branch, taking up his duties last Monday as successor to Max Stahl. Mr. Stahl announced that he will take a brief vacation before making a trip to New York in connection with his plans for the future.

Local film folk invaded New York last week in connection with conferences on the double feature situation and the new protection setup. Barney Balaban and Abe Kaufman of B&K were on the Big Stem, as were representatives of Essaness and Warner theatres, and several exchange managers.

Ludwig Siegel is up and about again after a three weeks battle with flu.

Henri Ellman is enthusiastic over the widespread booking on the first Principal Pictures production to issue from his newly formed exchange. It is Zane Grey's "Adventures in the South Seas" and has been booked by Publix, Great States and other circuits.

Mrs. Charles Schaeffer, who originally owned the Garfield theatre on West Madison street, has again taken over the house.

Frank Ford has opened the Lincoln theatre at Sterling, Ill.

Fred Anderson of Morris, Ill., has opened the Altovar theatre at Crystal Lake.

M. Levinson of Supreme Trailer Service was in town for conferences with Irving Mandel.

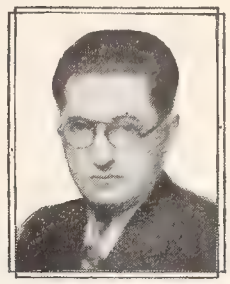
Fifteen full-length features will be released in September and October, Ben Judell announces. Among them will be "Exposure," "The Phantom Express," "Streets of Illusion" and "The Pride of the Legion," starring Rin-Tin-Tin in an adapted Peter B. Kyne story.

Majestic Opens Offices



Majestic Pictures, Inc., of which Herman Gluckman is president, has opened executive offices in New York in the Brill Building, 1619 Broadway. The company plans 20 features and six Jack Hoxie westerns for the coming season. John Weber, formerly with Principal Pictures, has been named general sales manager and assistant to Mr. Gluckman.

CONDUCTED BY AN EXHIBITOR FOR EXHIBITORS

SOMETHING TO SHOOT AT!

JUST WHEN WE HAD COME to the sober conclusion that no campaign could get us all excited or even make us forget our usual (rotten) game of golf, along comes George C. Walsh, Jack Jackson and the managers of the Publix-Pennsylvania-New York division with their Sam Katz Week campaign to make us forget our resolution that "there is nothing new no more."

Well, we were wrong. There was plenty new and plenty accomplished by this remarkable group of showmen and the best part of the whole story is the fact that most of the managers actually trumped the suggestions of their division office by doing far more than was asked of them.

Careful planning, one hundred per cent cooperation by all hands, willingness to exchange ideas and experiences, all contributed to the success of the Sam Katz Week and resulted in one of the campaigns that will go down in theatrical history as outstanding in planning and results.

We are hoping that every showman in the country who has turned up his nose at "costless merchandising" reads these lines. There are many who still believe that costless selling is a brain-child of the circuits which, having nothing else to pick the managers to pieces with, thought up this new wrinkle to give them something else to worry about.

Well, maybe it did cause some worry, but it also caused them to learn that many things they were paying out good money for could be had for nothing and in a much better way. It showed how sensible tie-ups and cooperative effort could be turned into actual dollars and cents at the box office for the theatre while at the same time giving the merchants a square deal for the money they were spending to advertise the theatre and its attractions.

Do figures impress you? Then listen to this; measured in terms of cash they promoted merchandise and free space for a staggering total of over thirty thousand dollars. Besides this tremendous amount there were other forms of promotion, etc., not possible to estimate in dollars and cents that amounted to about twenty thousand dollars additional.

Just stop for a moment and think this over. Fifty thousand dollars worth of free space, merchandise and other forms of business stimulators concentrated for one smashing week's business. And of course the actual results at the box offices of the theatres throughout the division reflected this terrific amount of effort.

To attempt a complete report of each theatre's activity would mean devoting the entire section to this one division's accomplishments and while we are quite ready to admit that it would be worth that much space and more we must remember that there are several thousand other members and theatres whose showmanship must also be reported.

Let us touch on just a few highlights. For example the outstanding achievement of Al Cox, manager of the Capitol in Wilkes-Barre, Pa., who put on eight stage weddings in his theatre in one week. Imagine the work involved in selling merchants on the idea of one single wedding much less eight! It means that instead of promoting one item from each source you must get eight. So in the final analysis we find that Al secured free, eight engagement and wedding rings for each bride, eight bedroom suites, eight traveling wardrobes, eight evening gowns, three pairs of shoes for each of the eight brides and grooms, wrist watches for all the grooms, etc., etc.

This just about tops anything in its line that has ever crossed our path and we doubt whether the record will be touched by anyone else for a long, long time to come. Al Cox and every man who aided in this marvelous stunt deserves a hearty round of applause from the entire industry. Apparently they are doing things while others are still just talking.

W. E. Schmidt, in charge of the Pottsville district, one of the toughest to be found for any kind of costless exploitation succeeded in keeping every house in his district right up among the leaders by promoting close to five thousand dollars worth of merchandise and lineage. When you stop to make comparisons between Schmidt's district and some of those in the better spots then you can better appreciate what the Pottsville boys accomplished.

It seems a shame that we can't go into complete details and names in connection with this swell front on the showmanship line but you can take our solemn word for it; Publix can stick its chest out to the nth degree and shout about such organization spirit and effort as that displayed by this particular division. If every other division succeeded in getting but a small percentage of the Walsh-Jackson crowd, then Sam Katz Week must have been a mighty profitable affairs for the circuit.

The Round Table Club takes its hat off to every man in Walsh's division and wants them to know that we are proud of them all. If they could only broadcast some of their pep and ability to the boys who are sleeping in ruts then the whole business would take on a far more rosy hue.

"CHICK."

DICK KIRSCHBAUM'S LOBBY LAFFS!

We are wondering how many theatres are witnessing this rather familiar scene? We have often advised you to lay off references to "Cool and Comfortable" when you honestly know that you can't deliver the goods.

GOGGLE IDENTITY GAG AIDED HENDRICKS TO PUT OVER HIS SHOW

Our friend, Bill Hendricks, at the Smoot Theatre down in Parkersburg, W. Va., utilized a stunt on "The Crowd Roars" that went over with a lot to spare during his campaign.

Bill's idea was a goggle identity gag, whereby he ran photos in the local paper of prominent men about town wearing driving goggles and racing helmets. He offered free tickets to readers identifying the men. This stunt, as can readily be seen, may be used on almost any picture you play, being easily adaptable for various gags.

Another of Bill's offerings to the theatregoers was a co-operative page carrying 12 merchants' ads, an ad for the picture and a box explaining the stunt. Each ad bore a picture of a racing car, and each merchant had a number on a miniature racing machine in the window of his store. Readers went from store to store getting the numbers of the cars and sending them to the "Merchants' Sweepstakes Editor" on the local paper, in order to receive passes. The stunt netted Bill lots of good will from the merchants.

He also tied up with the classified section of the newspapers on an "answer to questions" idea which is so well known to showmen, who realize its value, that we won't set it forth here at this time, as space is pretty valuable and we want to ask Bill to keep us posted on the rest of his activities. Will you do it, Bill?

Buhler at Fox-Philly

Frank Buhler, former official of the Stanley Company of America and manager of the Stanley Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa., during the Jules Mastbaum regime, has replaced Dave Idzal as manager of the Fox-Philadelphia Theatre.

Idzal, who has been in charge of the Fox-Philadelphia for the past five years, will make an inspection tour of Skouras theatres in the New York and New England districts, and then assume his duties as manager of the Fox Theatre in Detroit, Mich.

PETE EGAN STAGED "FUNNIES PARADE" AT CAPITOL IN ALBERTA

Pete Egan, our enterprising friend from the Palace Theatre in Calgary, Alberta, gets lots of fun out of reading the comic supplements in the newspapers, but that is as nothing compared to the laughs he obtained when he staged a "Funnies Parade" recently, among the kids of his city.

A tie-up was first arranged with the Hudson Bay Company, one of the largest stores in the city, and through this contact Pete knocked off quite a bit of newspaper advertising. The city's youngsters were then invited to participate in the parade, and told to pick out whatever type of costume they wished, providing, of course, it was like any of the favorite comic characters.

The kids thought the idea a knockout, and they were out in droves on the Saturday afternoon Pete ran the gag. The stunt is one that you, too, can run profitably, especially during the summer months, as nearly all the live wire stores are on the lookout for anything unusual that will attract interest to them.

ANIMATED DISPLAY PROVED GOOD SELLING MEDIUM FOR LEXINGTON'S SHOW-WOMAN

Many times in the past we have published photographs showing some of the attractive and certainly unusual fronts erected under the supervision of Miss Anna Belle Ward down in Lexington, Ky.

Here is one of her latest. The enlarged cut-out figure of Lillian Harvey is animated by having the crossed leg on the display move up and down. This, naturally, attracted attention and no doubt made many of the natives curious to see the picture. The photo reproduced below will convey a fair idea of how this display was made.

Another very odd feature of Miss Ward's displays is the fact that they are built on the street level instead of above the marquee. Of course, one can't get away with this arrangement everywhere, but the important point to stress is that Miss Ward can do it and that is what counts.

It should not require too great a stretch of your imagination to visualize the effectiveness of this display and especially so when it is illuminated at night. Maybe the whole layout suggests something to other showmen in quest of a different slant to attract attention. If such is the case you might give this idea some consideration and see if it can be worked out in some early coming attraction.

As in everything else accomplished by this show-woman, her activities always win a lot of praise from the other members of the Club. Keep sending them along, Miss Ward, and we'll keep on showing them to the rest of the showmen.

STOWELL DISPLAY CAN BE USED FOR MANY OTHER FILMS

An attention-getting foyer display made by Harry C. Stowell, manager of the Paramount Theatre, Middletown, N. Y., is illustrated in the accompanying photo.

Lights were dimmed in the foyer and spots in different colors were used to make it more attractive. A 150-watt bulb enclosed in a shadow-box, with a blinker attachment, also produced a striking effect when in operation. Strip lights at the bottom of cutout were also used with a blinker, which, when flashing, lit up the entire display.

The display described above can be used over and over again, for as each picture is played a new title is set in. It attracted a lot of attention for Stowell and he is passing the idea along for the benefit of his fellow Club members.

KENDALL MADE FINE DISPLAYS FOR USE ON "RED HEAD" FILM

An effective front and lobby display was recently made for "Red Headed Woman" by F. M. Kendall, one of Lee Goldberg's men in the Warner-Louisville, Ky., district, and manager of the Empress Theatre at Owensboro, Ky.

He had a large banner up over the door in the foyer which read: "Wives! Beware! A Red Headed Woman Is Coming to Town." All banners carried a sketch of Jean Harlow, taken from a drawing in the press sheet.

In the center of the lobby, in full view of all people passing by the theatre, a full sized sheet of beaver board was used to reproduce the book shown in the tie-up page of the press sheet. The book was colored in bright yellow and orange on a blue background, with lettering of red and black. He also used 24-inch discs of beaver board, painted on both sides and done in colors to match the copy. One set was labeled "Blonde," another "Brunette" and the other "Red Head." These discs are shown on the press sheet directly underneath the sketch of the book. All campaign signs carrying the word "Red" were painted in red, using a flame effect on the top of the letters as shown in the three-column mat on page five of the press sheet. Paper streamers for windows carried copy, "The Book of the Year—Red Headed Woman—Now Becomes the Picture of the Year." Another read, "Is It True About Red Headed Girls."

Again we are indebted to Lee Goldberg for passing along information concerning activities of managers in his zone and we hope he'll keep up the good work and let us hear some more from him.

MILTON KRESS MADE ATTRACTIVE DISPLAY AND BOOKSTORE DEAL

It may be somewhat late in many parts of the country for displays on "Rue Morgue" but the work of Milton Kress, manager of the Strand Theatre, Meridian, Miss., on that picture is interesting, we believe, and we're therefore showing how he dressed his lobby and the result of a tie-up made with a local book store.

A 24-sheet cutout of title and cast was placed in the lobby, as shown in the upper portion of the accompanying illustration, along with a three-sheet cutout of ape carrying a girl. Also note the large cutout letters spelling out, "The Super Shock." The book store display, shown in lower portion of photo, was in for a week in advance and throughout run of picture. This display consisted of book covers and cards from Grosset and Dunlop; also one-sheet cutout in centre of display with window cards on each side. Picture title, name of theatre and playdates appeared on front window glass.

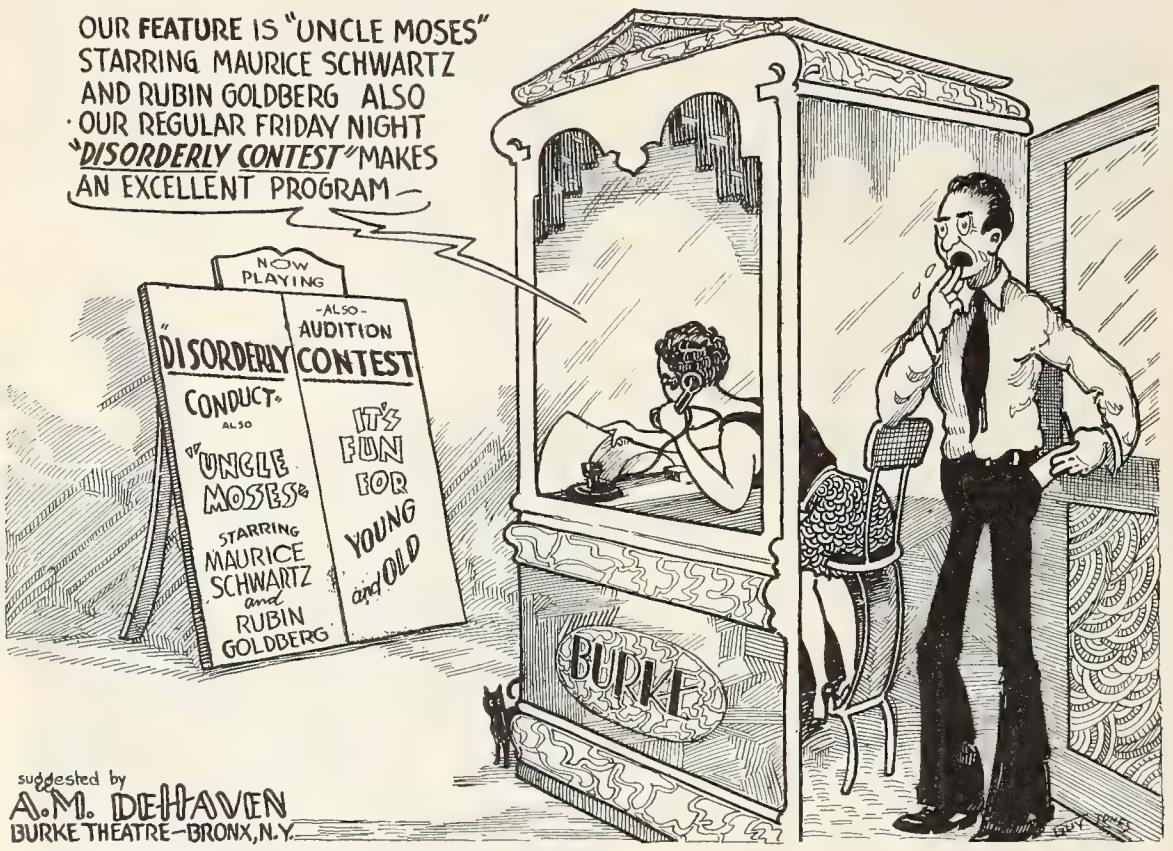
Perhaps some of our members have yet to play this picture and it's also quite possible that some may be able to adapt the same scheme of display to other pictures. At any rate, we're obliged to Kress for sending the information our way and hope he'll contribute further examples of his work.

KOHEN ENGINEERED BIG GIVE-AWAY OF ELECTRICAL GOODS



An elaborate electrical exposition and give-away of modern electrical appliances was recently engineered by Spitzer Kohen, manager of the Warner theatre at Elizabeth, N. J.

He gave away fifteen awards on a Tuesday evening and as many more on a following Friday that totaled $365. The Jersey State Electric Company was the "merchant." The firm also paid for 15,000 giveaway tickets.

In cluded among the articles were a waffle iron; a junior lamp; 2 electric fans; 4 boudoir sets; 1 electric stove; 2 smokemasters; a desk lamp; 4 clocks; a heating pad; a percolator; 2 mix-masters; 4 lamps; a toastmaster; console set; a small vacuum cleaner and numerous other appliances.

KEEPING UP WITH THE TIMES!

By GUY JONES

Accidents can happen, but in this case the sign may be to blame!

COLUMNISTS CHANT TO LOUIE "WHY NOT TAKE ORLOVE ME?"

His newspaper friends are always looking out for his welfare, declares Louis Orlove, of the Uptown Theatre in Milwaukee, Wisconsin, and now they even talk about his white pants.

Louie has been knocking off free space and publicity from the papers for so long that it has gotten to be a habit with him. The newspaper men though, especially the columnists, sort of like this.

So when Louie appeared around the theatre recently and sported a pair of immaculate white trousers, the local columnist claimed that friends engaged Louie in the reproduced dialogue.

"Isn't your theatre cool and comfortable?" they asked.

"Sure is," responded Louis.

"Don't you tell people it's the best place in the world to cool off."

"Sure do."

"Well, then, why don't you wear a suit of Eskimo clothes to prove it?"

Louie laughed at the gag and proved he could take it by bringing his friends next door for Eskimo pies.

WOOD WENT FLYING; BUT DIDN'T KNOW IT WOULD HAPPEN

Jimmy Wood, Jr., manager of the Strand Theatre, in Newport, Ky., was ali up in the air recently and it came about as part of his exploitation on "The Lost Squadron."

He arranged a tie-up with the local airport to feature an air circus. The colonel in charge of the field was all for the idea. On the day of the carnival, he asked Jimmy to sit in the plane for a moment. The next thing the showman knew he was flying.

The planes flew very low down Main Street and brought out all the natives, who were in danger of catching stiff necks from watching the barrel rolls, squirrel cage loops, wingovers and other thrilling stunts.

Unfortunately, Jimmy had a circus in town to buck the picture. But being a smart showman he pulled a wow that had those in the know panicky. When the circus featured its parade he drove along behind it—IN A TRUCK CARRYING BANNERS PLUGGING HIS SHOW!

The truck bearing the banners even went alongside the carnival grounds. This stunt, plus the ace lobby display Jimmy featured did a lot to sell the picture, and all it cost the house was a few tickets and a credit.

MAKING 'EM STOP!

Women especially are susceptible to this sort of gag, and so E. A. Steinback of the Stanley Theatre in Baltimore worked it with great success. Imprinting the Horoscopes with seat-selling copy that ties in with the picture is, of course, an important part of this stunt. Although it was specifically used with "Palmy Days," it can also be worked out with many other pictures.

"HAPPINESS WEEK" WAS BELL-TAYLOR SHOW ACHIEVEMENT

"Happiness Week" was celebrated recently in Boston by Managing Director Henry Taylor of the Metropolitan Theatre and Publicity Director Floyd Bell. But it is hard to tell who was happiest, the two showmen or the patrons. The patrons saw a great show and the showmen staged a great show to put another show across.

Nothing Overlooked!

The theatre's marquee was especially decorated for the occasion. The house lobby contained comic mirrors such as used at Coney Island and other amusement resorts for distorted reflections. Two orchestras dispensed popular melodies throughout the entire afternoon and evening. Dancing and bridge were offered in the Grand Lounge. Along both sides of the vast lobby was strung electrically lighted silver stars with the slogan: "Follow the Stars to the Grand Lounge."

Here we break in a moment to comment on the "stars" idea and to say it is a corker for any of the Club members who care to use it. It can be seen that the stars might even carry pictures of various featured sign.

But to get back to the rest of the live-wire showmen's work. They staged a newspaper stunt the like of which has never been seen in Boston. And it will take some going to beat it! Through a tie-up 20,000 lines of free space was given the theatre by the Boston Traveler, by means of an announcement series inviting amateur musicians to play on the stage of the theatre. The musicians, 100 in number, were selected by the theatre orchestra conductor and played on the stage twice daily during "Happiness Week." Then twenty of the best were selected by the conductor and presented with $2,000 worth of musical instruments donated by a nationally known manufacturer. The orchestra also broadcast.

Gifts galore were showered upon the patrons during the special week. Building lots, an electric refrigerator, flowers and candy were among the presents which created tons of goodwill from ladies and gentlemen.

Merchants Exhibits Too!

An array of exhibits from the finest merchants in Beantown dressed up the mezzanine, which was called "Pleasure Island" for the occasion. The display included everything from refrigerators, to meats, to shoes, to gowns. More than 8,000 lines of free advertising was obtained by the theatre on this stunt alone.

Talent recruited free from the local radio stations performed evenings in the Grand Lounge furnishing added entertainment and happiness to dancers frequenting the spot.

A large department store sponsored an astrologist who gave readings to the patrons of the house. She also appeared on the air a number of times during the engagement.

But here . . . here . . . how we ramble on! But when you see the way showmen work to put over their houses you sort of forget that the lid has to be clamped down on space some place. Why, first thing you know those Boston live-wires will be promoting 20,000 lines from us. But we'll give it to them any time they have something of value to pass on to Club members and fellow showmen. Right, Boys?

STREET DANCING WAS GOOD BET FOR WASSON TO BRING CROWDS OUT

A swell summer gag for any man's town providing that "man" has the show-sense of making capital out of a good idea. That's our opinion of Lionel Wasson's street dance gag pulled in conjunction with certain pictures that merit such a tie-up.

Wasson is the manager of the Capitol Theatre in Sioux City, Ia., and a showman of no small ability. The crowd in front of his theatre is sufficient proof of this statement. Here it has all of the trimmings. A good dance orchestra, clean street for dancing and in general a stunt that is guaranteed to pull the crowds to the theatre. That he succeeds in getting the majority of them into the theatre in the course of the evening is merely to prove that he is not pulling any kind of a gag that will hurt his box office receipts in any way.

Orchestra can be secured through various forms of tie-ups. Space for dancing can be in front of the theatre, roped off, of course, or in the lobby if it is spacious enough and cool.

If this idea suggests something to you which you can work out to your own satisfaction or profit, great. Incidentally, if such is the case and you do put it over, send us the dope so your brother managers can benefit as you may be doing in this case.

We'd like to hear a lot more from Lionel Wasson and what he is doing to keep business stepping along in spite of the hot weather and other handicaps during this time of the year.

LEE GOLDBERG CALLS OUR ATTENTION TO A LETTER FROM PATRON

Lee L. Goldberg, well known zone manager for Warner Theatres at Louisville, Ky., calls our attention to a letter received by H. C. Neale, manager of the Princess and Dixie theatres, Mayfield, Ky. One of Neale's patrons on a tour of the west wrote him as follows:

"Have been through many big cities on our way to Seattle and have not been able to see a show yet as all of the theatres were showing pictures previously shown in Mayfield. I just thought you would be interested in this bit of information. . . ."

The man who sent the letter was a superintendent of schools and the Mayfield papers published it. Mr. Goldberg also took advantage of the opportunity to use it as institutional copy in weekly programs, stating to readers that the same situation would befall Warner patrons traveling from Henderson, Owensboro, Fulton, Princeton and Danville, other cities in the Louisville zone.

We also note that theatre programs issued in the above-mentioned zone have been featuring a contest on best letters of not more than fifty words each on what pictures of the week were most enjoyable to patrons. First, second and third awards are offered.

We thank Lee Goldberg for making it possible to keep in touch with the men in his territory and hope that the future will bring many other communications to Club headquarters. That patron's letter he brought to our attention nicely illustrates the interest and pride that some people take in local institutions. The fact that he went to the trouble of writing a letter to Neale was sound proof that he appreciated the up-to-the-minute service being rendered by local theatre management. Neale has taken George Meyer's place at Mayfield.

ZACK FREEDMAN SOLD LOCAL CRITIC IDEA OF COMBINATION BILL

Following his promotion from the Hempstead Theatre, Hempstead, L. I., to management of the Lynbrook Theatre, Lynbrook, L. I., Zack Freedman changed from a straight picture policy to a combination of pictures and vaudeville.

The first real break from a paper came to him soon after his arrival in his new location when he convinced a rather hard boiled critic that the combination policy was the one cure for a so-called depression in amusement circles. Consequently the critic wrote a full column on the subject, analyzing the bill at the Lynbrook and recommending it to his readers.

USING MIMEOGRAPH ON CELLOPHANE IS BLANCHARD'S STUNT

Cellophane is proving one of the most popular and most useful of the recent contributions to these shores. Thus you may be sure the showmen are going to figure out a way to put it to their use. And to J. M. Blanchard of the Strand Theatre, Sunbury, Pa., goes the credit for a unique idea.

He mimeographed a sheet of cellophane! It was letter size and clipped with an okay clip onto a blank sheet of paper. The cellophane imprint carried the house program for the week, and also announced a "Publix Bargain Week" tie-up arranged with the local merchants.

The letter said in part: "Dear Patron: YOU CAN EASILY SEE THROUGH THIS LETTER. You will easily see what a host of good things are in store for you." Then followed the "Bargain Announcements" and the theatre program, also a special "Texaco Day" tie-up for children. Small cards carrying the theatre attractions on one side and the merchants' names on the other were also distributed at stores and at the theatre for the "Bargain Announcement."

Blanchard is doing some excellent work at Sunbury and is keeping the town right on the showman map. We hope to hear from him again very soon, as we know he will have something interesting to pass along.

PITTSBURGH CAMPAIGN EXECUTED BY TYSON PROVED SUCCESSFUL

A preview for critics was one of the ways George Tyson, Warner exploiter in Pittsburgh put over "The Mouthpiece" in the Smoky City.

Following this in rapid fire style, was a teaser campaign on the screen, radio announcements two weeks in advance, a sound truck two days before the picture opened, milk bottle tie-up with 15,000 bottle hangars going into as many homes, a laundry tie-up, summons heralds, letters to all the city's attorneys, banners across the important streets, and teasers on ends of newspaper boxes downtown, followed by regular posters during the run. As a result, the picture played to additional business.

Another stunt that aided Tyson recently was pulled on "So Big" when he distributed 30,000 throwaways in loaves of bread, and also promoted 400 taxicabs to carry signs announcing the picture.

With George stepping right along, it doesn't look as though any pictures are going to hit the wrong side of the ledger if he can help them win by exploitation ideas. How about it, George?

HARRY NUNAN IS NOW AT HELM OF EDISON THEATRE, WEST COAST

Now that Harry Nunan has taken over management of the Edison Theatre, San Francisco, Calif., his fellow Club members may expect to hear a lot more about what he and his house staff are doing to put pictures across.

A few of his recent stunts included some colorful exploitation for "Safe in Hell," and a revival of the Gift Nite idea. Due to poor lighting at the time a snapshot was taken of the lobby we cannot clearly reproduce the photo of the attractive signs, etc., made for the former, however, the original does show that card writer Jack Reed was on the job. Doorman, ushers and cashier were dressed in devil costumes and the ticket box was painted to give a flame and smoke effect.

The leading neighborhood merchants are generously supporting the Gift Nite stunt, donating groceries, cakes, jewelry, hams, chickens, dinner orders and merchandise orders to make the move a success. In addition the theatre is giving away a two and one-half pound box of candy at every matinee, which is proving tremendously popular with lady patrons.

We're mighty sorry that Nunan's snapshots are not sharp enough to reproduce and hope that the next lot he sends along will measure up to requirements. His friends and fellow Club members will be interested to hear what he is doing from time to time to sell his shows, and we hope he'll become a regular contributor to this department. May we also remind him to send along some shots of any poster work being turned out by Reed.

WILLIAMS PROMOTED ELECTRICAL SHOW!

Bayonne, N. J., has been the scene of many electrical storms, but it received its first electrical show recently when Tony Williams, manager of the De Witt Theatre, staged one in the lobby of the house.

Williams tied up with two corporations and through a dealer obtained a display of radio, electrical appliances and electrical refrigerators. The lobby, tastefully arranged for the occasion, as the photo shows, harbored the show for two and one-half weeks, during which time plenty of comment was rife. There was no mistaking the fact that a display of unusual interest to Bayonne theatregoers was on view. Take a look at the banner and the many signs in the photo.

The local dealer more than did his share in assisting Tony. He sent out 50,000 coupons in addition to circulars, and also conducted a great newspaper campaign. Then, at the close of the drive, he mailed 3,000 letters as a follow up, offering a liberal discount on purchases made during the month of the exhibit. In this way the theatre name was mentioned in many homes.

Tony obtained nearly $2,000 worth of gifts which were presented to fortunate patrons as a goodwill stunt. And it proved to be a real goodwill gag! And in closing, we want to state that the exhibit was conducted in a very dignified way, which is Tony's usual way of handling the big things such as an electrical show. We hope he'll have some more to pass along to us soon.

"MADE IN LAKELAND" PRODUCTS SHOW PROVED A MONEY-MAKER!

Bolivar Hyde, Jr., Worked Up Great Interest Through This Unusually Effective Tie-up With All Local Industries!

BOLIVAR HYDE, JR., the enterprising showman from the Polk Theatre, Lakeland, Florida, passes along to the Club an idea which we believe deserves considerable elaboration, as it is one that showmen everywhere can make use of to good advantage.

Bolivar's recent and very successful stunt was a "Made in Lakeland" Products show, during the course of which he gathered reams of newspaper publicity and barrels of good-will from the local merchants and the Chamber of Commerce.

You, too, can stage a stunt of this sort. It will take work, yes, hard work, perhaps, but we are sure that the result will more than justify the labor.

The First Step!

Contact the Chamber of Commerce. If you aren't situated in a town with a Chamber of Commerce, then band together the local merchants, even if you have to give them a special show or a party to get them all in—But Get Them Together! Then give them a logical sales talk, and if they are up-and-coming business men they will readily agree to co-operate.

Let us suppose, for the sake of coherency, that your town has a Chamber of Commerce. Broach them with your plan, and suggest that they send out letters to all the members and manufacturers asking their co-operation for the stunt to be held at your theatre. An advertising fund might even be created, by which the dealers can run ads co-operatively in the local papers.

The next job for the Chamber is to see that banners—which can be made cheaply by either the business men or the theatre—are placed at advantageous spots in the city and on the highways.

Lastly, contact should be made so that samples can be distributed throughout the week, or three days of the show—the time, of course, being set at the discretion of all parties concerned.

Now the Newspaper!

So much for the Chamber of Commerce. The next contact is the newspaper. Here the showman must do the talking, and he should be able to arrange for a number of stories and free ads plugging the products' show. The local sheet will no doubt be glad to co-operate and might even go to the extent of editorializing on the idea.

In return for the newspaper co-operation, the sheet can be invited to occupy a spot in the lobby by means of a blown up 40x60 carrying a picture of the front page and stressing the value of a newspaper to a community. The paper might also be prevailed upon to act as co-sponsor of the show. In this way cascades of publicity are assured.

In the matter of window displays, some very effective pieces of exploitation can be turned out. Every merchant in town should be glad to plug the town as well as his product. It is quite true that he may not be a manufacturer, but he assuredly uses the manufacturer's product. The theatre can arrange to print display cards bearing appropriate and co-operative copy that will be sure to win over the dealers.

And now for some of the million, or so things that the alert showman will have to work on if he wants to put over with a bang something than can very easily become a yearly institution.

There's the theatre mailing list. It undoubtedly contains a number of names of people in outlying towns. Invite them in as the theatre's and the town's guests during the special show. And it shouldn't be hard to obtain from other Chambers of Commerce names of residents in nearby towns.

Then the Advertising!

Here, the theatre will have to go the manufacturers one better. Therefore, it is wise to use the idea worked by Bolivar Hyde. He inserted a small box in the ad, as a guest ticket, which invited the readers to clip the box and bring it to the theatre, where two persons would be admitted for the price of one. The proof of the drawing power of the ad was seen in the number of persons forcing their way into the box-office for the extra tickets. And the newspaper was plenty pleased!

The trailers should have a touch of originality to them. In addition to one carrying the names of the manufacturers, you might even be able to make up a trailer and have prominent persons in the town be seen eating or using some of the products. The bigger manufacturers might be quite willing to co-operate with you on this one, and pay for the price of shooting the film.

Nearly every showman knows the value of color effects. These will be found indispensable to the success of the display in the lobby or the foyer. But make sure that COOL colors are used. No one wants to look at "reds" during the summer months. Red is alright should you stage your show in the winter.

If you have a theatre artist, he will know the correct combinations. But if you haven't an artist, perhaps your local paint man can give you a color chart, from which you can work out your various effects. The local electrical dealer will be glad to help you with special lighting, especially if you tell him you'll give him a credit line. The same goes for the artist or paint man.

The showman should take charge of all copy on the displays in his lobby. He should pay for the signs, etc., and it might be a good idea to have the name of the theatre placed on the bottom of every card, not in the manner of a tie-in plug though! Just place the name on the bottom and let the institutional plug speak for itself.

The samples, spoken about some paragraphs ago, should be handed out at the theatre to insure a double good-will value—the manufacturers and the theatre!

Proper Timing Essential!

If you can set your show for a week ahead, it will give you an excellent opportunity to get in some grand plugs on your weekly program and your heralds. The town should be completely conscious of the great event to take place at the theatre, before it even happens.

If you run for a week, special nights can be offered, such as having the executives or the employees of the manufacturers as guests of honor for the evening. Or, if that doesn't appeal to you, special rates can be fixed for the employees of the various companies, and theatre parties arranged. This would allow you to reserve each night for a tribute to some highly regarded local figure such as the Mayor, President of the Chamber of Commerce, church dignitaries, school heads, chief of the fire department, or commissioner of police. These nights should all be mentioned in the ads, and in a large display frame out front of the theatre.

The local photographer might even be induced to lend his services and snap a picture each night of crowds going into the theatre. Some of the people in the picture could have their heads encircled and the picture placed out front of the theatre with a notice that upon identification, the fortunates designated by the circle would be presented with tickets to the following week's show.

There are numerous angles, like the above, with which the on-the-job showman is familiar and it is unnecessary for us to set them forth here because we know that when a showman takes a job like a "Made in Lakeland" show on his hands, he will leave no angle untouched.

So, in closing, let us say that Hyde's idea is one of the greatest of the warm weather (or winter!) stunts that can be pulled off. If properly carried out it should keep the cash register jingling a merry tune throughout the entire run. And once you get them in the theatre, you can sell them on next week's product, too.

Same Idea Can Apply For Other Towns Where Showmen Are Willing To Put Special Effort Into Worthwhile B.O. Builder!

Just about a year ago we published the details of a similar idea created and put over to excellent returns by Manager Coppack of the Paramount Theatre in Staten Island, N. Y.

Now we pass along one from Bolivar Hyde, Jr., well known showman from the South and one of the most active members of the Round Table Club.

There is no denying that this type of stunt calls for hard work—and plenty of it. But no real showman will dodge hard work if there is any possibility of success. That's why they are real showmen. Read over this plan for duplicating a local product show and see if there are any possibilities of your putting this idea over in your own town. It is well worth the effort.

CALDWELL PUT OVER HIS USUAL THOROUGH WORK ON "RED HEAD"

The usual, thorough campaign methods employed in the past by Wally Caldwell, manager of Loew's Valentine Theatre, Toledo, Ohio, were again manifest in this manager's exploitation activities in behalf of "Red Headed Woman" and the following resume of his campaign is, incidentally, an entry for the M-G-M contest now in force on this picture.

Caldwell's campaign included a special book window in a leading department store in the heart of the city; displays of 11x14s with theatre copy in 16 selected downtown windows; one sheet cards in the largest downtown garage; the placing of 6 star stills with theatre copy framed and spotted in two huge windows in a large downtown shoe store; six locations obtained gratis for special 3-sheets; Harlow "dimple layout" and story on page two of city's leading newspaper; a tie-up with a beauty shop that was good for a 2-column seven-inch display ad on amusement page; a large Jean Harlow star head in Roto section of a Sunday paper two weeks in advance; long single column art on Harlow in another paper one week in advance; a striking 2-column Harlow art in leading paper one week in advance; tie-up with newspaper for a four-day Harlow Baby Identification contest, with art; an Around-the-Clock layout in another newspaper second day after opening; a two-day national newspaper campaign in all papers, and a special 30-inch advance ad in a leading Sunday paper.

Additional newspaper effort included special story before opening in a Polish daily; special in an American Legion publication; another special in a neighborhood paper with large circulation, and special stories and ads in 18 rural papers in a radius of 50 miles with a total circulation of 38,000.

Okay, Wally, and good luck to you in your bid for honors in the contest. We also note that you staged a Revival Week not long ago and if the snaps we have at hand were not so faint we could show all your friends and fellow Club members shots of a swell swim-suit window arranged with a big department store and the gayly decorated theatre front. Windows of several vacant stores in the downtown section of the city were also effectively stenciled for the occasion. However, better luck with the photos next time—and don't forget to keep us posted.

IN YE OLDEN DAYS!

As far back as '25, John W. Creamer, manager of the Fox-Palace Theatre, Muscatine, Iowa, realized the drawing power of good short subjects and played them up in his newspaper advertising. In the ad shown above, space is almost equally divided between feature and Units 2, 3, 4 and 5, the latter all short features. He even billed an exceptionally good short above a feature in those bygone days.

"Keep Kool" Exhibit

Local stores and national distributors cooperated with the Palace Theatre, Jamestown, Pa., on a "Keep Kool" exhibit, held in the lobby of the theatre.

Summer clothing, refrigerators, camping outfits, electrical appliances, ice, bottled drinks, and milk comprised the display. The contributing merchants plugged the theatre and the "Keep Kool" idea in their ads.

BOUCHER GARNERS PLENTY OF FREE SPACE IN NEWSPAPER

If Frank Boucher were to compile the newspaper publicity he has been receiving in his local papers, and send them in scrapbooks to us there probably wouldn't be room enough left here to store a postage stamp.

The Capitol in Winchester has certainly received quite a few newspaper notices from a sheet that is hard to crack. We note that Frank obtained quite a break recently by informing the newspapers that Warner Brothers had presented the girl who won the "Queen Shenandoah IX" title, during the recently conducted Shenandoah Apple Blossom Festival in Winchester, with a complete reel of sound and silent news clips of the affair.

Another good break was obtained when Frank showed the paper an article appearing in MOTION PICTURE HERALD, stating that Winchester is a favored city in the matter of picture selection, and enumerating the various films the town received, many of them prior to Broadway and big city showings.

Still more publicity was received—and this time weeks of stories—on a refrigerator gag Frank ran with the co-operation of the manufacturers.

The local dealer ran ads and distributed heralds announcing the event. We are showing a photo of the refrigerator, as it looked in the lobby before the presentation. It showed up great and pepped up the appearance of the spot 100 per cent. Ballots were given with every paid admission, and the person in the theatre holding the corresponding number to one called from the stage was given the beautiful refrigerator.

The stunt met with the usual Boucher success—by which we mean it went over with a wallop! And now, before we sign off on Frank's activities, we'd like to say a word or two about the neat little card he used on "One Hour with You." This card, made up in black and white, calling card size, was paid for by the local pharmacy, and besides being distributed at every doctor's and dentist's office in town, was also handed about at the pharmacy. The copy carried a notice that "Your Next Appointment (was at the Pharmacy) and An Hour with Maurice Chevalier (at the theatre)."

The card was enclosed in a small white envelope, which bore an appropriate quotation in French. Results were pleasing to the pharmacy as well as Boucher.

INTERNATIONAL IS RIGHT!

The Managers' Round Table Club can surely emphasize the fact that it is an international organization of showmen. Only this week we enrolled additional members from Paris, France, and such far-off spots as the Dutch East Indies, African Gold Coast and New Zealand.

Active members are now located in practically every country on the globe and include, among other places, Australia, Germany, Argentina, British West Indies, Bermuda, Canal Zone, Central America, China, Cuba, England, Sweden, Finland, Hawaii, Holland, India, Mexico, Porto Rico, Siam, South Africa, Straits Settlements, Turkey, etc.

The activities of our foreign members are always most interesting and permit the rest of us to get some idea of how they merchandise their attractions. In this connection we have found that exploitation and ballyhoo stunts predominate in most far-off places. Apparently the theatre-going population of such countries can be impressed and sold via such methods.

Watch the Club pages for foreign showmanship activities. You may be surprised to find that you can make use of some of their ideas.

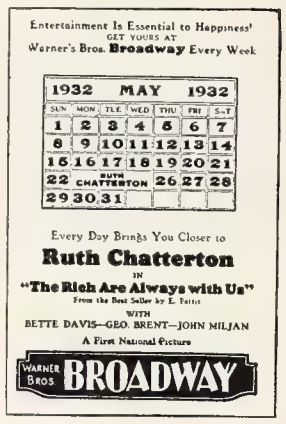
"LAUGH AND WORLD LAUGHS WITH YOU" DECLARES HIEHLE

Well, according to Ed Hiehle, things are about the same at the Midland Theatre in Newark, Ohio, and he keeps going right along selling shows in his well known fashion.

Ed's latest stunt is to make July a "Laff Month" and he is having a lot of success with his campaign. His "June Special" of "Summer Prices" clicked, we are glad to report, and it looks as though "Laff Month" will also be chalked up a winner.

As you can see, this is sort of a letter to let Ed's many Club friends know what he is doing. We notice he has a corking array of pictures lined up on his month's program. But he has also placed a box on the program which informs the public that the theatre is playing them pretty close to release date and just about a jump and a half ahead of the censor board, which, should said board delay it, would necessitate a change of program.

However, Ed just yawns and says: "Look out for the 19th Hole. It has tripped many a good man."



Shirley Will Rebuild

Bill Shirley, well known upper New York State theatre man and president and manager of Farash Theatres, Schenectady, N. Y., recently announced that the Erie, destroyed by fire, will be rebuilt.

STENOGRAPHERS WERE TOLD BY A CALENDAR WHEN FILM WAS DUE

There's no escaping the fact that when Walter Morris sets out to inject novelty into his selling campaigns, he certainly achieves his objective.

Walter doped out a couple of novel ideas recently at the Broadway Theatre in Charlotte, North Carolina, and we are reproducing one of them here, as it seems to us that showmen who have been plugging the office districts and trying to keep those "always going to the movies" ladies, the stenographers appraised of their product will want to use it.

It consists of an attractively colored card about twelve inches long and three inches wide, which, when folded, stands up somewhat in the manner of a calendar, or a desk clock. The front page is self explanatory, and you can see its value by glancing at the cut, where it is clearly shown that Ruth Chatterton, in "The Rich Are Always With Us," will play the 23d, 24th and 25th of the month. On back of the calendar the coming attractions are listed.

Should you want to look at this calendar first hand, why not drop a note to Walter and we are sure he will be glad to furnish you with one and also give you any information you may desire on its make-up.

These two recent stunts met with a great reception, and we take pleasure in passing them along and, as well, we offer you a photo of the effective outside display Walter created to plug a picture. Study the photo carefully and you will see that not much money went into the construction of the front. Perhaps such a front is just what you have been contemplating creating for your pictures. Why not give it a try? And especially try Morris' idea of using cut-out, tinselled letters to plug his admission price!

Thanks, Walter, for passing along your work, and we wish we could get down there and see you in action again.

Truitt Out Scouting

Jack Truitt, former owner and operator of the Plaza Theatre, Kansas City, has been out in the field for Fox Midwest looking after lease adjustments.

Club Index for Month of JULY

Herewith we list the many items of exploitation, etc., which appeared on the Club pages during the month of July. By keeping this issue close at hand you can refer to it whenever necessary as a means of locating some particular form of show-selling. We hope our members and readers are finding this service useful. The Club would welcome suggestions to improve it.

GET SET FOR THE NEW SCHOOL TERM

Although schools do not reopen for several weeks, it's not too early to plan your forms of exploitation in this direction. During the past year this department has published many valuable suggestions for the building of good will among school executives, department heads and students and has touched extensively on different methods of cooperation between school and theatre. Comb through your Club files and set aside those to your liking. Following are a few ideas that come to our mind offhand:

Perhaps the foremost thought in the minds of students starting a new term is the accumulation of supplies necessary to pursue their studies. Text books, of course, are more or less out of the question for reason that these are obtained from a source designated by school boards, etc. However, there remains the all-important accessories such as brief cases, book covers, pencil sets, book straps, note books, etc. Most of these articles can be purchased very inexpensively in quantity lots and arrangements may be made for any of them to carry a theatre imprint. An article such as a brief case may appear a costly item, but there are firms that manufacture a durable case at remarkably low cost. Considering the fact that a student takes one of these around several months out of the year, a courtesy imprint on the case is bound to receive wide circulation.

Then there is the matter of tying up with the principal for awards of passes to the theatre to students who make high or outstanding marks in their studies over certain periods. We recall the weekly pass to those who excel in study and deportment, and the award of a month's pass to the honor student for the Quarter.

We have also observed that coaches are interested in most any reasonable stunt that will stimulate athletes to better results. It is our recollection that many Round Tablers tied up with the heads of school athletic associations for the granting of theatre passes to those who best qualified in both department and athletic pursuit.

A number of pictures on your schedule will be particularly adaptable to exploitation among students. List these and discuss them with the principal, with the thought in mind that he will grant permission to post appropriate notices on the bulletin board. This has been accomplished by a host of Club members.

The above is just a brief resume and only covers a few ideas that were uppermost in the writer's mind at the time. Many other good slants will be suggested to the enterprising manager and we hope to hear what our members are doing in this direction to exploit their theatre and attractions. We'll pass the ideas along as fast as they reach us.

BATHING BEAUTIES PLEASED PATRONS VIEWING THE REVUE

When Dick Kennedy put on a "Bathing Beauty Revue" recently at the Paramount Theatre in Montgomery, Ala., he put on something that proved a sensational success and, having been such, will undoubtedly aid other showmen wanting to use the idea.

Dick tied-up with the Alabama Journal, one of the city's leading newspapers, and received from them 100 per cent co-operation. His next move was to contact 12 leading merchants, and arrange to have each business house sponsor a girl.

Each beauty was known by the business man she represented, such as Lois Goins as "Miss Young's Ice Cream Company"; Edna McNabb as "Miss Tropical Gardens," and so on.

Here is an angle of value to showmen, as it gives them an assured "in" with the merchants. When a girl represents a certain firm, you may be sure that the firm is going to see she receives lot of publicity, not only because it will benefit the girl, but also because it will benefit the firm. It's a corking point to remember next time you plan a beauty parade or revue. The merchants ran photos plugging their entries in all advertising.

Dick's show was held three times daily for two days. The winner, in addition to being given $50, was also the recipient of a silver loving cup donated by the Alabama Journal and the theatre. She was also eligible to enter the Pensacola beauty pageant.

The whole affair was a colorful spectacle and Dick garnered a number of laughs and plenty of applause as master of ceremonies for the show. So successful was the stunt that it will be placed on Dick's calendar of "Things to do for next year," and repeated.

It is a great pleasure to observe that Dick is clicking with his special stuff.

EVERYTHING POSSIBLE FROM SOUP TO NUTS WAS GIVEN OUT FREE

Rutland, Vermont, still echoes with the thunder of the campaign put on by Harry Botwick at the Paramount Theatre to celebrate Publix Happiness Week—a week which proved to be filled with box-office happiness for Botwick and "value for money" happiness for the patrons.

On the screen, for two weeks in advance, Botwick carried teaser frames plugging the week. A week previous to the opening day a few notices were spotted in with the regular sound trailer. Another short trailer plugged the short subjects which were slated for the coming week.

Billing was played up big, with 300 window cards and 200 one-sheets which were posted in Rutland, the lakes and surrounding beach resorts. Four thousand flyers with a weekly program on them were obtained at no cost and used for house-to-house distribution, and followed up at the theatre by the regular program.

Instead of just sending an announcement through the mailing list Botwick decided to include also a sample package of cereal, thousands of which he received free from the company. These served as an advance treat on what was in store for "Happiness Week."

All the other mediums, including ballyhoo men, taxi tie-ups, etc., were used to work up interest in the week.

And the "Happiness Week"? A success. And why wouldn't it be? Newspaper stores—Country Store Night, in which men's accessories, groceries, radio, and a ukelele were given away; an automobile parade; a gift of a half ton of coal, cigarettes, meat and groceries, motor oil, electric toaster, dry cleaning orders, free flowers for ladies attending the matinee, an order on a service station, clothes, more food—in fact, everything that could possibly be obtained for nothing was picked up by Botwick and put to the task of making the patrons happy. That he succeeded in making "Happiness Week" a real joy week was seen in the box-office reports.

But, oh yes, before we sign off we want to tell you that before the gifts were presented each night they were tastefully displayed on shelves in the attractively decorated lobby that Botwick arranged for the occasion. The merchants weren't forgotten either. They received a plug by having their names placed on a large easel in the lobby. In turn, they actually clamored for window displays and received plenty of response from Botwick.

Glad to hear from you, Harry, and when you are turning out such beneficial work, we want to hear from you more often. What do you say? Don't you think the work deserves being passed along? We think it does!

BUCK JONES CLUB OPENS IN THE BRONX!

Photo above shows the large crowd of youngsters who jammed the sidewalk in front of the Crescent Theatre, Bronx, New York City, on the occasion of opening a Buck Jones Club, an organization sponsored by Columbia Pictures Corp. Judging from the size of the turnout, the manager, Frank Gilbert, was very much on the job when it came to organizing.

BARETTE AND ENOCH ARE PUTTING OVER SOME GREAT CO-OPS

Evidence before us in the form of numerous tear sheets from newspapers strongly indicates that Manager Barette and Publicity Director Bob Enoch, of the Strand Theatre, Parkersburg, West Va., are right on their toes when it comes to the promotion of no-cost advertising. While we haven't taken out our rule to measure up the amount of free space these two have gotten away with the last few weeks, we'll venture to state that it runs well up around the thousand mark.

The interesting part about these ads is that a variety of merchants are represented —not certain pets who can be relied upon to come across from time to time. Included are women's wear stores, gasoline stations, milk companies, department stores, drug stores, hardware, etc. Guest tickets or a give-away are featured in the several tie-ups.

We also note that from the middle of June to the end a "Happiness Month" stunt was the occasion for the promotion of a full page co-op ad in one of the newspapers. Approximately fifteen merchants supported this move and their ads surrounded a generously spaced centre ad for the Strand which featured the current and coming attractions. It practically amounted to a Two-For-One, all merchants giving notice that they would issue a special discount ticket good for a free admission to the theatre when presented at the box-office with a paid admission. One of the free space ads reproduced here well serves to illustrate the splendid breaks being received by the theatre. The "Sky Bride" ad, for instance, measured 8½x10½ over four columns and it's obvious that the theatre stole about nine-tenths of the display.

The other illustration shows a gag ad that these showmen put over on "Arsene Lupin" and contained signatures of several well known local merchants, all endorsing the picture. To our way of thinking it makes a different kind of ad, and one which will enlist attention.

Another stunt engineered in connection with a travel agency and the newspaper also earned a large free ad for the theatre. This was based on a free vacation trip to Europe and the tracing of tours on a map of the world published in the paper. Readers were invited to trace on the map the tour they would like most to take. The one submitting the most interesting one became entitled to first award. From time to time while the stunt was on the paper published additional maps showing sample tours, thus keeping alive interest. Other awards consisted of a month's, a two weeks' and thirty other single passes to the theatre.

It's fine to hear that the Strand management is doing such good work and we're also glad to hear that Bob Enoch is getting along so well down in Parkersburg. Bob is a young fellow who learned the A B C's of showbusiness out on Long Island, N. Y., and it certainly looks as though he's going somewhere. We want him to keep in touch with Club headquarters. Our best regards to his chief.

WHETTING THEIR APPETITES FOR NEW PRODUCT!

In last week's issue we mentioned the advertising possibilities of the new product announcements which have been making their appearance since spring. We pointed out how they could be made into displays and set about the lobby where your patrons could look them over.

We want to amplify that statement. Here in New York Paramount-Publix has set up a tremendous display in front of their dark Criterion Theatre where these inserts have been framed and made to attract attention through the further use of brief text matter.

It is not an unfamiliar sight to see dozens of people, at all hours of the day and night, stopping to look over every one of these announcements. And they must certainly be creating a great desire on the part of these people to see these pictures when they finally get to Times Square or their own neighborhood theatres.

We consider the suggestion important enough to follow it right up after last week's remarks and we sincerely hope that you in turn will follow it up to the extent of taking your announcements and seeing what you can create in the way of a beautiful lobby or front display to attract attention to the various new pictures to be released between now and the fall.

The construction of such a display need not run into large sums. The greatest item would be the beaver or compo-board, and such backing can be used for cut-outs, etc, after you are finished with the display. Paint is not expensive and most theatres have an abundance of 11 by 14 frames lying around the store room which can be used for the insert cards.

Cut-out letters (sold at the leading five and ten cent stores) can be used for your captions. They look swell when tacked or pasted onto such display signs and can be colored in gold or silver in contrast to the blue or maroon background of the compo-board. Tinsel effects can likewise be achieved on these letters or around the 11 by 14 frames.

You should not pass up a single angle that may bring business, directly or indirectly, to your theatre. We believe this is one way to do so.

FRANK HOLLER PUT OVER PROFITABLE DEAL ON PICTURE

Club members catering to Italian patronage should be interested in a deal made with an independent picture distributor by Frank Holler, manager of the Roosevelt Theatre over in Union City, N. J. The picture was "Nobody's Children," and the term arrangement specified that the distributor pay all advertising costs.

The campaign included distribution of 300 one-sheets within a 7-mile radius in Italian communities eight days in advance; distribution of 5,000 circulars to Italian co-operative stores; the insertion of 800 circulars in an Italian weekly newspaper, for which eight passes were handed out; Italian organizations contacted for permission to hang one-sheets in club rooms, and a calliope ballyhoo by distributor through Italian communities one day in advance of opening.

It appears that Manager Holler is not only a good manager but a smart salesman as well, and Round Tablers situated as he is may also be able to make a profitable deal.

We also note that he arranged with the superintendent of an office building in his city for the placing of an easel in the building lobby containing one-sheet of John Barrymore and 14 stills from "State's Attorney," when playing that picture. More than two-thirds of the practicing legal firms in the city had offices in the building. Need we say more—except that we'll be on the lookout for other material from Manager Holler.

Goldberg Tribute Dinner

Aaron Goldberg, veteran San Francisco exhibitor and head of the Aaron Goldberg Circuit, was tendered a testimonial dinner by his employees recently at the local St. Francis Hotel to mark his twentieth year in the film business.

G. William Wolf, branch manager of RKO distributing corporation and president of the Film Board of Trade, upon behalf of Pathe News and the Film Board presented the pioneer theatre magnate with two gifts.

SHARE YOUR IDEAS WITH OTHERS!

J. A. PETERS operates the Capitol Theatre at Dodsland, Sask., Canada, and the Club is in receipt of a very friendly letter from him regarding this department. Peters tells us that he has been using many of the suggestions sent in by members and have found them a great help. Between running a theatre and looking after another business he has his hands full, but we know he'll find an opportunity now and then to keep in touch with headquarters. We want to know just how he is using the stunts he speaks of and how they're panning out at the box office.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

ROBERT ANTHONY'S application for membership in the Club came from W. M. Powers, manager of the State Theatre, Cortland, N. Y. Bob is helping Powers operate that house and word from the chief indicates that he is doing a very good job. We are mighty glad to list him as a new member and hope that both of these Round Tablers will keep us posted on what's going on at their theatre in the way of show-selling.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

W. M. CARMICHAEL is another owner-manager to pull up a chair around the Table and this gentleman hails from Crystal Springs, Miss., where he operates one of "Mack's Friendly Theatres." We are indebted to Russel Longgrear, manager of the Queen Theatre, Hazlehurst, Miss., where, incidentally, Carmichael also has one of those "Friendly Theatres," for sending along his application. We are mighty glad to have him with us and hope he will do his share toward contributing useful show-selling information to this department.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

G. DE BOISSIERE is the assistant to the general manager of the Braunberger-Richebe Circuit, operating more than a dozen theatres in cities of Southern France. We extend this new member a cordial welcome to our organization and hope that his duties will not altogether interfere with our request to send along information on how shows are sold in his country. Most of the houses on his circuit are large ones, ranging from 1,000 up to a 4,000 seater in Bruxelles. We're sure it will interest fellow members to find out what methods are in force in his country.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

LOUIS J. ANSELL is the general manager of the Ritz Theatre, St. Louis, Mo., and he's another new member in line for introduction to his many fellow Club members. It's a pleasure to list Ansell's name on the roster and we feel sure that he will contribute many valuable suggestions to this department in the months to come. He operates a second run, week-stand house in his city and should have the opportunity to pass along many good ideas he is using to sell shows. Send them in, Louis, and we'll do the rest.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

R. A. VOSS manages the Uptown Theatre out in Glendive, Montana, and we're mighty glad to have him act as our Club's representative out in his section of the country. He operates on a three-change per week policy and we're sure that he, too, is in a position to shoot in some good show-selling tips that we can pass along the line. Times have been tough out in his town, just as in other sections, but as Voss tells us, a real picture will bring them in. In future issues he'll tell us what methods he uses to produce results on the weaker ones.

D. S. LAWLER'S name will be familiar to many a Round Tabler for reason of the articles that have already appeared in this department under his by-line; hence, this acknowledgment of his membership application is a mere formality. However, now that a certificate of membership will shortly make its appearance in the office of the Miller Theatre, where he works out publicity problems for Fox-Wichita Theatres, Wichita, Kas., perhaps we may count on even a greater degree of cooperation from this seasoned and enterprising showman. And let us state right here that his suggestions will be eagerly read by every member of this outfit. 'Nuf sed!

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

J. E. LOTH hails from Waynesboro, Va., where he is in charge of the Wayne and Cavalier Theatres, two houses operated by the Waynesboro Theatres Corp. A cordial welcome to the Club is also extended this new Round Tabler and we hope he will share his knowledge of show business with his host of fellow members. Just jot down an account of that last good show-selling stunt that boosted trade at the old box office and shoot it in to headquarters. We'll see that it gets circulation.

E. KABU OCANSEY has the job of assisting M. Therson Cofie with the management of the Palladium Theatre, Accra, West Africa, and the four other Gold Coast houses mentioned in the paragraph devoted to Cofie's application for membership in this Club. With representation one hundred per cent in this far off city we're sure that our members can count upon receiving some very interesting stories about how shows are sold in West Africa. In other words, if Cofie does not heed our earnest request to keep us posted on exploitation activities in his land, we'll depend upon Ocansey to share ideas with his many fellow Club members.

L. S. STEIN is the manager of the Parthenon Theatre at Hammond, Ind., and since we've heard from this showman a number of times prior to receiving his regular application for membership, he's always been considered one of the gang. However, now that this formality has been attended to, we hope that the Club will hear from him at more frequent intervals. Stein is a seasoned showman and has a whole bag full of tricks up his sleeve that the rest of the fellows will want to know about. In a forthcoming issue we'll let all his friends and fellow Round Tablers know what he's been up to the past few months.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

M. THERSON COFIE, JR., is the manager of the Palladium Theatre in the city of Accra, Gold Coast of West Africa, and his application for membership in the Round Table Club is still another example of the international scope of this great organization of showmen. He and his assistant not only direct the destinies of the Palladium but are responsible for four other theatres on the Gold Coast. It will be most interesting to learn what show-selling methods are followed in this far off land and we will look forward to hearing from Cofie again with real pleasure.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

W. A. "BILL" BYERS is the manager of the Plaza Theatre down South in Asheville, N. C., and we're taking this opportunity to acknowledge his application for membership in the livest organization of showmen in the world. "Bill" is in charge of one of the Class A Publix-Bamford houses and operates on a stage show and picture policy. We're glad to have him with us and trust that he, too, will become a regular contributor of ideas to this department. Send us a line on what's going on at your house, Bill, just as soon as you can find the time.

KENNETH G. SCHULTZ is the skipper of the State Theatre, one of the Publix-Northwest Theatres at Virginia, Minn., and he's another new recruit in this ever-increasing army of live-wire showmen. Ken tells us he was in touch with this organization back in '29 when he was acting as a relief manager in the Northern District for Publix. We're mighty glad to have him back with us again, this time as a full-fledged member, and want him to keep us fully posted on what he's doing to put across his shows.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

Z. A. STEGMULLER manages the Warburton Theatre in Yonkers, N. Y., that big town on the northern outskirts of New York City that has grown right into the Metropolitan district. There's lots of show business in his section of the city and we feel sure that Stegmuller will have some good stunts to share with fellow Round Tablers. Now that he, too, has become a member, we will expect him to do his duty. Shoot along a few ideas, Z. A., and we'll pass them along to the rest of the fellows.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

ALDEN BRINHAM hails from Massillon, Ohio, where he manages the New Grand Theatre. We are also in receipt of his application for membership in the Club and want him to know that we're very glad to have him with us. All that's necessary for him to do now is to get the "Spirit" and share his show-selling secrets with his brother Round Tablers. We'll be awaiting his next communication.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1931, unless otherwise specified.

FOR PICTURE THEATRES

SINGERS

Kate Smith
New York Palace

This radio star's tremendous popularity filled the house at noon. Her radio band, under direction of Nat Brusiloff, opens with a symphonic arrangement of "When the Moon Comes Over the Mountain," Miss Smith singing the last eight bars via an off stage "mike." She scores with "Cabin in the Cotton," "It Was So Beautiful" and "Between the Devil and Deep Blue Sea," and announces a tribute to the late Florenz Ziegfeld by the orchestra, a medley from "Showboat," Jack Miller offering a vocal of "Why Do I Love You?" for a nice hand. Brusiloff also offers a novel violin solo, pulling a string across the instrument instead of using a bow. Ace-high entertainment.—H. P.

Lillian Roth
Chicago Chicago

Her songs get over nicely, she has looks and so forth, and in comedy scenes with Bert Wheeler and Mark Fisher she adds to the entertainment. However, she does not get any special opportunities to put over her individual talents with her part in a general stage show.

Frances Williams
New York Paramount

This charming young musical star, accompanied at the piano by Rube Bloom, noted composer, opens with "Is Rhythm Necessary," in a pleasing voice. Following this she offers Cole Porter's novelty song, "They All Fall in Love," her efforts being well received.—H. P.

Oriole Craven
Detroit Fisher

Oriole Craven's vocal equipment won't win any music awards, but she has a happy face and puts on a fair line of comedy of the genial order with M. C. Ted Leary. She pleased this audience.

Cliff Edwards
New York Palace

"Ukulele Ike" opens with a vocal of "Singin' in the Rain" and "It Had to Be You," earning a nice hand. After a story which went over for a big laugh, Cliff finales with a novelty song, "Bless You, Sister." This short act could be made more effective with more comedy chatter between songs.—H. P.

INSTRUMENTAL

Eddie Peabody
Milwaukee Wisconsin

It is generally known that Peabody's forte is his banjo, but he is also versatile as a violinist, lariat artist, player of the bagpipe, steel guitar and mandolin. Eddie is generous with his banjo numbers, which include "Paradise," "Lullaby of the Leaves," "Somebody Loves Me," "St. Louis Blues," and his theme song, "My Song of Happiness." Regardless of what he has to offer, Eddie makes a hit.

Saenger Orchestra Returning, Stage Shows May Follow

The New Orleans Saenger, finest of the southern Publix houses, is reported from unofficial but reliable sources to be ready to restore its pit orchestra this week-end. Stage shows, produced somewhere in the South, to play the entire circuit, will probably follow this step.

Shows in Midwest Houses

Several theatres in the Fox Midwest circuit are introducing stage shows on Sundays and special days following the success of the acts at the Fox Plaza, Kansas City. No price increase has accompanied the use of the stage shows.

RKO Policy Affects Three

Three Greater New York houses have been affected by the changed RKO policy. The Fordham and Coliseum have dropped vaudeville, presumably for the summer, and the Prospect in Brooklyn will henceforth include vaudeville.

Acts Booked for Cruises

Many big vaudeville names have been booked for six-day cruises by the French Line. Among those already booked as entertainers are Jack Osterman, Sophie Tucker, Eddie Dowling and Charlie King.

COMEDIANS

Bert Wheeler
Chicago Chicago

The front end of the Wheeler-Woolsey comedy combination is a "natural" on the stage. While eating an apple and taking large bites out of a sandwich he keeps up a rapidfire line of gags which he gets off in a droll and intimate manner. His song, featuring typical Hollywood tears, gets a big hand.

Chaz Chase
San Francisco Warfield

Chaz Chase, featured here recently in the "Vanities," as the Warfield headliner for the week, goes in strong for eating, devouring his necktie, shirt front, cigarets and lighted matches. His is a fun act, pure and simple, but mostly simple, and he gets the laughs. The crowd is with him.

Ward and Pinkie
Cincinnati Albee

The act is a pantomime throughout, the team indulging in a routine of hokum in which they take some rough and heavy falls in their burlesque tumbling. Pinkie, who incidentally bears a striking resemblance to Clara Bow in looks, mannerism and fiery tresses, does a soft-shoe dance which somewhat redeems the team's preceding work. Good in spots, but not so hot in the aggregate.

Bill Telaak
With Andrew and Louise Carr
Baltimore Century

Here's a fast moving comedy hokum act with songs, slapstick comedy, jokes and some violin music that keeps them laughing and winds up with big applause. It starts with Telaak singing, interrupted by Carr and then by Louise, and these interruptions continue with unexpected gags.

Red Pepper
Detroit Michigan

Pepper is a clown who resembles the heavy end of Laurel and Hardy. Schoolboy comedy and frequent attempts to upset Benny Meroff's orchestra routine delighted this audience. He shares honors with Walter Powell.

Ritz Brothers
Chicago Oriental

These comedians have a line of gags and stunts that kept the house chuckling. They do a comic dance that is a corker and finish up with a takeoff on Dr. Jekyll and Frankenstein that has plenty of laughs and originality.

The Joy Boys
Milwaukee Wisconsin

These two lads dust the boards with comedy antics that are good for plenty of laughs. Their dumb expressions and goofy dance combinations make a hit.

NOVELTY

Davey and Rosemarie
Cincinnati Albee

Davey is the major half of the act, with the girl partner filling in the background. Davey does a series of juggling stunts with objects ranging from cigarets to swords and cannon balls, the while keeping up an incessant flow of chatter, mostly of the ad lib variety. He is quick to capitalize on any single laugh or commotion in the audience, his lines are packed with as many laughs, and his juggling is clever.

Walter Powell
Detroit Michigan

Powell is a natural. Merely his manner of holding both hands protectively over the top of his head when he has done something for which he can expect a slap on the pate, is funny. As a magician he bungles the vanishing of a trombone; as a musician he uses the trombone, minus the mouthpiece, to imitate an airplane, and with a neon-illuminated trombone on a dark stage, goes through a crazy rendition of "Asleep In The Deep" to find the lowest note on the trombone range.

Paul Kirkland
Denver Orpheum

Ladder walker and balancer, he does 'most everything atop the steps except stand on his head. While on the stage he balances a tissue paper cone on his head and burns it as he balances it on his nose. He sets one chair on another, one upside down, and carries a woman on them across stage.

STAGE ATTRACTIONS

REVIEWS OF ACTS FOR PICTURE THEATRES

Jack and Jerry
Milwaukee Wisconsin

Tap toe dancing, with and without roller skates, is the feat of this young couple. The lad is also adept at snappy twists and somersaults landing upon his toes.

Will Mahoney
San Francisco Fox

Will Mahoney tops the fun bill at the Fox and annexes a lot of laughs. He opens up the heavy artillery with one of those songs which can go on forever and forever. When he gets the audience laughing, he proceeds to switch to a series of tap dances with long staggering falls in between. And when he is down he tells Irish stories. A punching bag tap dance is an example of perfect timing. He finishes his act by hopping up on to his Mahoneyphone, an oversized xylophone, and tripping out melodies, ending with the "Stars and Stripes Forever," doing all the playing with his feet. Curtain calls are in order.

Eddie Garr
Brooklyn Metropolitan

The versatile Eddie Garr is a monologist, gagster, impersonator and comedian all wrapped into one. He is a handsome lad, with a load of personality, who works hard to put his act over and give the audience fourteen minutes of entertainment. Outstanding in the act are his impersonations of Stan Laurel, Maurice Chevalier, El Brendel and Jimmy Durante. The audience reacted very favorably.—E. D.

DANCERS

Rose Statler Trio
Chicago Chicago

Miss Statler is a marvel in this acrobatic dance, which is timed and perfected until the thing becomes a thrilling piece of perpetual motion and brings increasing applause.

Cherry and June Preisser
New York Palace

These two personable juveniles offer a routine of dancing, both tap and acrobatic, that won the hearts of a packed house. Little June's acrobatic specialty stopped the show; in fact, almost taking it away from Kate Smith, who headlines the bill. This act is sure-fire anywhere.—H. P.

Society Sextet
San Francisco Warfield

These three men and three women dancers put on an interesting act, in which an adagio number is a feature. They make use of the challenge system and get up quite a contest which arouses interest.

3 Slate Brothers
New York Palace

The trio mingle rough and tumble, slap-bang comedy with several clever tap dancing bits. A good act with plenty of laughs.—H. P.

Hazel Mangean Girls (4)
New York State

A flash acrobatic dance act with four talented girls. A handkerchief bit, in which one young woman performs a difficult contortion turn, is well received. A good opening act.—H. P.

Reems, Rio and Kitchell
Denver Orpheum

Three youngsters, two lads and a girl, start the act with a slow motion brawl over the girl. She bites the leg of one and all go into fast action as one boy kicks the other. The men do a burlesque dance and the girl a ballet with the joyful and also anxious expressions of a beginner trying to be good. One of the lads mimics men who attend taxi dances, and the other does walkovers forward and back. All three join in a novelty dance at the close.

Olga Chalmers Ballet and Marietta
Philadelphia Fox

The ballet, with Marietta, presents an exceptionally interesting and artistic series of dances, which for beauty of setting and individuality are the most outstanding seen in Philadelphia for a long time. In the first number three large mirrors reflect the Ballet in triplicate. Next a background of white roses is used for a toe dance headed by Marietta, as Don Neece, baritone, sings a Rubinstein melody. The third number is modernistic in setting, music and dancing in white satin and rhinestones on a floor of highly polished metal with reflecting mirrors. Again Don Neece sings an appropriate selection. An acrobatic dance by Marietta is another highlight.

Jack Holland and June Knight
Chicago Oriental

This pair offer a dance that rates as highbrow stuff. While it is undoubtedly everything to be desired in the way of class and elegance, it failed to get more than an ordinary "rise" from an audience accustomed to plenty of hotcha in its dancing.

Jessie Draper
Milwaukee Wisconsin

Easy to look at, this blond specialty dancer accompanies her offering with several acrobatic tricks which stress her suppleness.

Ida Shibley
Detroit Fisher

This young lady appears extensively exposed for a graceful and spectacular control dance. She is an excellent dancer with no little optic appeal.

ACROBATICS

Five Janslers
New York Paramount

This quintet offers an entertaining routine of acrobatic juggling, two men balancing the other three on their feet. Several difficult feats in which flips and somersaults were featured rewarded the Janslers with an appreciative round of applause. An act for any audience—H. P.

Six Lucky Boys
Detroit Fox

This is still a good tumbling act, but if some of the shouting and flat comedy with novelty-store props were dropped, the audience would be better impressed.

Stamm and Darnell
New Orleans Orpheum

This is an acrobatic, physical culture act dressed in a pirate setting with the man of the trio doing strong work and the girls giving exhibition of supple muscles.

Novak and Fay
New Orleans State

This is a comic acrobatic act working in one, the hilarious effect of which is greatly aided by the frozen expressions of the two, who tumble on each other, fall about the stage, messing up their routines, to an accomplishment of laughs from the audience. As a closer they offer a serious and difficult acrobatic stunt which sends them off to a round of applause.

Three Pasqualis
San Francisco Warfield

Yes, there is something new and different in acrobatics and this trio has it. The act starts off with the usual tumbling and balancing. One of the group stands on his toes on the head of another and is carried around the stage and up and down stairs. He repeats with a one hand to the head balance and finally makes the circuit in a straight to head balance. Very well received.

Donald Sisters
Baltimore Hippodrome

They do strong arm and leg lifts and balancing and some general acrobatic work which gained applause.

Paul and Nino Ghezzi
Detroit Fox

These Italian tumblers are strong on arm balances. They demonstrate their talents in a wide variety of stunts, the best of which is the "black bottom" on their hands. This is not merely a suggestion of the eccentric step, but an actual performance of it upside down, kicking and swooping with arms as a dancer would on his feet. They have good stage presence.

Vitaphone Signs Musical Star

Alexander Gray, musical comedy and screen player, has been signed by Vitaphone for one of the "Broadway Brevities" series of two-reel comedies.

Vaudeville in RKO Houses

RKO situations in Ohio scheduled to resume combination vaudeville and film policies in the fall include Dayton, Columbus, Akron, Youngstown and Toledo. The houses will be booked by William Howard, according to present plans.

Lopez in "Big Broadcast"

Vincent Lopez and his orchestra have been signed by Paramount to appear in "The Big Broadcast," joining other notable radio stars. The Lopez scenes will be made in New York.

Radio Station WINS Moves

Radio station WINS, owned and operated by the American Radio News Corporation, has moved into its own WINS building at 114 East 58th Street, New York, where it has more ample quarters.

May Reopen With Vaudeville

Recently darkened, it is reported that the RKO Orpheum at San Francisco may reopen in five weeks with vaudeville and pictures.

STAGE ATTRACTIONS

ORGAN SOLOS

MR. AND MRS. JESSE CRAWFORD (New York Paramount), best known of organ teams, this week presented a concert of popular songs, composed by Miss Dana Suesse. Mrs. Crawford offered, in her own inimitable style, the songs "Whistling in the Dark" and "Ho-Hum," with Mr. Crawford playing "Have You Forgotten" for his solo bit. Miss Suesse's latest hit, "My Silent Love," was played by herself on the concert grand, the Crawfords playing a soft accompaniment at their organs for the finale. Throughout the concert Irvin Talbot directed the pit orchestra very softly, lending a symphonic touch to the program.

DICK LIEBERT (Brooklyn Paramount), in his opening organ solo, quickly won the patrons with his pleasing personality, showmanship and musical ability. The first part of the presentation was a community stunt, built up with popular tunes, tongue-twisters and specially written lyrics. His simple little speech of appreciation, which he spoke as an opening, went a long way in "closing the gap between a newcomer and the audience." After that the audience quickly joined in singing and working with Dick. At the finish of the community songfest, which rated the big hand given it, Liebert announced that he would close with the Finale from Faust, if they would care to hear it. What surprised this reviewer was the quick response shown by the audience (this house being known as having a singing audience, and that is all). A scene of "Hades," with "burning" effects on the pit and organ, as Liebert rendered the opera, enhanced it greatly. The accompaniment by the pit orchestra eight bars from the finish brought the solo to a grand close. Liebert earned a most enthusiastic reception and if this first week's solo and applause given him is a criterion, Dick Liebert will be here a long time.

MAURICE (Providence Loew's State)—recently presented an outstanding organ presentation and entitled it "Painting a Melody." The novelty was orally introduced and explained by the popular Maurice in a well-modulated voice that greatly assists in getting his pleasing personality over with the patrons. Each of the songs cleverly brought into play the use of various colors, and lighting effects, contributing materially to the entertainment value. Though the songs used were mainly old ones, each was appropriate and sung well by the audience, who applauded vigorously at the finish.

NELSON HOSKING (Brooklyn Roosevelt) is the new organist here and though he is working under the handicap of a half organ, no spotlight and rather haphazard cooperation from the booth, he nevertheless is inducing the audience to sing the songs he plays for them. Numbers he presented were: "Lullaby of the Leaves," "In a Hideaway" and "In a Shanty in Old Shantytown." Hosking is fortunate in having a manager who believes an organist is a box-office attraction. His faith in this type entertainment certainly proved justified, from the lusty singing of the audience and the applause given Hosking.

Organist Replaced

Everett Bannister, organist at the Rivoli in Baltimore, who has resigned, has been replaced by John Varney, who has played at various Baltimore houses.

UP AND DOWN THE ALLEY

BACK from the old vacation and feeling great. . . . I want to tell you first about a few of the "boys" I met while away. . . . Arthur Martel, organist at Paramount's Metropolitan in Boston. . . . Martel is a gentleman and an all-around fine fellow. . . . His being at the "Met" since it opened, eight years ago, speaks volumes for his popularity and musicianship. . . . Louis Weir, organist at Loew's State, Boston. Lou has played at a number of Boston theatres and is a favorite among the local air fans. . . . He is the type that the girls go for . . . but beneath his suavity is earnestness of endeavor and a lot of good fellowship. . . . One other organist I dropped in to see was Maurice at Loew's State in Providence. . . . Maurice, whose last name is Cook, has played in theatres all over the United States and has done well in all of them. . . . I don't know why, but he has dropped his last name and is known everywhere as Maurice. . . . He is a big fellow, genial—you know, one of those "hail fellows well met" and a darned good musician as well. . . . I wanted to see a lot more of the boys down east, but am sorry to say I didn't have enough time inasmuch as I did have a vacation to go on and a little rest to catch up with. . . . I would be happy to hear from some of the boys I missed, though. . . .

Here are a few little newsnotes that might be of interest to you. . . . Dick Liebert, who for the past ten years has been with the Loew circuit, is now the featured organist at the Brooklyn Paramount. . . . Merle Clark, co-featured with Elsie Thompson for the past year or so there, was sent to relieve Don Miller at the Michigan, Detroit. . . . The latest word I have had from the city of Motors is that Merle is having difficulty in playing there on account of the union. . . . Incidentally, Elsie will be co-featured with Dick starting next week . . . Oh yes, Leo Weber (the Life-saver Kid), is sojourning in Europe . . . what a break, what a break. . . . He'll be back next month some time. . . . During the first week I was away, Bill Meeder, the popular organist at RKO Richmond Hill, Long Island, celebrated his third anniversary there. . . .

You fellows out-of-town who know Jesse Crawford will hardly believe this but it is the truth. . . . During Dave Rubinoff's vacation last week, Jesse was asked to direct the orchestra in the pit. . . . Well, he did, and believe-you-me he did himself proud. . . . He worked with an ease unsurpassed by any of them and sold that overture (without any acrobatic gestures) to an audience who appreciated the novelty and musicianship displayed by himself and the orchestra. . . . Why, the office thought so much of it that after Jesse's vacation (which he will spend with Mrs. Crawford and little Jesse in Michigan) he is booked to appear at the Chicago theatre, where he will present an organ concert and also direct the orchestra in the same overture. . . . I've got lots more to tell you but will have to hold it over until next week. . . .

ED DAWSON

OVERTURES

FRED SCHMITT (Denver Denver) and his fifteen musicians offered several of the Franz Lehar melodies and played them in the spirited manner for which this orchestra is famous. Numbers included "Gypsy Love," "The Count of Luxemburg," "The Merry Widow," and "Eva." Several individuals in the band were featured. For their closing number the orchestra played "Road to Mandalay," and Gene Hunter, a ten-year-old baritone, sang it.

JOHN GART (Brooklyn Gates) and His Rhythm Boys revived a number of popular songs in their current overture, presenting them in a capable manner to an appreciative audience. Opening with full orchestra on the song, "Hour of Parting," a violin and piano duet of "Whistling in the Dark" was next offered. Outstanding in the overture was Gart's solo of "Rhapsody in Blue," which modulated into the stirring strains of "Road to Mandalay" for the grand finale.

LOU FORBES (Detroit Michigan) continues to be eccentric, favoring comedy in his direction in his second week here, rather than impressionism. The overture opens with the measured cadence of "Andante Cantibile," swinging to percussion and castanet contrast for "O, Ya, Ya," at the termination of which the overture was interrupted by an outburst of applause. "Poet and Peasant" started off with conventional time and arrangement, but after the first few measures a saxophone and clarinet, seemingly against Forbes' intentions, tootled a few introductory blue notes and led the entire band into a fast, raggy finish. The novelty was well received by most of the audience.

MICHAEL WEINER (Baltimore Hippodrome) was the guest conductor directing the musicians through "Radio Gems," with Elsa Baklor as guest soloist. First was offered the waltz song from the "Spring Maid," sung by Miss Baklor in Spanish costume, accompanied by Weiner, after which he played as a solo the First Waltz of Courant. Miss Baklor then sang a selection from Victor Herbert's "Fortune Teller."

SAMUEL BENAVIE (Detroit Fisher) continues to demonstrate his serious regard for his work. There is evidence of musical accomplishment that would enable him to face successfully the most critical musical audience with a difficult repertoire. Typical is the overture, "Melodies Divine." It opens with the "Kommenoi Ostrow," the theme of which is developed in the brasses and repeated through the various sections of the orchestra with fine musical unity. This is followed by the "Dance of the Boyars," modulating into "Melody in F." Here the first violin is spotlighted for a solo of Dvorak's "Humoresque," with a pulse of feeling that won this competent young violinist a great burst of applause. The overture closes with "L'Arlesienne."

WALT ROESNER (San Francisco Fox) and the Fox Concert Orchestra and Vocal Ensemble offer an "Olympic Fantasy," featuring music from many lands. Quite appropriately, the initial offering is Elgar's "Pomp and Circumstance," very effectively played and sung, and one hears strains of "1812," "Finlandia" and stirring national airs. Flashes of great track and field contests appear on the screen and the overture comes to a close with the ensemble singing "I Love You, California," and three athletes appearing in a tableau on the stage, one throwing the discus, another the javelin and the third running on a trealdmill toward the audience.

ITS NOVELTY WILL START A NEW PICTURE CYCLE!

70,000 witnesses see the murder but not one sees the murderer! You never screened anything like it before. But Paramount predicts that like every other picture that has startled the industry by its amazing originality, a cycle of imitations will follow it.

Be in on the original clean-up!

WONDER WHAT THIS INDUSTRY THINKS ABOUT!

(with Apologies)

"Imagine! M-G-M took 5 out of 11 again this month in M.P. Herald's box-office survey! You can't blame them for claiming Leadership. The facts back 'em up!"

"Can you beat it! Regina Crewe in N.Y. American picks 10 Best Pictures of the first six months of 1932 and 5 of 'em are M-G-M!"

"That M-G-M outfit has done picture business a genuine service in this tough year. Film business could never have survived without M-G-M's run of hits!"

"A picture like 'Grand Hotel' is a tonic. It revives interest in theatre attendance. Every other producer benefits by M-G-M's idea to put all those stars in one big show!"

"12,000 theatres canvassed in giant M.P. Herald vote for 10 Biggest Money-Making Stars of 1932. M-G-M grabs off 6 out of the 10 - thats STAR POWER!"

"Variety prints a story this week saying a lot of salesmen went out to sell too early and that only M-G-M held back its men. The exhibs must be waiting for those M.G.M men first!"

"Think of it! 'Strange Interlude' is repeating 'Grand Hotel' business in Los Angeles. That M-G-M crowd has turned out the only two real Road-Shows of the year!"

"Skyscraper Souls' joins the Hold-over Hits at Capitol - 'Red Headed Woman' 'As You Desire Me' 'Letty Lynton' 'Washington Masquerade'-- it takes plenty to go two weeks in a big Broadway house!"

"Wonder what Leo is going to spring next. That sly Lion keeps this industry On its toes. He's been roaring lustily now for almost ten years without a let-up. Must be a red meat diet!"

MOTION PICTURE HERALD

Vol. 108, No. 7 — August 13, 1932

FEELING BETTER, THANK YOU

AN interesting new aggressiveness is becoming evident in the merchandising showmanship of motion picture distributors in presenting the new season's product. Warners are going out to the nation with their "National Exhibit" of a group of pictures to be previewed for the exhibitors and sundry other important persons of group influence in key cities. Paramount, with an expedient which recalls the technique, in other lines, of Mr. Albert Lasker, is bringing the nation, as represented by the motion picture reviewers of larger centers, to New York to see a like array of pictures in Broadway setting.

Those are developments of the immediate week but meanwhile through the whole field of selling activity appears a certain note of recovery from the doldrums of the "depression" and a heading for somewhere with plan and purpose. The motion picture industry is apparently through with treading water and hoping for an upturn. And, while general business conditions are not to be ignored, it may also be fairly said that the screen is in the process of making its own upturn.

To the close observer of the scene it is more than evident that the abruptly demonstrated and unforeseen box office success of "Bring 'Em Back Alive," from RKO going out in the dog days, has had no small share in the creation of an attitude of optimism by the demonstration of a buying power operative when there is something to buy.

The motion picture became the dominant amusement because it could and did offer the greatest amusement value for the price of admission. This capacity of value was, and is, inherent in the mechanism and its repetitive processes, with multiple prints, not living casts, screens not stages, shipping costs, not traveling expenses.

Now added to that is today's capacity of the motion picture, through the evolution and crystallization of its technologies, to make, for the masses nearly always, and for the cognoscenti now and then, a product of art and entertainment which can not only readily contain and reproduce all that the older arts offer, but which can further add and enhance values and qualities by the use of capacities peculiar to itself.

The movie in the nickelodeon was the world's best buy for a nickel. The motion picture today can be maintained as the world's best buy at a profitable contemporary price.

IN a dispatch from Houston, Motion Picture Daily records a Texas bellyache because the motion picture theatres are thereabouts discovering that casual horseshed "riding academies" with spavined nags are doing business at 50 cents an hour per nag. An alarum like that over the miniature golf courses of a season past is being raised. In Florida it's the dog races. Hot Kansas City complains of the breezy open road and the motor car. Now if all other entertainment were suppressed and the show could be run with a push button, life would be perfect. But for a while yet the motion picture will have to be sold.

DIONYSOS DRUNK AGAIN

"ONE studio (has) let it be known that it is contemplating "Lady Chatterley's Lover," the staid New York Times records under a Hollywood date line. As all too many know, this is a novel by the late D. H. Lawrence, concerned with the goatish conduct of a decadent noblewoman and a gamekeeper, up and down the hedgerows, done in its one authentic and infamous version, with words that are not properly spoken in any company whatsoever, mixed or unmixed. Upon those elements, and those alone, the wide illfame of the book depends. The Times says Mr. Hays is in Hollywood among the producers "to lead those leaning toward sin back into the fold." That is not the treatment the symptoms indicate. More adequate would be that simple direct surgical process scientifically described as sterilization.

SOMEWAY we just can not bestir any sympathy for the current excitement in the drugstore trade press over the fact that, incidental to the narrative of a recent picture, a drunkard was shown heading for a drugstore to buy Jamaica ginger. The Canadian Pharmaceutical Journal, referring to correspondence with Mr. Will Hays, hopes that it will keep from the screen "glib jokes" and "crude jibes" about the drugstore. In the first place, one bootleg drugstore in a motion picture is not necessarily an indictment of the drug industry. In the second place, there is in the drugstore business, just as in the motion picture business, a great deal too much of a tendency to keep on sale anything the customers will buy, regardless of social consequences. In both, the ethics are framed on the wall, but some of the merchandise is under the counter—or ought to be.

QUOTED elsewhere in these pages, are poignant words of well purchased wisdom from Mr. Lee Shubert, experienced as a figure in both an art and in a corporate enterprise of imposing stature, brought to earth and humility by its insolent mistakes. Like the motion picture, the stage is out to do a selling job this coming season. There is excellent promise that the motion picture will, in key centers, find the stage a rather more serious competitor than for some years past. For reasons, many of which are complex, esoteric and obscure, the stage continues to hold some selling advantages in an intangible quality of glamour which the motion picture has never quite achieved. Part of the answer is to be found in the dumb blanket willingness of the motion picture in its eager past to achieve publicity at any price. Publicity writing and published criticism of the stage have in general, through all the years, been maintained at a level of plain sensible intelligence that the motion picture is only beginning to attain.

Came the Dawn, or Exposing the Past

AH, them were the days! What we mean is, them were the days, you know, as people say, when they look back upon times when everything was hotsy-totsy, just regardless. Take the moving pictures, for instance—as one could at a nickel or a dime a show. Take the movies when everything was hotsy-totsy. All the exhibitor did was to call up the General Film Company and he got a good show. (Ah, ah there, Mr. Laemmle!) What we mean is, he got some films, and did the public know the difference?

The point is, one could always depend on Broncho Billy. Now there was a man. And could he act? Well, take Marguerite Snow, then. If you like your million dollars mysterious, you couldn't do better, even today. It so happens that Marguerite and the million are not represented in the accompanying stills from the relatively recent moving picture shows, but as a substitute we have Mack Sennett (subbing for Miss Snow, Mr. Sennett!). Notice the technique! Well, perhaps the photography is poor. And maybe you'd like to know what this is all about. Just a moment, please. . . .

Mr. Broncho Billy swears (a silent picture.)

Mr. Mac Sennett obeys an impulse.

Mr. Wallace Beery receives a suitor.

Mr. Richard Bennett prologues en famille.

THE motion picture's past, it seems, has become a laugh. Emulating, somewhat, the literary Christopher Morley in his Hoboken revival of the "East Lynne" period in American drama, Paramount has compiled footage out of them days that were in the motion picture's lusty career, forming, with the aid of modern cinematographic technique and modern impudence, a modern release with the title "Screen Souvenirs," one of the current hits among shorts.

Astonishingly enough, this effort has not been as easy as it sounds. Thousands of reels have had to be examined, culled from the stocks of Essanay, Biograph, Edison and others gone but not forgotten. And reproduction problems have arisen. Most of the films were brittle, mildewed, paper-thin, and they have had to be made flexible and otherwise adaptable. Some of the old stock, moreover, varied in width from 33 to 70 mm., while many of the strips varied as to number of sprocket holes, a few, indeed, being without any. This much, Paramount found, can be said of the old-timers: Among films lying in vaults from 15 to 30 years, evidence of good photography is abundant.

THREE SALES POLICIES INVOLVE EXCLUSIVE RUNS; TWO HIT DUALS

Other Distributors May Follow Those Now Announcing Adoption of Restricted Engagement Innovation

At least three of the nine larger distributors will engage in exclusive run deals this year, and two will attempt, through provisions in their contracts, to restrict the double featuring of their product.

These innovations in sales policies, established by a general inquiry covering all distribution offices, will be inaugurated immediately with the selling of new product.

The three companies which will engage in exclusive run deals with exhibitors this year are MGM, United Artists and Fox. While other companies have discussed the possibility of making exclusive run deals, the three named are the only ones which have arrived at definite decisions to date, and of the three, MGM and Fox already have negotiated exclusive run sales.

With exclusive run deals in three New England towns already completed, Fox assumed a prominent position among the companies which will sponsor innovations in distribution methods this season. The Fox exclusive run deals were negotiated with Harry Arthur, operator of the former Fox-Poli theatres in New England, and involve the towns of Waterbury and Meriden, Conn., and Worcester, Mass. The most important Arthur theatre in each town will play the exclusive runs. It is estimated that the deals will eliminate approximately 16 subsequent-run accounts in the three towns, and will reduce the film requirements of each exclusive-run theatre by one-half. Mr. Arthur evidenced great enthusiasm over the possibilities of the exclusive-run plan.

Arthur Cites Benefits

"Under the plan," he said, "I will require only two pictures where before I required four. Automatically, that is of benefit to other exhibitors and to subsequent-runs, for it releases to other playing time two pictures which would not have been available before. In addition, the plan gives me an opportunity to maintain my established level of admission prices without regard to double featuring competition and price cutting, and it does the same thing for other exhibitors in the towns where I am operating, for it establishes my operating policies on a permanent basis."

Mr. Arthur has negotiations under way for product in addition to that of Fox which he plans to obtain on an exclusive-run basis.

MGM and United Artists, authors of two individual plans of exclusive distribution, will also negotiate exclusive-run deals with exhibitors this season, it has been made known. MGM has already completed several such deals in an experimental capacity, namely, at Oakland, Calif., St. Joseph, Mo., and Wilmington, Del. Others are under discussion for new situations at the present time. United Artists, definitely prepared to offer its plan of exclusive-run selling this season, has several such deals in prospect.

Warner-F. N. and MGM take a definite stand on restricting the double featuring of their product through contractual stipulations. The Warner-F. N. restrictions will have a limited application only, however.

A clause regulating double featuring of Metro product is written into every MGM contract. It specifies that "the exhibitor agrees not to exhibit any of the photoplays at the same performance with any other photoplay of feature length—that is, as part of a double feature program—and that upon violation the distributor shall have the right "to change the run, availability and / or protection" provided for.

These contractual efforts to restrict double featuring, it was explained, are designed to protect revenues from product played on a percentage basis.

All other distributors advanced the opinion that regulation of double featuring was purely an exhibitor's problem, and declared that its solution rested with the exhibitor alone.

See End of Duals

Conferences of Chicago exhibitors have been called from time to time for the purpose of eliminating the practice in that city. Recently, with the gathering in New York of heads or representatives of virtually every important Chicago circuit, enough progress was reported to have been made to assure, tentatively, at least, the discontinuance of the practice on or about October 1. Independent exhibitors have awaited only agreement on the part of circuit theatres.

At Detroit, promise of co-operation on ending double featuring is reported to have been reached between Publix and Allied theatre owners, with hope of bringing an end to the practice by September 1. It is said that approximately 100 Detroit theatres have agreed to stop the practice, while 39 others have not made their attitude known to date. Allied officials, however, are of the opinion that more than half of the 39 will be parties to the agreement prior to September 1.

At Milwaukee, the MPTO of Wisconsin and Upper Michigan has announced that it will resume efforts once more to eliminate double featuring in the Milwaukee territory. In New Jersey, Allied exhibitors will sponsor voluntary restriction of double featuring throughout the state, according to proposals made to a committee appointed to consider the subject at a meeting of the Allied unit this week. Individual theatre efforts are being made to curtail the practice at St. Louis, where Publix is reported to have decided to discontinue double featuring, and at other important theatre centers.

Summarize Their Attitudes

Following is a summary of the stands of distributors who were willing to comment on the innovations in sales policies in prospect for the current season:

RKO Radio: Will take no stand on double featuring and has no defined policy in regard to exclusive-run deals, although Ned Depinet, general sales manager, stated that he "does not believe in the general idea of exclusive runs, but thinks they might be adapted to some situations."

Fox: E. C. Grainger, assistant sales manager, stated that if announced completion of three exclusive-run deals with Harry Arthur proved successful, Fox would negotiate others. No effort will be made by contract to regulate double featuring.

Paramount: George Schaefer, general sales manager, said there appears to be little prospect that exclusive-run deals will be entered into. No attempt will be made to regulate double featuring.

Universal: L. J. Schlaifer, general sales manager, stated that this company would not adopt a definite stand on double featuring. No exclusive runs, however.

United Artists: Al Lichtman, in charge of distribution, said that no effort will be made to regulate double featuring. Plans to make its exclusive-run plan available on a large scale this season. No deals completed as yet.

Educational-World Wide (Tiffany): Joe Goldberg, feature sales manager, said that, although the company does not favor double featuring, it will not attempt to regulate the practice by contractual restrictions. The company will not engage in exclusive-run deals.

MGM: Felix Feist, general sales manager, made available a copy of the company's contract containing the double featuring restriction clause. MGM exclusive-run plan will be made available this year.

FILM MAKERS DISREGARD QUALITY IN PURSUING CYCLE: LEE SHUBERT

Premier Showman of New York Stage Declares There's No Such Thing as Type in Selection of Production Material

by CHARLES S. AARONSON

The show business recognizes no type preferences in the matter of production value, in the opinion of Lee Shubert, Broadway's premier play producer and chief showman of the New York theatrical world.

"There is no such thing as type in the show business," said Mr. Shubert emphatically. "The public demands superior product. It wants 'good stuff.' As long as the productions are good, as long as there is merit to them, the public will accept them."

Mr. Shubert, from behind his desk in the executive offices of the Shubert theatre in the "Forties," spoke comparatively of the motion picture and the so-called legitimate stage, taking into account the effect of the screen on the stage.

"Give the public variety," said Mr. Shubert, amplifying his statement on the necessity of offering "good stuff."

These pointed observations, which expressed what to Mr. Shubert are prime requisites in the show business, gave rise to an observation or two relative to the motion picture and its use of types, its selection of production material.

"The chief fault with the motion picture," he said, "is that it has no set policy in production. The companies watch each other." The reference was in particular to the "cycle" practice of story selection which has come apparently to be an essential part of motion picture production.

Declares Quality Disregarded

"The cycle tendency is bad," said Mr. Shubert. "If one picture of a particular type is successful, the other producers all proceed to copy the theme. As a result, the public soon becomes fed up. During the pursuit of a cycle, no matter what it may be at the moment, producers disregard quality. They do not buy plays because they are good, but because the material submitted conforms to the cycle of the moment.

"Often the best material is passed up while a cycle is in the process of development. The motion picture producers, by so doing, are killing their own business," said Mr. Shubert.

"Variety is the essential thing. There is a market for any type, as long as the product is good. The stage does not so readily fall into the cycle situation, since it is impossible to write—and produce plays as rapidly as stories are made for the screen. It is necessary, as far as possible, to avoid repetition in production. The audience must be given something it will enjoy. It is important that people do not become bored with their entertainment."

Mr. Shubert, who at the moment, is acting as receiver for the Shubert Theatrical Corporation, was asked concerning the generally acknowledged weakness of the legitimate stage during recent seasons. Mr. Shubert cited the economic depression of the moment as perhaps the larger cause, but agreed that the inroads of the motion picture had more than a little to do with the condition of the stage.

"The motion picture has made it hard for the legitimate by taking the best stars, producers and authors with the offer of high salaries," he said.

Says Stage Creates

Pointedly, he remarked, "The stage creates, while the motion picture takes 90 per cent of the talent of the stage for motion picture use."

Mr. Shubert indicated, however, his belief that there is no essential conflict between the legitimate stage and the motion picture.

"The stage has material, and has good authors, though there is room for new writers," he said. "The crop of writers is large enough, but the difficulty is that so few write good, produceable plays."

Questioned concerning first the possibilities, then the methods of a stage "comeback" in the new fall season, soon to open, Mr. Shubert indicated that the stage will come back, with the aid of the theatrical workers' unions and Actors' Equity. Admissions have been forced down, he said, and in order to strike a balance—and produce a profit—the overhead must likewise be reduced. Negotiations with both the unions and Equity are at the moment being carried on, with the unions on the wage situation, with Equity on Sunday openings.

Mr. Shubert stressed the importance of the Sunday opening in the recovery of the stage, citing the fact that people have more time to spend money on amusement on Sunday, when the stage curtain is drawn. The New York producers are willing, said Mr. Shubert, to close their houses on Monday, a weak theatre day, as a concession if the Equity will permit Sunday operation. The producer anticipates no objection from the municipal government of New York if the legitimate theatre should open on Sunday. Ninety per cent of the actors in the association do not work more than 20 weeks in the year, said Mr. Shubert, who believes the majority of the members of the association would be glad of the opportunity to work on Sunday.

Sees No Big Effect from Tax

Due to the generally high scale, comparatively, of the stage admissions, Mr. Shubert sees no serious effect from the new federal admissions tax of 10 per cent on admissions over 40 cents.

Mr. Shubert pointed to the unusual success enjoyed this year by numerous dramatic companies playing during the summer at various resorts, as an indication that a more successful year than for several seasons is in store for the stage in the fall. Some 30 intimate theatres in the resorts are doing excellent business, which, according to Mr. Shubert, indicates a tendency on the part of the public to come back to the legitimate theatre.

It is impossible, at this early date to form any opinion as to the probable type of production destined to be most favored by the theatre public next season, Mr. Shubert indicated.

Declares Lack of Set Policy in Production Is Chief Fault of Picture Industry; Calls Variety an Essential of Entertainment

Leading away from New York, to the "road," Mr. Shubert indicated that the recently completed three-ply producing and booking combination of Shubert, Erlanger and the Theatre Guild, known generally as the American Theatre Society, is still in the process of formation, and that little of a definite nature as to its effectiveness could be ascertained until it begins operations, sometime in October.

This movement, generally applauded by theatrical interests, is in many quarters looked upon as the arrival of a policy long wanted, and inevitable. The combination will function in 12 subscription key cities for the coming season. The principal aim, it was indicated by Mr. Shubert, is the supplying of enough plays, of uniform high quality, for one or two theatres in a town, instead of for three or four theatres. The plan centers about the elimination of competitive situations in all except the largest metropolitan centers of the country, and the assurance of keeping fewer theatres open, but keeping those few theatres open all of the time. Ultimately, it is hoped to provide an entire season of trade marked attractions, selected by a competent committee of judges from the output of allied producers willing to participate.

The restoration of "the road" is generally recognized at the moment as the theatre's biggest problem.

In this connection, a suggestion of William A. Brady, noted theatrical figure, at a luncheon of the Kiwanis Club of Atlantic City early this week, is pertinent.

Mr. Brady suggested, as a move to put the stage back on its feet, that half of the theatres and at least half of the motion picture houses of the country be turned into garages. It might be of no assistance to the garage business, he said, but probably would do a lot for the stage.

Booking Deal Completed

A second radical innovation designed to rehabilitate the stage is rapidly nearing the point of functioning. The United Booking Office, recently formed, will conduct the booking now operated separately by the Shubert and Erlanger interests here and in Canada, outside of New York. The plan is separate from the three-ply merger. Marcus Heiman, president of the new organization, will be in direct supervision, assisted by Augustus Pitou and Jules Murry, who for some years have handled the Erlanger and Shubert bookings, respectively.

Commenting on the organization, Mitchell L. Erlanger, head of the Erlanger organization, said, "The United Booking Office will actually result in salvaging a business that has been more or less on the wane because of economic conditions. There is no doubt that the combination that has been made will result in great benefit not only to the theatre, but to the stage producer as well."

Shubert Speaks On Film Problems

The aim of the organization is much like the other, to eliminate conflicts and unnecessary losses through competition.

That the stage is in need of definite rehabilitation of some sort is indicated by the fact that at the moment there are only seven plays on Broadway, with something like 65 legitimate theatres dark. Of the seven, three are musical shows.

For the new season, producers propose more than 100 productions, which compares with 93 proposed for the new season at this time last year. One theatrical observer is of the belief that next year musical shows will predominate. Ten revues are in the making at the moment.

Five plays are scheduled for opening on Broadway during August, compared with 14 proposed for August at this time in 1931. Of the 14 scheduled last year, 10 reached Broadway. The Shubert interests alone plan three revues, five musical comedies and a number of foreign plays. Completion of these plans, however, are definitely dependent upon the success of negotiations with Equity and the unions.

Operators and Allied Reach Cincinnati Wage Agreement

Executives of the IATSE, Allied and operators in Cincinnati have reached a settlement after a series of closed conferences. Under the agreement, the 55 houses in the local Allied district, comprising situations in southern Ohio, Indiana and Kentucky, will employ operators of Local 327, with a weekly scale of $62.50 for Class A houses, $50 for Class B and $45 for Class C, with one man in a booth.

This is an average reduction of 25 per cent from the figure asked last year by Local 165, which has been reorganized into the present Local 327. The agreement is said not to affect RKO houses in Cincinnati, though they will participate in the wage and manpower reduction.

Theatres Safest, Declares Cooper

Motion picture theatres today are "safer than any other class of building in which the public is accustomed to meet in the form of audiences," Col. John A. Cooper, president of the Motion Picture Distributors and Exhibitors of Canada, points out in a review of the experiences of the last five years. He declared that development of the fireproof projection room has been so effective that even the well-filled theatre is without danger and cited also the improvements in construction and in stairways and exits.

The report said that "there have been several theatres destroyed, but without any loss of life." In the 60 film exchange offices in Canada there had not been a single fire, nor had there been any in exchanges in the United States in all of 1931. Every employee had been trained in fire prevention and every rule had been adopted which would eliminate the possibility of fire, Col. Cooper declared.

In 1931 there were seven theatre fires in Ontario, all inconsequential.

MPTOA MAKES FINAL 5-5-5 PLEA; ALLIED ASKS FOR NEW CONFERENCE

Distributors Notify Lightman That Possible Government Kick-back Stands in Way of Standard Contract Adoption

Current developments in a new move launched by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America for immediate adoption of the 5-5-5 standard exhibition contract are:

1. Practically all large distributors this week notified M. A. Lightman that they would not consider adoption of the standard form this season, indicating they feared possible government action on a uniform contract. Mr. Lightman immediately issued a final plea for action.

2. Invitations from Mr. Lightman to MPTOA and Allied leaders to meet jointly to force a "showdown" found Allied unsympathetic. Eight MPTOA and two other units accept.

3. MPTOA "suggestions" for a film buying "holiday" unless distributors take action was branded by Abram F. Myers as illegal.

4. Mr. Myers, saying that the standard form is better than any now in use, claims industry changes since it was drafted in 1930 have made the uniform agreement antiquated.

5. Allied asks that the 5-5-5 conference of 1930 be reassembled, or another conference called to consider changes.

6. Mr. Lightman continued to deride distributors' attorneys for holding back standard form.

There is little likelihood of distributors adopting the 5-5-5 form of standard exhibition contract this season, regardless of current demands of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America for a "showdown" on the proposition, and despite suggestions emanating from the MPTOA that theatres consider a buying "holiday" unless distributors declare in favor of immediate adoption.

Practically all major distributors this week told M. A. Lightman, MPTOA president, that they were not considering the use of a standard contract this season as an alternative to individual company agreements now in force. In answering demands made by Mr. Lightman it is understood that the companies gave as a principal reason for not adopting the standard form their unwillingness to engage in legal combat with federal authorities who might rule that a standard form is in violation of Judge T. H. Thacher's decree of 1929 which outlawed uniform arbitration which existed in the standard contract in use up to that time.

On Wednesday Mr. Lightman wired that he had sent a final plea on Tuesday to all distributors' attorneys appealing to their sense of fairness and asking them if they would meet individually with a group of representative exhibitors for the purpose of adopting some of the advantages offered in the standard contract for use in their individual company contracts.

"It is obvious," he said, "that we would have no grievance against companies offering to cooperate in this respect. If nothing is done we have only two courses, namely, either demand our rights collectively or submit to a most unfair situation."

Mr. Lightman's current proposal that all exhibitor leaders get together to force a "showdown" with distributors, found Allied unsympathetic. The Lightman suggestion that exhibitors declare a buying "holiday" pending adoption of the contract reacted in the same manner in Allied quarters, where Abram F. Myers, general counsel, said: "A combination of exhibitors not to buy, save on a particular kind of contract, would be just as illegal as a combination of distributors not to sell except on a certain form of contract. It would be amazing if the exhibitors, who have suffered so much from conspiracies in restraint of trade, should now resort to illegal methods to compel the distributors to keep the pledge made by them at Atlantic City in July, 1930, when representatives of distributors and theatre owners drafted the 5-5-5 contract. The impression I gather," Mr. Myers said in commenting on the new move to have the contract adopted, "is that a considerable amount of stew is being made out of one antiquated oyster.

"While the 5-5-5 contract was an improvement over its predecessors, and certainly better than any contract now in use," Mr. Myers believes that "adoption at this time would not cure many of the really serious problems of the business," including selective percentage deals, unreasonable protection and block booking.

Because of the many industry changes which have been made since the 5-5-5 form was drafted in 1930, Allied feels that "there should be a brand new deal," Mr. Myers said. "We feel that the 5-5-5 conference should be reassembled; or, better yet, another conference, in which there will be a larger percentage of representatives of the independent theatre owners, should be called."

Suggested Buying "Holiday"

For many months the MPTOA, led by President Lightman, has been seeking the standard form by the lawyers of distributors who have had the matter in hand. On the other side, Allied has strongly advocated "junking" the 5-5-5 and has urged a new agreement.

In the meantime, the executive committee of the MPTOA met at Atlantic City on July 18 and 19 and there decided to take action to force a "showdown." Plans were carried further last Wednesday when Mr. Lightman, from the headquarters of his theatre company at Memphis, issued a militant statement in which he suggested the buying "holiday" and charged distributors with a breach of faith for their failure to adopt the contract completed two years ago. Copies of the statement were dispatched by Mr. Lightman to 35 Allied and MPTOA leaders, whom he invited to meet to take action against distributors.

Myers Seeks to Reassemble 5-5-5 Group; Allied Questions Legality of Buying "Holiday" Suggested by the MPTOA

Mr. Lightman advised on Wednesday that 10 state exhibitor organizations have replied favoring holding a meeting on the contract. He said he would not favor calling a meeting unless at least 20 organizations were inclined to do so. Two of the 10 responding are not MPTOA affiliates.

A current reply from Universal outlined the general stand of distributors. Mr. Lightman was told that the companies fear government action against any concerted move on the part of distributors to affect a uniform agreement. In the meantime, the Lightman buying "holiday" is said to have been given the backing of the national executive committee of the MPTOA. The committee is planning to advise exhibitors against signing new contracts unless they are given the benefit of the standard form.

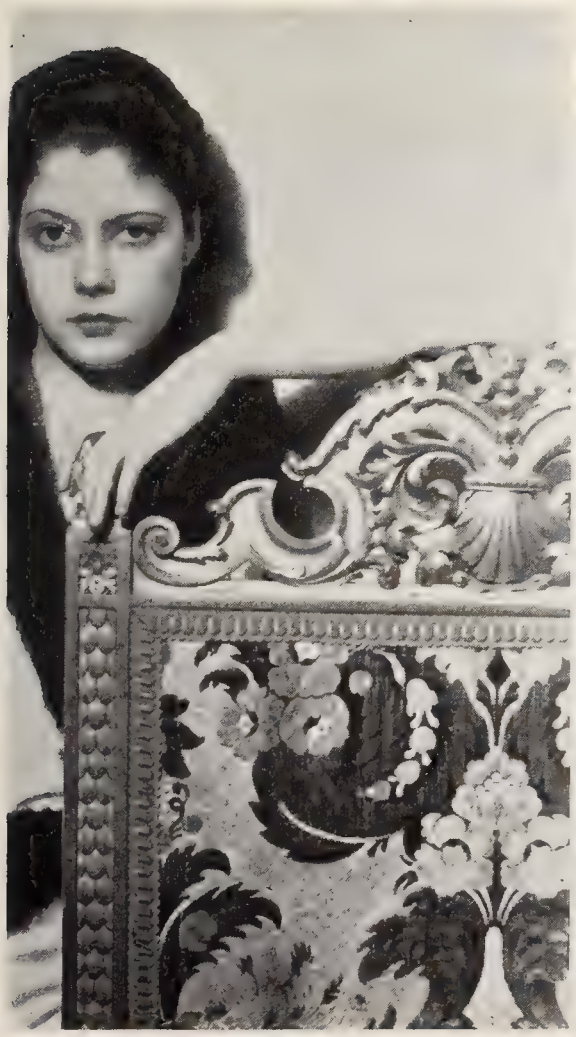
Tacit Approval Given

Although Mr. Lightman obtained some time ago from Department of Justice officials at Washington a tacit approval of the legality of the proposed new form, it was pointed out in New York this week by an authority on motion picture contracts that the so-called "approval" given to Mr. Lightman would not constitute sufficient grounds for defense if the government decided to prosecute distributors for concerted contract action in violation of Judge Thacher's decree.

One of the principal reasons why MPTOA seeks adoption of the new form hinges around the standardization which it would give to contractual relations between exhibitors and exchanges. It prohibits the inclusion of additional clauses at the bottom of a contract and would be easier for an exhibitor to learn and understand, whereas the many forms and various clauses on individual contracts now in use tend to confuse the buyer. Some 25 or more forms of contracts are now being used, certain companies having two or three.

The standard form has a rejection clause which permits the rejection of 5 per cent of all pictures on a contract without payment. Another clause, which was written in following the original 5-5-5 sessions at Atlantic City, automatically cancels the protection afforded a first run if that first run has not played a picture 90 days following release.

Another important point in the new form prohibits the use of local checkers. This is aimed at the possibility of a local resident who is engaged for checking being too familiar with the exhibitor. Checkers must be imported from other towns. Also, the new contract has a rigid clause on substitutions. It virtually prevents "fraudulent" substitutions by a distributor.



THE CAMERA REPORTS

ALL IN FUN. (Above) Ludwig Geiskop's fellow Paramount News workers merely wishing him bon voyage, as a prelude to his transfer to Paris. However, Mr. Geiskop managed a heh-heh over it.

SIGNED. (Below) Miriam Jordan, English actress featured in "Cynara," who has been given a long-term contract by Fox. In her screen debut she is opposite Warner Baxter in "Six Hours to Live."

IN DEBUT. Diane Sinclair, one of the new personalities of the screen, who has just made her first screen appearance in MGM's "Washington Masquerade," which features Lionel Barrymore.

HALF-WAY. Meeting at the crest of a pastoral bridge—a fetching episode in the World Wide production, "Those We Love," with Lilyan Tashman and Kenneth MacKenna.

MADE GOOD. And made well, for witness the cause of her recent success in pictures: As the ingenue lead in "Million Dollar Legs," Susan Fleming (for 'tis she whom we picture) registered so well that she has been given a long-term contract by Paramount.

MASK. An unusual portrait of Sheila Terry, concentrating attention upon the classic features of the Warner Brothers player, a newcomer on the screen.

FUNNY. And why not? It's Oliver Hardy's passport. And though Stan Laurel is getting a laugh out of it himself, would his passport be less humorous? The point being that these Roach-MGM comedians are that way. They are shown during their current trip abroad, at a reception in London at the Savoy hotel, with Sam Eckman, Jr., MGM sales director for Great Britain, as their host.

AIR-MINDED. George Hirliman, president of Exhibitors' Screen Service, Inc., and George West, Midwest division manager of that concern, about to hop off on a business trip. Hirliman has just completed a tour of the country organizing distributing points for his company's service.

CHAMPION. Jack Sharkey, officially the world's most eminent pugilist, as he was host to Dick Sears and John Davin, Pathe newsreel technicians, at his Bow Lake, N. H., camp.

ON LOCATION. With the boss on hand. Principals of the World Wide company making "Those We Love," as they played host to William Saal, production executive, during his trip to Hollywood. Shown during a lull in the proceedings are Saal, Mrs. Saal, Mr. Graneth, Mary Astor, Mrs. Graneth, Kenneth MacKenna, and Director Robert Florey.

FROM BROADWAY. Aline MacMahon, stage actress, whose work in Warner Brothers' "Five Star Final" and "The Mouthpiece" won her "One-Way Passage" role.

GERMANS WELCOMING U. S. FILMS IF DIALOGUE IS HELD TO MINIMUM

Will Fare Better if They Do Not Attempt to Describe Internal Europe's Conditions; Original Versions Preferred

Regardless of official actions to restrict importation of American pictures into Germany—and details of the new and stringent contingent regulations were published recently in these columns—the German theatre-going public has its definite likings for productions from the United States—and dislikes. Mr. Hans Tintner, Berlin correspondent of the HERALD, in the following article comments upon the contrasting reactions of the Berliner and the provincial toward various forms of picture fare from these shores.

by HANS TINTNER

Berlin Correspondent

The first opening in Berlin does not decide the success of a sound film in Germany. It would be fundamentally fallacious to identify the audiences in Berlin with the general German mentality. What seems ridiculous to the Berliners may be a great treat to the audiences in a smaller Prussian town two hours journey from Berlin. Public opinion in Berlin, as in nearly all other big cities, is far from fresh and natural naiveté on account of the too densely concentrated theatre and book market and the unnatural accumulation of opposite daily papers. Everything relating to the feelings of the heart is easily put off with a superior smile as immaterial and uncontrollable sentimentalism. What the audiences in the German provinces not only appreciate but absolutely demand, namely the idyllic view of life, the pleasant and optimistic adornment of real life, the unsophisticated and heartfelt pointing out of everything appealing to the broad masses of the people, all that is hated by the Berliners. The Berlin audiences can hardly be earnestly interested by anything else than overwhelming tempo or fascinating real life reporting.

Critiques Differ Also

The same differences are naturally noticeable in the newspaper critiques of Berlin, as compared with the provincial papers. Pictures which are met with sharp critiques in Berlin are enthusiastically received by the public and press in the provincial towns. The German producers have already quite often considered the thought whether it would be more advantageous to abandon the first opening in Berlin, in order to avoid the fruitless attacks of the metropolitan boulevard press. However, this is not feasible for internal reasons. The provincial exhibitor insists on the first opening in Berlin, feeling it is a valuable help for him in his negotiations with the distributor regarding the rental price. If the Berlin critique is favorable, he declares that it does not mean anything owing to the great difference in taste of the Berlin audiences and the provincial audiences, but he will always use an unfavorable critique to force lower rental prices. Yet it is a fact that the majority of the Berlin press and the audiences of the Berlin first-run theatres are so blasé that their opinion can be no guide for the producers of motion pictures.

Therefore, if the German sound film, adapted to meet the taste of the broad masses, is very likely to meet with an unfavorable reception by the audiences and critics of the opening night in Berlin, how much more does that apply to a foreign sound picture. However, it would be fundamentally incorrect to draw the general conclusion that in the German public there exists an aversion to the American film, even if parts of the American sound films are rejected at the premiere in Berlin.

See Few New U. S. Films

A general investigation in this direction should be based on the first line on a thorough knowledge of the latest American production. However, the German public has seen only an insignificant percentage of the recent American sound films. The kontingent restrictions force the film importer to select only a few pictures of the vast American product. To decide whether this selection was always a good one, it would be necessary to know all the pictures. Germany has seen of the American sound films produced in the past year scarcely more than the following: "Shanghai Express," "American Tragedy," "Frankenstein," "X 27" and "City Streets" in the German version.

"Shanghai Express" scored an extraordinary success in Germany. The few newspaper reviews criticizing the lack of a more detailed treatment of the psychological problems in the thrilling action formed a violent contrast to the enthusiasm and gratefulness with which the public received this film.

"American Tragedy" met also with strong interest. That the public did not grow enthusiastic was due to the fact that the picture contained too much dialogue. Everything that was important in this picture was expressed in the dialogue, an excellent, very pregnant dialogue—but, unfortunately, the German audience did not understand it.

Berliners Prosaic

"Frankenstein," a story based on supernatural happenings, had to be a failure with the prosaic and practical Berliners. As medieval myth, as ancient legend, as for instance in the Golem mystery, the story of the artificial man might have been successful. As an episode of our days, the story was incredible.

"X 27" was unfavorably commented upon by some of the Berlin critics, but the greater part of the public received it with interest. Like all American films describing internal European conditions, this picture was handicapped by the exact knowledge of these conditions on the part of the public.

Prosaic and Practical Berliners Turn Up Noses at Idyllic Likings of Provincials; Few New U. S. Sound Films Shown

The German who is familiar with all details of military life—and there is hardly a German not knowing them—feels surprised and involuntarily disturbed and annoyed by the more or less incorrect picturization of these conditions. The same would apply to the American public, if a picture on the American Navy or a story showing the life of American farmers were to be produced in Germany.

"City Streets" was released here in a post-synchronized version which was technically excellent. The picture created interest and the newspaper reviews were very favorable, but the original American version would have been much more interesting than the German version, despite the fact that the English dialogue could not be understood by the German audiences.

It follows that the American sound film, as far as it has been shown in Germany at all, is handicapped by the foreign language and sometimes by the somewhat strange representation of well-known European conditions and backgrounds, but on the whole it has been well received by the German public, so there can be no talk of an aversion to American sound films in Germany. The German cinema-goer knows from experience that a good American film, with the large sums spent on its production, is offering him something very interesting, something worth seeing. The American film industry always will find highly interested audiences in Germany for films in which the dialogue is reduced to an absolute minimum and which avoid the showing of German conditions and backgrounds. In all cases the original American version will be preferable to the dubbed versions. It seems that the so-called German versions, that is the versions produced in Hollywood with German speaking actors, have generally proved to be failures.

Plunkett Sues RKO for Back Salary, Breach of Contract

Joseph Plunkett, former general manager of RKO theatres, recently asked to resign by Harold B. Franklin, has instituted suit against RKO in New York supreme court. Charging breach of contract, Mr. Plunkett has asked for damages of $24,375, claimed as salary due.

The court recently issued an attachment against RKO, based on the action, to the amount of the damages asked, according to L. Green, Mr. Plunkett's attorney, of the New York firm of Maurice Goodman. Mr. Green indicated that the trial will probably come up in the fall. Mr. Plunkett claims his contract ran until January 21, 1933, providing for a salary of $45,000 annually. He claims he was discharged without cause on July 9, 1932.

PARAMOUNT HOST TO 56 CRITICS IN BETTER BUSINESS CAMPAIGN

Total of 10,604,986 Reader Circulation Represented at Gathering of Newspaper Writers of East and Middle West

Paramount Publix Corporation brought to New York this week a group of 56 motion picture critics from leading newspapers of the East and Middlewest to inaugurate "a nationwide campaign looking toward better business in theatres."

Three new pictures were screened and the group heard Adolph Zukor, president, and Sam Katz, executive vice-president, discuss Paramount and Paramount product for the new season. A total reader circulation of 10,604,986 was represented by the picture writers at the gathering.

The first group of critics arrived early on Wednesday, and with syndicate, fan, trade and news editors of New York, attended a luncheon at the Waldorf Astoria where the company had set aside a floor for its out-of-town guests. The entire executive staff of the Paramount home office was at the speakers' table, headed by Mr. Zukor and Mr. Katz, Dave Chatkin, John Balaban, Ralph Kohn, Charles E. McCarthy, Leo Spitz, Herman Wobber, William R. Fraser, Sam Dembow and Milton Feld. Mr. Zukor, in introducing Mr. Katz, to whom he gave credit for making "good pictures" for Paramount, told the gathering that good pictures and bad pictures are not accidents. There is a reason for either, or both, he said.

"There is nothing that Mr. Katz can give me," continued Mr. Zukor, "nothing that I want from him, nothing that he wants from me. He doesn't want my job. He doesn't want the job he has. His very ambition is success. My ambition is success. And my success I will realize through an individual like the one who is going to address you"—Sam Katz.

Mr. Katz discussed studio conditions in Hollywood, and at Paramount in particular. Upon arriving in Hollywood four months ago admittedly to inject a fresh viewpoint to help solve existing problems, Mr. Katz said he found a few things on the Coast that were obvious. He referred to a Hollywood "viewpoint that might not necessarily reach the distance that pictures had to circulate." Tradition, too, was causing a great deal of trouble, and then depression had not yet reached the studios. "We kicked all of the walls right out of their foundation; we permitted youth to come into the studio," he said.

"We knew that the market was surfeited with its over-quota of sex pictures," he continued. "We knew that possibly dinner jackets and evening dresses might not appeal to so many people at this particular time as a phase of the entertainment they might want in the mood they were in, and we think that we have limited that in our production.

"We broke down another Hollywood tradition, and that is that a given trademark belonged to a given player. And so I began to induce the studios to realize that no company was any better off than the success of all the companies, and that if a given player could do better in a part in the picture of another studio, it was incumbent upon that studio to loan that player for the benefit of the theatre, and of course that means the public.

There's a Reason for Good and Bad Films, Says Zukor; Trying to Avoid Cycles in Pictures, Declares Katz

"We are trying—we are talking about it out there—to avoid the cycles of pictures. That is a pretty difficult thing to accomplish, but I think if we talk about it long enough we will certainly make progress. I am in hopes that finally we will all catch up with ourselves out there sufficiently so that we might not all be making gangster stories or costume plays, given types of stories at the same time.

"I think that possibly the greatest advantage there was to the company in sending me out was that I definitely knew that I knew nothing about production, and being rather secure in my position, I wasn't timid about admitting it."

Following the luncheon, the critics attended a preview of Harold Lloyd's "Movie Crazy." They were guests at the premiere of "Horsefeathers" in the evening and on Thursday were to see Maurice Chevalier's "Love Me Tonight."—"Watch for the reviews in your territory and cash in on them," was a significant message to managers in the field, which appeared in the current issue of a Paramount house organ.

DEFENDS MOVING SHOTS

Public Likes "Trapeze Performances," Says Theatre Manager; Urges Recognition of Cameraman

by RALPH COKAIN

Manager, Indiana Theatre, Marion, Ind.

I have just read Leo Meehan's article on "perambulator shots" in MOTION PICTURE HERALD. (In his article, in the July 30 issue, Mr. Meehan said that "cinematographers are in rebellion against trapeze performances." He also pointed out that the cost of moving shots will result in reduced usage of them.)

I have talked with others who have watched pictures, and it is their opinion that the moving shots are easier on the eyes than the still shots. Steady movement of the camera's lens is similar to the steady progressing of the picture's plot.

While the practice may be risky for the cameraman, I'm positive audiences like it. If I were George Barnes, I'd be proud of those moving shots in "Street Scene," maintaining intense suspense and thrilling entertainment in a picture with only one setting. And Lee Garmes can crow over that opening scene in "Scarface," in which the camera travels from the street light into the restaurant, and records the action smoothly, without a single jump to the closeup.

I really don't think moving shots are being overdone, and I hope the cameramen don't sit on the stationary stool too long. A motion picture must have movement, and the steady movement of the camera unconsciously carries the spectator right along with the story.

Instead of going back to the tripod days, I'd want to improve. I know it's a job for the boys, but think of the satisfaction derived from seeing something unusual in your own photography.

I've often wondered why the cinematographer wasn't more popularly recognized for his work. It is nine times out of ten the camera work that enhances our enjoyment of a motion picture more than anything else. The cameraman is depended upon for the alluring beauty of your favorite star on the screen. He must constantly be on the alert for new ideas relative to long shots, closeups, and other necessary duties of a cameraman.

Years ago there were no "dissolves"; nothing but a jump from one scene to another. Even one scene had jumps in it, for once the character got out of range of the camera, another had to "pick him up" and continue the scene. As a result, the pictures were "jerky," and tiring to the eyes.

There are a few present day pictures that use the old jumpy style of continuity. I watched "Lena Rivers" the other day, and noted a few striking examples. In the opening scene, we see the lower half of a man pacing the floor. The camera is stationary. Instead of gradually rising to show us who he is, it jumps quickly to his upper half. Then it jumps to a long shot. As he walks into another room, it would have been effective if the camera had been mounted on a movable platform to follow him through the door.

The "motion" in motion pictures today is basically achieved by the camera moving along from one scene to another. In "The Front Page," what would have been a "slow movie" was fast entertainment principally because of the intelligent photography. The camera was moving around the reporters' table in the criminal courts building; it followed the characters slowly and without interruption, thus keeping the audience's interest sutsained.

When I go to a show, I like to guess just how certain scenes are going to be filmed. I like to see the camera follow the character up a long flight of stairs, or move over the heads of a crowd of people, or follow one couple in a crowd of dancers. In the dancing scene in "One Hour With You," you'll recall that the camera followed the chief characters as they danced and sang. Thus there was not only tantalizing rhythm in the melody itself, but in the way it was photographed.

Most of the better producers are eager to use any possible developments in cinematography.

So please, cameramen, don't let those cameras stay in one place too long. Keep them moving. The public likes it.

Jean LeRoy Dies; Early Worker in Picture Mechanics

Jean A. LeRoy, an early worker in the mechanics of the motion picture, died Tuesday at his home, 345 East Seventeenth street, New York. He was in his seventy-eighth year, and had long been afflicted with paralysis.

The death of Mr. LeRoy gave occasion to considerable press discussion of his more recently asserted claims of priority as the inventor of motion picture projection mechanisms, which have in the last few years been the subject of a number of investigations by sundry experts and which have had some consideration by a committee of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, which while according him recognition as an "early worker" did not endeavor to make findings in support of priority contentions.

Mr. LeRoy, a picturesque figure and capable mechanician, for many years prior to his illness operated a camera repair shop in the middle Forties in New York. He there had an interesting collection of old devices, the work of various craftsmen and inventors, and a considerable collection of the early motion picture films made by Woodville Latham, the Edison studios, Lumiere Brothers in France and other historic bits.

Mr. LeRoy is survived by his second wife. His only son, by a prior marriage, was killed in service in France. The funeral was announced for Friday morning at the undertaking chapel at 515 Sixth avenue, New York.

Quirk Services Held at Kensico

Funeral services for James R. Quirk, publisher of "Photoplay Magazine," who died in Hollywood last week, were held last Sunday in the chapel of Kensico Cemetery, Mount Pleasant, near Valhalla, N. Y.

After the services the body was placed in a receiving vault at the cemetery, pending arrangements for final interment. Approximately 200 persons, including many friends prominent in the motion picture industry, attended. The body had been accompanied East by Mr. Quirk's widow, the former May Allison, screen actress.

Stage and Screen Division Formed to Boost Roosevelt

A stage and screen division of the Democratic National Committee has been formed, with Eddie Dowling as national chairman of the stage group and Wayne Pierson similarly heading the film group. Headquarters are being maintained at the Hotel Roosevelt in New York.

Jack L. Warner, vice president in charge of production at the Warner plant, has been named chairman of the motion picture division's "Roosevelt for President" organization committee. Mr. Warner held a luncheon on the Coast, at which William Gibbs McAdoo was principal speaker.

Status of Lasky Unchanged, Says Sam Katz, in New York

The status of Jesse Lasky, still nominally on a leave of absence from Paramount, remains unchanged, though negotiations for a settlement of his contract or a possible return to the company are being carried on, according to Sam Katz, in charge of production, in New York on Tuesday.

Mr. Katz would not indicate whether Mr. Lasky, former vice president in charge of production, would return to his former post, or in any executive capacity with the company. Mr. Katz will return to the Coast studio about September 1.

Plan Film Tennis Tourney

Employees of film company home offices will engage in a tennis tournament, with matches to be held each Saturday at the Sunnyside Courts, Long Island City. Film executives are expected to offer trophies. Firms already entering teams include Paramount, United Artists, Warner, Erpi, Universal and Columbia.

Pleads for Needy Extras

Joseph Breen of the producers' association on the Coast has instigated a campaign to request studios to employ actors in need, after learning that certain producers were hiring extra outside the relief fund list of the Central Casting Bureau.

Sidney R. Kent Due Friday

Sidney R. Kent, president of Fox Films, is scheduled to arrive in New York Friday from London, where he conferred with Fox British executives.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

THEATRE exploiteers often accomplish results which their well intended efforts do not anticipate.

Recently, five clergymen boarded a taxicab at Union Station in St. Louis to journey to their rectory in the suburbs. Perhaps they are still wondering why so many hundreds smiled as they sped along the town's principal streets and boulevards.

On the spare wheel of the taxi was this caption: "Merrily We Go to Hell"—(at the Ambassador Theatre).

The New York Paramount newsreel staff gathered together the other evening at a side-street restaurant to wish bon voyage to Ludwig Geiskop, a fellow worker who had been transferred to Paris. The party proceeded quite peacefully until Mr. Geiskop attempted to voice his appreciation, when 18 of the huskiest newsreel men cornered the honor guest and disrobed him in two minutes flat. He was then dressed in a hula dancers' "shredded wheat" outfit which was topped off with an Indian chief's war bonnet. That's supposed to be very funny.

In order to get some bloodhounds to race past the camera as good hounds should race, a piece of meat was used as a lure during the filming of Radio's "Liberty Road" the other day in Hollywood. The hounds refused to fall for the gag and investigation revealed that PROP meat was being used.

The management of the Fox Miller theatre at Wichita, Kan., waxed poetical and made this verse the feature of an advertisement on "This Is the Night":

We laughed,
We howled,
We giggled with glee;
We acted as though
We paid to see . . .
The romantic and risky-y,
Frantic and frisky,
Comical farce about
A French lad-ee
Whom a gentleman mistook
For a hot bab-ee.

One of those big national theatre circuits, all of which are enjoying an orgy of trick economies, bought a bit of film printing from Pathe's Bound Brook laboratory the other day and on receipt of an invoice for $1.30 remitted a voucher check for $1.28 inscribed "Less two cents check tax." Since then the correspondence back and forth, explaining to the chiseler that his bill was $1.30, has cost him about 35 cents. How the savings roll up!

Al Cameron, of National Broadcasting, says he has found out what to do with his old suit: "Take it off at night—and put it on in the morning."

MR. CECIL BLOUNT DeMILLE has set out in search of a "torso-tosser" for "The Sign of the Cross." "I'll find her if I have to sit through tests for the rest of the summer," he said.

Under the caption, "DeMille Starts Search for the Perfect Woman," Paramount officially announced on Tuesday that Hollywood offers "a golden reward to the girl who has:

"Eyes with the flash and fire of Lenore Ulric's.
Hands with the delicate grace of Pavlowa's.
Legs with the symmetry of Marlene Dietrich's.
A seductive blues-singing voice like that of Josephine Baker.
Torso-tossing ability equaling that of Gilda Grey.
The mysterious allure of Greta Garbo."

If we knew a girl like that we'd certainly not tell Mr. DeMille about her.

"Be a Booster—Not a Knocker," Paramount Publix advises its staff. "About 30,000 people are members of this organization," it is said. "If each one, by proper boosting, were responsible for one paid admission a day to a Publix theatre, the circuit gross would jump $100,000 a week!"—or $5,200,000 in one year.

A picture star gets "oiled": Warren William entered the Union Station at Kansas City the other day like a breath from the West. He was extremely modest and self-effacing and implored his fans to stand to the windward of him. The reason was that Mr. William, having heard tales of the Kansas heat, had been advised by a friend in Hollywood to anoint himself with eucalyptus oil before crossing the Sunflower State. The friend assured Warren that the oil would make the heat much more tolerable. In any event, it made Mr. William quite intolerable to those nearby.

"This is certainly a break for your public," Bette Davis, another player, assured him: "See hear and smell Warren William."

The New Orleans "Item-Tribune" editor had this to say of a holdup at the Saenger recently when police cars, detectives and armed guards galore surrounded the house in a vain search for a reported box office hold-up gang:

"I wonder if the press agent had anything to do with the turning in of that hold-up alarm that sent police riot cars screaming to the Saenger theatre, and I wonder if he took a picture of the crowd and sent it to the New York office with the information that it was police fighting back the crowds trying to get into the Saenger?"

If he did, Mr. Editor of the "Item-Tribune," and the box-office reports which are subsequently mailed to the Publix home office did not match up with the crowds, then what?

We wandered into the main executive and editorial office of the New York Times the other day and in the large reception room of this highly conservative and sex-less newspaper we sat down to await the city editor. We were puzzled at not seeing a single copy of the Times on any of the many reading tables and on further investigation discovered that the only publication to be found was a copy of the New York Daily Mirror, one of the most tabloid tabloids published.

The Mirror on that day printed Walter Winchell's gossip of the week.

WE were talking with a picture executive the other day about some of the industry's founders and their ability to build out of almost nothing. It was decided that Herbert Lubin should be voted the grand prix for buying a piece of property worth $1,300,000 without placing a single penny on the line and while he had only a few dollars in his pockets.

Mr. Lubin for many years had a strong desire to erect the largest motion picture theatre in the world. His dream came true when the New York Roxy opened about five years ago. Selecting a site at 50th street and Seventh avenue, Mr. Lubin walked into the office of the real estate agent who handled the property, chalked off a large parcel on the blueprint and asked the agent "How much?" When the estate manager told him $1,300,000, Mr. Lubin had exactly $30 in his trousers, but his persuasiveness brought about a deal on a 30-day note. He then proceeded to promote finances to meet that obligation.

A few weeks after the house opened, Mr. Lubin sold his interest to Fox for $2,900,000, guaranteed personally by William Fox and by the Fox companies. He was paid $500,000 every six months.

Mary Pickford, it seems, believes in her stars. On her recent trip to New York she flew by plane from Los Angeles to Kansas City, breaking the journey only to deposit husband Douglas Fairbanks somewhere in New Mexico to search for an old-fashioned something or other.

When Miss Pickford arrived in Kansas City, airline agents met her with reservations for an eastbound plane. But no, the lady would have to consult her horoscopist first. Her favorite astrologer was in Los Angeles, but a long-distance call failed to locate him and Miss Pickford then called Santa Monica, where, she said, her star-gazer might be disporting in the surf. Here, too, efforts to find him were in vain. The airline agents suggested that the star-gazer might consider the trip by any other method just as risky, but Miss Pickford disregarded the advice and caught the Santa Fe Chief.

"Some people may think it's a silly superstition," was Miss Pickford's parting shot, "but I believe in it."

Sherwin Kane of the "Motion Picture Herald" staff, went frolicking with a friend the other evening during which Mr. Kane learned that business is recovering so rapidly his friend is unable to take a summer vacation from the knitting mills of which he is vice-president. Herschel Stuart, theatre executive of RKO, said the other day that "there is a feeling of good will and security in most of our states, though one executive under me told his best pal last week that I was a heel, and gave me one month to pack my calendar and pad and inkstand and 'get to hell back where I came from.' Believing a man has an honest opinion, I did not fire the executive. He gave me one month. I'll give him three months to get better acquainted. If, on October 1st, he is still of the same opinion, one of us will quit the company."

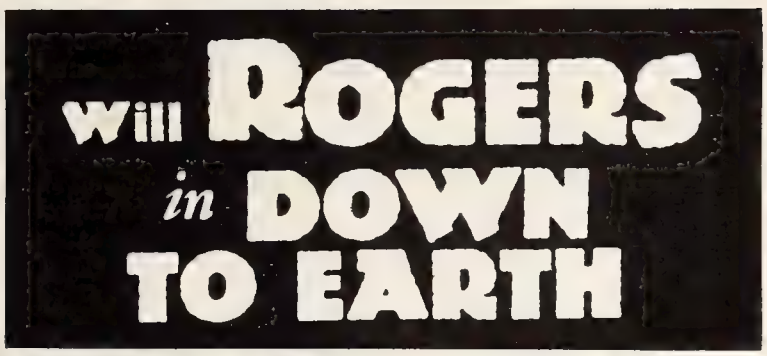
WHY THESE WILL MAKE

CHANDU THE MAGICIAN

● If any picture ever had a ready-made audience, this has. For months about 50 high-powered radio stations from coast to coast have been and are broadcasting "Chandu" nightly, blanketing the entire country.

● The story is a pip, rich in weird Oriental mystery, packed with fast-paced action, spiced with romance and comedy.



● Edmund Lowe, the star, has proved time and again to be a big draw in pictures like this.

● Supporting him is Bela Lugosi of "Dracula" and "White Zombie" — Irene Ware, beautiful "Vanities" star, a new find — Henry B. Walthall, known to every movie fan.

● And to top it off, you have one of the neatest naturals for exploitation that ever warmed a showman's heart.

The Whole Trade Has Started to

TWO PICTURES YOU MONEY

● Now in the excitement of a presidential year — Will Rogers, the Million Dollar Publicity Name. What a break!

● In a story that deals with plain people who found headaches in wealth and happiness when they went broke — real down-to-earth folks that your fans can love and understand. Plenty of mellow humor, too.

● Homer Croy, the author, wrote "They Had to See Paris" one of Rogers' biggest successes. He knows how to get the best out of Will.

● For support there is Dorothy Jordan, Irene Rich, Matty Kemp — swell for your marquee.

● And to cinch it you have David Butler, the director who made "A Connecticut Yankee" with Rogers.

Trade Conference Reports on Films

The Imperial Trade Conference, now in session at Ottawa to discuss the economic and trade situation in the United Kingdom, on Tuesday took up the non-theatrical film problems of England and Canada when a report on "The Film on National Life" was presented by the Commission on Educational and Cultural Films, of London.

The committee has been investigating the influence of films for two years and its report dealt exclusively with serious aspects of the screen in schools, churches and in business. There was no mention made of a proposed quota law for Canada and other British possessions, nor was film control discussed. The industry in America has been awaiting word from the Conference on both problems.

The Toronto Globe, leading Liberal newspaper of Canada, has called upon the Canadian and Provincial governments to grant concessions to British film producers to encourage the importation of British pictures into Canada. In an editorial, the Globe urges the Dominion to place British films on the free list of tariff schedules and the Provinces to censor British productions free of charge. It is pointed out that the British producer must pay tariff duties, sales tax, excise tax and exchange imposts to satisfy the Dominion authorities and he must also pay a total of $153 per feature to satisfy the Provinces for censorship. It is inferred that this would obviate the necessity for a film quota law for Canada.

With respect to other trade problems, the Globe said:

"In addition, it is the duty of the Provinces to combat methods alleged to force the independent theatre owners to buy Hollywood pictures on the 'block system.'

"It is of national and Imperial importance that Canada should do everything possible to free this country from dominance of Hollywood. It would be wiser to err on the side of too much generosity to British producers than otherwise."

Independent Producers, Union Ratify Agreement

The Independent Motion Picture Producers' Association, Coast group, this week further ratified minor changes in its two-year agreement with the Coast unions. All locals had previously signed. The signature of Richard Green was finally obtained to definitely conclude the agreement.

The deal it seeks is virtually a victory for the independent producers on practically all phases of the difficulties with the unions. Included in the terms of the agreement are a new wage scale for sound men and the declaration of a two-year moratorium on sympathetic strike walkouts.

MGM Declares Dividend

Metro-Goldwyn Pictures Corporation has declared the regular quarterly dividend of 47½ cents per share on the preferred stock, payable September 15, to stock of record August 26.

Warner to Show 12 Features in Exchange Cities

Warner has completed plans for a "Warner Brothers National Exhibit," to be held August 22 and 23 in all exchange centers, when exhibitors and prominent citizens of the communities will preview 12 features already completed. The support of the various chambers of commerce will be solicited.

An official hotel will be designated in each city, with the hotel cooperating in decoration, publicity and entertainment. Each Warner exchange manager has been furnished with a plan for handling details. A statement from Major Albert Warner, in charge of distribution, indicates that the company anticipates approximately 15,000 exhibitors and civic leaders will attend the showings.

The 12 features which will be previewed, and their release dates, are: "Crooner," August 20; "Doctor X," August 27; "Two Against the World," September 3; "Life Begins," September 10; "A Successful Calamity," September 17; "Tiger Shark," September 24; "The Crash," October 1; "Blessed Event," October 8; "Cabin in the Cotton," October 15; "One Way Passage," October 22; "Son of Russia," October 29; "Three On a Match," November 5.

Numerous Vitaphone short subjects and two westerns will also be shown during the two days.

Free Imports for Rockefeller City

Congress has passed and President Hoover has signed a bill which authorizes the entry under bond into Rockefeller Center, in New York, without prepayment of customs duty, of goods from abroad intended for exhibition and subsequent sale, according to an announcement from Rockefeller City.

The legislation will have particular effect on goods imported for display in the British and French Buildings and the proposed German and Italian Buildings to be erected in the Center. All the buildings in the development, however, are included in the legislation. The tariff law, as previously in operation, expressly forbids a private corporation from importing goods without the payment of duty at the time of arrival.

Under the Rockefeller Center law all imported articles shall be subject at the expiration of two years to the import duties then in force, unless they shall have been sold or exported from this country prior to that time.

England Sharply Increases Duty on Sound Track Films

The English government has increased the customs valuation on imported sound track negative film from two cents to $1 per foot, according to cable advices from London.

Best Opportunity Of British Studios, Hammons Believes

Conditions obtaining in England today afford British producers their greatest opportunity of assuming a dominant position in European film distribution, in the opinion of E. W. Hammons, president of Educational-World Wide Pictures, on his return from England early this week, following a survey of conditions abroad.

The present advantage of British producers, in home markets, at least, is to be attributed to the effective national propaganda which has been used for many months in England in a patronage appeal for British pictures. So successful has the reign of propaganda been, according to Mr. Hammons, that the increased revenue from picture rentals may prove sufficient to establish a higher standard of British film production. Mr. Hammons sees a danger, however, to the future of British production and exhibition if the industry relies solely upon the continuance of propaganda for its prosperity, and believes that the soundest policy of exhibition will be one which recognizes American product as the "backbone of the schedule."

"As a result of the continuous and strenuous propaganda for home patronage of British pictures there has been a growing preference for them in England during the past six months," Mr. Hammons said. "At present, the British public unquestionably likes its own pictures best, and the increased revenue being provided theatres and producers as a result is encouraging them to make and exhibit more British pictures.

"In this situation, however, I see a pitfall for big theatres which attempt to rely entirely upon domestic pictures for their programs, in the belief that the force of national propaganda alone will make the poorest of them a success at the box office," Mr. Hammons said. "The effect of this propaganda can be only temporary. It will take unfailing dramatic values to maintain the increased patronage which has been won for British producers, and although existing conditions provide those producers with the best opportunity they have ever had, it does not appear likely that they can match propaganda indefinitely with American star values.

"This fact," he continued, "should make it apparent to the British exhibitor that the soundest policy for him is to capitalize on the current national propaganda whenever he has a worthwhile British made picture, and when he has not he should continue to supply his audiences with the variety and star names of American pictures. During the present wave of popularity of British pictures, the British exhibitor should not be blind to the fact that in the past the American picture has always been the backbone of his business, and must continue so for at least the next few years.

"The British distributor, too, should not be confused by the propaganda intended for patronage consumption.

Mr. Hammons reported that so effective has been the British propaganda campaign that a British picture now grosses three times as much as does an American picture similar in theme.

POWERS SEES TREE, NOT FOREST: HODKINSON

Centralized Distribution Plan With Government Approval Could Be Worked Out, Declares Sponsor of System

Belief that his proposed plan for centralized distribution of all motion pictures could be worked out to the satisfaction of the Government, just as similar corporate structures cover the operation of telephones, railway express and Pullman sleeping cars, was expressed in Guatemala City by W. W. Hodkinson, who recently presented a new plan of picture distribution through MOTION PICTURE HERALD. Mr. Hodkinson is in Central America in connection with his airline, which handles the mail and passenger traffic of the air in this section of the world.

"Even if the Integration Corporation were set up along the lines I propose, to offer a common carrier circulation plan to all producers, and to offer classified services to classified theatres, there would be no obligation on the part of a producer or exhibitor to use the system," said Mr. Hodkinson. "The plan does not require the support of all producers and all exhibitors to make it a success.

Answers P. A. Powers

"In expressing some objections to the plan recently, Mr. P. A. Powers failed to grasp its full import. He touches upon details of operation which cannot all be covered in an article concerned with fundamentals. The plan contemplates looking at a forest; Mr. Powers sees a tree, or trees. Naturally I know that certain trees must be removed if we are to build a new road through the forest. No one can tell in advance how many classifications of either pictures or theatres could continue to operate profitably. Only the larger communities would be able to exist exclusively on one grade of pictures. Many smaller theatres would probably require several grades to keep their houses in operation.

"Mr. Powers questions the ability of the plan to meet varying exhibition or exhibitor conditions. Primarily the classification of pictures and theatres would be for the internal use of the industry, a yardstick by which relative values of pictures and theatres may be measured and adjusted one to the other; not for exploitation or classification to the public. It will be the individual picture that will be exploited, in specified theatres.

"If an Integration Corporation were set up, controlling most of the business, which is the condition Mr. Powers fears, it would classify all theatres as A, B, C, etc., in accordance with their present standing and prestige. For the same reason that they are now the channels for the better pictures, they would be offered the better classifications. Another condition anticipated by Mr. Powers is where the A classification is lacking in a community, and the public is denied A class product. In any community where there was only one house, the theatre would be the A theatre. If it did not want the A product, the B house for the purpose of the plan would automatically become the Class A house.

"As to the number of prints and the simultaneous releasing, no plan without elasticity enough to permit of the exercise of common sense judgment can succeed. Simultaneous release, under the plan, consists of releasing that number of prints which will cover the country with the greatest efficiency and permit proper synchronization with a vast advertising campaign, the shipping of prints direct to the theatres and their return direct from the theatres to the laboratories.

Present Methods "Obsolete"

"I have heard that when John MacDonald first proposed to build the New York subways one big financier after another said: 'Dig a tunnel under all these streets and houses, with their mazes of pipe lines, cables, sewers? Impossible!' To which the engineer replied: 'You have a cellar under your house, haven't you? And you dug it without much trouble, didn't you? Well, I'm not thinking of building a tunnel the length of this island. I'm planning to dig a string of cellars and connect them together!'

"So I would say to Mr. Powers. I am offering a plan which will use existing machinery in a new form for the general good of all concerned. I think present methods are equally as obsolete today as were those utilized by the old General Film Company when they persisted in selling film, any and all kinds, at 10 cents per foot."

Arthur-Publix Pooling Deal For New England Collapses

Negotiations for a pooling deal whereby Harry Arthur was to have taken over operation of Publix theatres in Hartford, Springfield, Worcester and New Haven, have been dropped because of failure of the parties to reach an agreement on financial details.

The deal was supposed to have been set when negotiations were abandoned. Papers had already gone to the Publix legal department. Mr. Arthur had planned to pool all producer-owner theatres in New England under his operation.

Maurice Newton Elected To Paramount Publix Board

Maurice Newton, partner in the New York banking house of Hallgarten & Company was elected to the board of directors of Paramount Publix and designated a member of the finance committee at a meeting of the board this week. Mr. Newton, who is a director in several other companies, succeeds Casimir I. Stralem as a member of the Paramount board.

STUDIO AND OLYMPIAD

Carthay Circle, in Limelight for Half Million Visitors, Reopens With "Back Street"; Previews

by LEO MEEHAN
Hollywood Staff Correspondent

I have just seen Paramount's "Love Me Tonight" with Maurice Chevalier and Universal's uproarious screen version of "Once in a Lifetime." Both are swell shows. Reviewers are wearing broad grins these days. Good pictures are the rule, not the exception.

Hollywood has "gone Olympic" these weeks. The world's greatest athletic stars and world's cinema stars have gazed at each other in mutual admiration, having literally tons of stills and motion pictures taken together. You'll be seeing them for the next couple of months, no doubt, either in newsreels or publicity.

The motion picture climbed into the limelight for the half million or so visitors who were in town when Fred Miller reopened the Carthay Circle with a first class Hollywood premiere. And the house was packed, with no standing room outside within a block. The picture was Universal's production of "Back Street," featuring Irene Dunne and John Boles. It looked like the good old days to see this house blazing again, the "big shots" stepping up to the microphone, the swell clothes 'nall.

The large number of Olympiad visitors desirous of seeing motion pictures in the making also presented a problem solved by the Producers Association committee of which Joseph I. Breen was chairman. More than 61,000 persons made application to tour the studios; 2831 organized groups applied. Many of the visitors presented letters from senators, congressmen, state officials, exhibitors and municipal executives.

Charlie Rogers previewed the first of his independently made pictures for Paramount release the other night. It has a unique story idea, with a timely background. "Seventy Thousand Witnesses" see a murder! It takes place in the midst of a big football game, one of the players being the victim. With the football season coming along very soon this, which has plenty of the usual football atmosphere, and a suspenseful murder mystery thrown in, ought to attract attention. The cast includes Phillips Holmes, Dorothy Jordan, Charles Ruggles, Johnny Mack Brown (who really was a great football hero once) and other good actors.

John Gilbert is the author-star of his latest work, "Downstairs," so John will have no one to blame but himself if it doesn't click. The "downstairs" is the servants' quarters, where there is romance and melodrama and considerable complication with the aristocrats upstairs, too. Gilbert starts out a very debonair, romantic figure, much like the popular Gilbert of olden days, but he gets pretty well messed up with his own plot and loses much color before it is all over. His fiance, Virginia Bruce, carries the love story with him.

Spencer Tracy and Peggy Shannon are well teamed up in Fox's production of "A Painted Woman." This is a South Seas story, with the usual glamorous and colorful backgrounds. William Boyd and Irving Pichel offer two convincing villainish roles. It is taken from a screen play done by Guy Bolton. Jack Blystone directed.

Distributors Sign Cleveland Contract

All distributor defendants in the anti-trust zoning suit filed by Cleveland exhibitors have signed agreement papers for an out-of-court settlement and when signatures of Cleveland independent theatre owners are obtained late this week theatre operation in Cleveland will be made to conform with the new contract which will govern zoning and protection and certain phases of admission concessions.

The settlement papers are now being printed in Cleveland and when all signatures have been gathered details will be made public. It is understood that the agreement will reduce first-run protection in that town from 42 days to 36 days, and will also permit subsequent run Cleveland theatres to lower admissions five cents without losing their protection classification in the event Loew houses also reduce their scale by the same amount.

Also, theatres in Cleveland playing two-for-one admission policies, or those operating on a double feature basis will automatically lose their availability dates and go back to the 63d day. Interpretation of Cleveland protection will be determined by arbitration between theatres and exchanges.

At the office of Luther Day, Cleveland attorney representing distributor defendants, it was said that all defendant signatures have been obtained and the settlement is now up to the Cleveland exhibitors' committee. Sam Horwitz, head of counsel for theatre owners, signed the contract while in New York two weeks ago.

A Painted Woman

(Fox)

Drama

A story of tangled love affairs with the locale set in the South Sea islands. It is mass entertainment, inasmuch as it follows the general formula for this type of picture.

Peggy Shannon is an entertainer in a Singapore cafe. She is also William Boyd's girl. Before he leaves for a tour of the islands, he orders her to be true to him, but when another man forces his attentions on her she kills him. She lies to Boyd, who takes her on his boat. He drops her at the first island. There she falls in love with and marries Spencer Tracy. She does not conceal her past from Tracy and everything is happy until Boyd returns. Learning about Peggy and Tracy first from Peggy and then from Irving Pichel, Boyd sees red, but is killed by Tracy's native boy. With Pichel as the prosecutor, Shannon is accused of murder. Tracy wipes his hands of her. But the native boy confesses, and when Tracy learns the true story of the relations between Boyd and his wife all is happy.

There is enough drama and tangled romance to hold the interest of the average audience. But it would not be advisable to over-exploit this picture. Probably the best medium to use in creating interest are the names of the leading players—Spencer Tracy, Peggy Shannon, William Boyd and Irving Pichel. The entire action revolves about them.

It is worthy of note that the roles assigned to these players are quite in line with their demonstrated talents. Tracy is a rather whimsical sort of a fellow, who is willing to overlook the past and build for the future; William Boyd is hard-boiled, and Pichel is the heavy, who is always trying to play both ends against the middle to gain his objective. Peggy Shannon is both alive and wholesome, Exploitation possibilities are limited. Thus it would seem that straight newspaper advertising, featuring names above everything else, would be the logical course to pursue in stimulating audience attention. The title might suggest tieups with distributors of cosmetics, but such stunts would be foreign to the theme of the picture and are not recommended for use. In copy, it might be suggested that you use catchlines that best blend the idea of dramatic romance in which is included a tinge of comedy and a punch of stark tragedy, presenting these ideas to your patrons in words that you know will most intrigue them.

"A Painted Woman" is average entertainment for average audiences, whom it undoubtedly will please, if you don't promise them too much.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

LIFE BEGINS

(Warner Brothers)

A Drama of Emotion

This extraordinary drama will be found an automatic box office success—on this specific and important condition, that exploitation and selling are not permitted to interfere with it.

"Life Begins" can sell itself and the essence of showmanship will repose in permitting it to do so.

The career of the production, nationally and in every separate community, will be utterly ruined by "smart" endeavors at trick advertising, ballyhoo lobbies, contests and the common devices of exploitation.

The fact is that there is no descriptive word or line, no still or illustration, no device of delineation available which can have other than a negative effect by the creation of pre-conceptions prejudicial to the production.

And lest these precautionary observations be taken to imply something other than they say, let it be emphatically understood that there is no "dynamite," no peril of censorship or adverse criticism from any source whatsoever in this picture. As it is made, it is censorproof and foolproof. It is a picture which can be accepted "sight and unseen" without question for presentation to any audience anywhere.

Any endeavor to set forth here a synopsis of "Life Begins" would but conduce to a most certain misunderstanding and tend to impulses toward precisely the sort of treatment which would impair its box office performance.

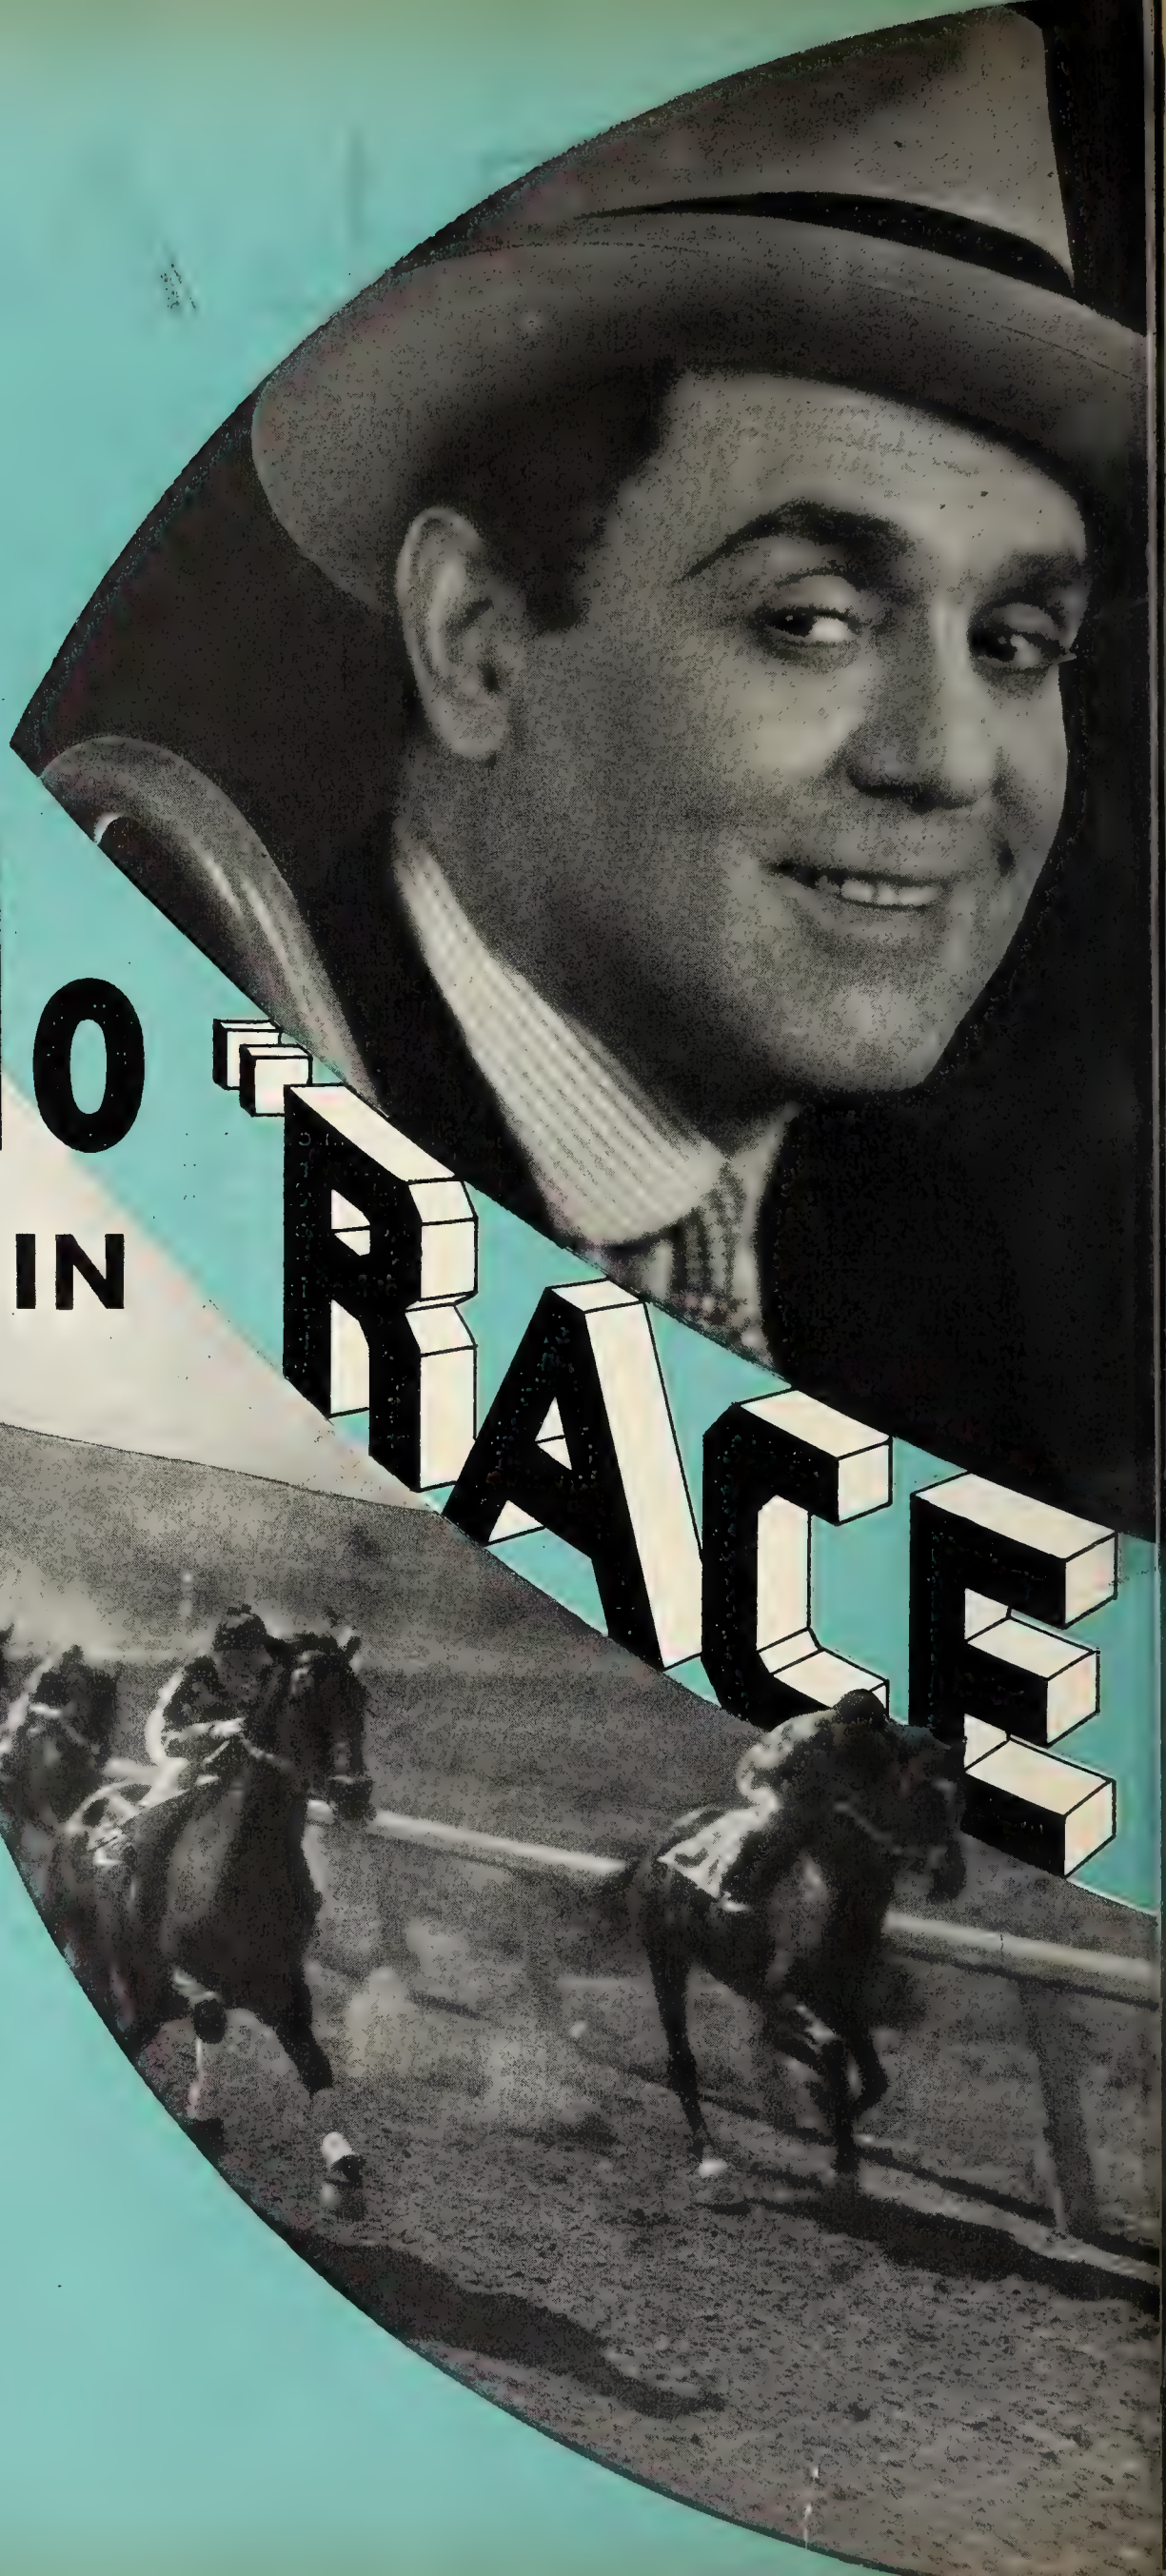
To permit the picture to sell itself it will be found most advantageous to use every possible expedient to give it opportunity to create the word-of-mouth wave upon which it will find success. This means such preview showing as may be found possible by the exhibitor, and most certainly invitations to representative citizens, officials, clubwomen, and other group leaders of importance in each community, for the first performance if previews are not practicable.

All this perchance may sound unnecessarily mysterious—while in truth it is not at all so intended. Every competent showman of experience with the public and the wares of the screen is likely to agree when once he, too, has seen the picture. It will be not only unwise, but positively destructive to permit any person to jump at a conclusion pertaining to this production.

"Life Begins" is a mingling of tender emotion, romance, some glamour, now and then a tearful smile, strong contrasts and climax—and no biology, in the accepted sense of the word, whatever. It is a picture for everyone from the early adolescents upward, but, to be sure, rather beyond juvenile understanding.

To the showman, apart from its remarkable merchandise qualities, "Life Begins" will be found to be a most interesting piece of photodrama construction. It is done with unity and compression to a degree rarely attained in motion picture production. Its narration is precise, sharp. There is never a wavering moment in dialogue or direction. The flow of continuity is as smooth as a swiftly running belt on a finely adjusted, high-speed machine. The screen time is seventy-two minutes, which will be found to pass like a half-hour.

It will likely be the concurring opinion of most showmen that the surrounding program of shorter material and musical numbers must be of quality and devoid of slapstick and innuendo of any sort that can possibly impair the totality of impression created by "Life Begins." Newsreel material and scenic and adventure shorts will be found to present ample contrast and relief. Because of the special character of the settings and areas of action in "Life Begins" it will be well to see that the rest of the pictorial program contains some scenes of large scope, long shots of land or sea.



Newspaper and lobby advertising must be done with great restraint of verbiage. No illustration of any sort is advisable. Quotable local comment will likely be abundant after the first preview or presentation.

Let "Life Begins" sell itself—and let it alone. TERRY RAMSAYE

Drama

Particularly suited to the smaller houses, and not especially adaptable to the larger first-run theatres, this independent production is well handled, has action and suspense. It should be found reasonably entertaining, be satisfactory among the regular run of pictures in the smaller houses.

The title is a fair selling line, but smacks a bit too much of an effort to "make" a title, and is not especially pertinent to the story. It would be well, therefore, not to place too much stress on the name, but rather to concentrate on the theme, in which there are several good selling angles.

Charles Delaney is the lead, with Alberta Vaughn opposite. Rex Lease is the villain of the piece, rather an unusual role for him, while DeWitt Jennings, as the father of Delaney and a hard-boiled detective sergeant, turns in a neat bit of character work. Beryl Mercer plays a role too unimportant to merit attention. Use these names as your audience knows them best, with the assurance that each handles his role well, offers a good performance.

It is a police and gang story, but rather on an intimate scale, involving Jennings, widower who is too careful of son Delaney, about to become a policeman, a ten-cent dance hall and a hostess, Miss Vaughn, and the capture of Lease, bandit and murderer, who is in love with Miss Vaughn. The exhibitor may use the one angle of the triumph of the police and the law, which has perhaps been more or less overdone. Another angle, that of the conflict of father and son over the girl, who, though working in a cheap dancehall, with bad company, is nevertheless herself straight, will probably bring better results.

Delaney stands by the girl despite his father's opposition, and she in turn gathers the information which leads to Lease's arrest and brings about a reconciliation between Delaney and Jennings. The father, son and girl angle is perhaps the best for selling purposes. Unusual is the sequence where father and son put on the gloves when Jennings thinks Delaney should be chastised for dancing with a hostess in a cheap joint.

The film, though fast moving and lively, is perhaps best set in a midweek position. There is nothing especially objectionable in it for juveniles, except where guns and gunplay may be taboo for them.—AARONSON, New York.

The Thirteenth Guest

(Monogram)

Mystery Drama

Monogram's contribution to the current wave of mystery pictures has plenty of that weird element to satisfy the avid thrill fans. The story is constructed in a way that makes suspense and illusion the predominant characteristics. Acting and direction are fully in keeping with the new standards which independent producers have set for themselves.

Although there are a couple of mysterious deaths in the story, as well as several thrills, the picture is definitely out of the "terror" class. The story covers a period of thirteen years and there are thirteen characters in the play, which suggests that the unlucky number 13 should play a big part in your advertising campaign. It deals with a girl who at the first reading of her father's will is a mere child. She is to be the chief beneficiary. Then as her father dies, the scene shifts to thirteen years later. She returns to the house. The table is just as it was left 13 years ago, but the room is cobwebbed and mice have been gnawing at the food remnants. Then there are screams. The girl disappears. Police, dumb and clever, are called in. A lot of comedy is interwoven as they try to find out what it's all about. The supposedly murdered girl reappears, a circumstance in which a clever young detective has a hand and in which a little romance appears. Then, the guests of the meeting 13 years before are reassembled and the police attempt to fathom the mystery of substitution and murder. The climax is gripping, with plenty of haunted house thrills, as it leads up to the finding of a lost safety deposit box and the establishment of the girl in her rightful inheritance.

"The Thirteenth Guest" is much better than average entertainment. Smaller houses in neighborhoods and smaller cities, in which it undoubtedly should enjoy its greatest popularity, need not be afraid to boast of it. Although there are no super-star names in the cast, there are quite a few pretty well known personalities. Yet, in addition to names, there are any number of ways in which interest can be created. The story, written by the same man who wrote "Scarface," has appeared, in both book and newspaper serial form. The title is intriguing and suggests a strong advance teaser campaign in which the air of mystery is maintained all the time. The idea of a contest for the best solution of the mystery is evident. This can be done by effecting a tieup with one of your local papers, printing a brief resume of the story. Similarly, it might be a good idea to have the local police departments write reviews on the picture, from the viewpoint of plausibility.

This picture is suitable for all classes of audiences and merits putting in a little extra work.—MCCARTHY, Hollywood.

Produced by M. H. Hoffman. Directed by Albert Ray. From the story by Armitage Trail. Adapted by Frances Hyland. Photographed by Harry Neuman. Release date, August 10, 1932. Running time, 68 minutes.

Her Strange Desire

(Powers)

Comedy-Drama

Frankly sophisticated in theme, this story of a bored society wife who tries to draw her chauffeur into an affair is presented with a light treatment which makes it less of a drama than drawing room farce, with touches of comedy.

Potential patronage should be informed that this is a smart picturization of the problem of the neglected wife who feels that she must look elsewhere for the romantic thrill of living and then must fight for her honor when her plans go awry.

And there is a surprise to play up in your paper. When Lady Diana finds her house party a grand success for all but herself, she half-interestedly tries to draw out the chauffeur, called to the boudoir to repair a bridge lamp. His urbane maintenance of proper employee demeanor challenges her to summon every charm to win him. He capitulates to the extent of kissing her, but realization that it is but a whim of his employer brings her a tongue-lashing. She pounds on the door and informs her guests that he has forced his way into her room. At the trial the chauffeur refuses to testify against her, but his attorney wins the case. There's something unusual in that turn of the action, familiar, of course, to those who have seen the play but certainly new to the mine-run of picture plots.

There may be some value in identifying the production as a version of the stage play, "Potiphar's Wife." By the same token the names of the stars, Laurence Olivier and Nora Swinburne, may carry some weight, as stage players of standing. But to a picture-only community, neither stage play nor stage stars will be a factor for attendance.

One virtue of the production lies in the fact that it is not long and drawn out; it runs 60 minutes. Action is rather deliberate, however, until the court scene, where it becomes more sprightly. A good bit of directorial management is reflected in a fade-out from Lady Diana at a railing of the stairway in her home to Lady Diana at the railing of the witness stand.

While the production in theme and delineation is sophisticated, it is not violently so, even in the climactic boudoir scene, and should not prompt the lifting of an eyelash, yet it is not for juveniles.—ROVELSTAD, New York.

Released by Powers Pictures. Screen story from the stage play "Potiphar's Wife." Directed by Maurice Elvey. Release date, July 1, 1932. Running time, 60 minutes.

The Impassive Footman

(Associated Radio Pictures)

Melodrama

This will undoubtedly make an appeal to those with a love for the sinister in screen entertainment. There is enough bad nature in two of the characters of this picture to tinge a good half dozen of the stickiest melodramas.

John Marwood (Allan Jeaves) is a bitter, ill-tempered hypochondriac, so little wonder that while he and his young wife (Betty Stockfeld) are on a sea voyage, romance starts between the wife and the sweet young ship's doctor (Owen Nares). Later it transpires that only this young ship's doctor, now a great surgeon, can perform a necessary operation upon Marwood, and having discovered that his wife is in love with the doctor, Marwood, with appropriately fiendish display, dictates a letter to his solicitor, accusing the doctor of his murder, if the operation should prove fatal. This letter is witnessed by Marwood's footman, a figure of mystery whom few hypochondriacs could have tolerated, who is instructed to mail the letter.

The operation is successful, and Marwood announces that he will now take his young wife far enough away from the doctor to make for marital safety. The footman throws off his mask, and locking himself in with his master, proceeds to reveal his identity as the husband of a girl whom Marwood had betrayed during the great war, and then left to die. Alarmed by this confrontation, Marwood suffers the convenient heart attack and is discovered in his study, dead. Exit doctor and wife by the front door, and footman with the incriminating letter in his pocket, by the back!

This is one of the best program pictures turned out of the Radio Ealing studios. It is not of the stuff which supers are made, but it has a good leavening of popular drama. The footman might have been allowed to keep his secret more closely to the last reel, but with all this, development, though a trifle leisurely, is effectively worked out.

Acting is very good throughout, with Curzon an easy winner in his characterization of the vengeful footman. Produced by Basil Dean, the screen story was written from "Sapper" by John Farrow of American experience and additional dialogue was supplied by Harold Dearden. Story conception may not carry us far from the old pre-talker technique, but this one still has its moments.—MOORING, London.

Produced by Associated Radio Pictures. Directed by Basil Dean. Running time, 69 minutes.

Wedding Rehearsal

(London Film)

Comedy

Here is a well made and well acted British picture that is not without its points of appeal to the American public. It will nevertheless need courageous and discriminating showmanship to get it successfully across.

It's a satirical comedy written 'round the devastating snobbery of the British upper ten, the sort of snobbery you can cut with a knife. Delightfully handled by the cast and a skillful director, it burlesques society just sufficiently to disclose the burlesque, and proves that the Englishman is just as ready as his neighbor to laugh at himself. That's where the exhibitor can get away with it, for the characters in this piece all come close enough to the pattern of the stock stage Briton to make them intelligible to the average home-towner.

There's a big snag to get by in the large wads of thick Oxford accent that permeate the piece, while allusions to the blue blood and noble descent of certain characters may also not be understood. On the other hand, the picture illustrates certain aspects of English life that should help to sell it. There is, for instance, the changing of the guard, one of the major pieces of military ceremonial in John Bull's island, photographed authentically in all its pomp and pageantry. Shots of the Houses of Parliament, Westminster Abbey, the Horse Guards' Parade and so on may be similarly mentioned.

Besides this, you have names to blazon on your marquee that have possibly been there before—Roland Young (who does one of the best bits of work he has given the screen), George Grossmith, John Loder (brought from Hollywood specially for this film) and Edmund Breon (with whom your patrons should be glad to renew acquaintance); there is also Director Korda, who has here put a fresh polish on the halo he won with "Reserved for Ladies."

Tell the women to come and see how London society gets married. There's Lady Stokeshire trying to explain to her twin daughters the "facts of life." Now that they're all familiar with newspaper offices, let them see what an English one looks like for a change (and Edmund Breon is the society reporter). There's plenty of scope in "Wedding Rehearsal" for digging out sales talk—and you can exploit it on the title. It wants the scissors, but it's well acted and well directed, and the technical work could not be bettered; in fact, it's worth a chance.—CHARMAN, London.

Produced by London Film Productions. Directed by Alexander Korda. Story by Lajos Biro. Dialogue by Arthur Wimperis. Photography by Leslie Rowson. Running time, 80 minutes.

Love on Wheels

(Gaumont-Gainsborough)

Comedy

Wherever the current series of Jack Hulbert comedies has made an impression this picture should satisfy, although in tempo it may be considered a trifle slower than recent forerunners in the same class. It has plentiful action, of both thick-car and more gentle varieties, comic situations a-plenty, and the imaginative handling that has placed Victor Saville on a pedestal among English directors. There are also several pleasing tunes interpolated at appropriate points, and Hulbert's inimitable leg wagging must not be overlooked.

A young shop assistant (Jack Hulbert) is smitten by a damsel who travels to work every morning on the same bus, and his love urges him to aspire beyond his present position (his job is to take the blame every time a customer complains), and he sacks himself. He crashes in on a rival store and contrives to design a window display that blocks the traffic, and is hastily re-engaged by his former employer at a fabulous salary. He meanwhile has lost sight of the girl, and with the help of the friendly bus conductor does an alcoholic tour of London in search of her. Eventually he finds her working in the same store as himself, after a hectic manhunt that all but wrecks the store.

London's premier department store, Selfridge's, collaborated with the producers so that an excellent background is contrived for the funny fooling of Hulbert, Gordon Harker and Edmund Gwenn, all of whom have previously distinguished themselves in British films. There are also good impressions of the countryside, London streets, and a club for burglars.

This is a film you'll have to play up on the star's name and the brand of humor that he has made his own. You needn't be afraid to stress the comedy situations, and the songs will replay plugging, notably "Hungering for You" and "Shall We Wear Pajamas or the Old-fashioned Nightie?"

The principals are polished in the execution of their work, the direction gives a simple story touches of freshness and originality, and the camera work, lighting and recording add the final touches.—CHARMAN, London.

Produced by Gainsborough Pictures at Islington, London. Directed by Victor Saville. Story by Franz Schultz and Ernst Angel. Dialogue and lyrics by Douglas Furber. Music by Jean Gilbert. Photography by Mutz Greenbaum. Running time, 87 minutes.

Alum and Eve

(MGM)

Fast Moving

Zasu Pitts and Thelma Todd turn the receiving ward of an emergency hospital into a turmoil and there's more laugh-provoking action than usual for a short comedy. Weird gymnastics develop as the internes try to get Miss Pitts from her auto onto the operating table, with legs flying and clothes being torn off. At the end, she is the only one not wound around the framework of the rolling cot. Miss Todd tells the doctors that her friend has been bitten by a dog, gives her a drink of water into which a bottle of powdered alum has been spilled, and there's more wild fun in the contortions of her mouth. The cop is amazed to see one, two, three and then a whole truckload of babies come out of the room into which Miss Pitts was taken. There are laugh-loaded scenes between Miss Pitts and the cop in a dog kennel, as Miss Todd runs all over the hospital in her lingerie. Finally everyone is in the operating room drinking the alum water, with the cop adding a shot of liquid soap for good measure. This is fast moving. Running time, 18 minutes.—MCCARTHY, Hollywood.

Hollywood on Parade

Fan Interest

There is a certain amount of fan interest in this number of the short subject series. Stuart Erwin, master of ceremonies of a sort, introduces Bing Crosby, Burns and Allen, Olsen and Johnson. Each appears briefly, Olsen and Johnson concluding the subject with a sketch on the beach. Paramount has not missed the opportunity to do a bit of advance selling on a coming feature, "The Big Broadcast." If the feature is booked, this short may well precede it by a week or two, to awaken interest in the picture.—Running time, 10 minutes.

The Golf Chump

(RKO Radio)

Enjoyable

This comedy in the "Mr. Average Man" series is above the general run of the group in laugh-provoking quality. Edgar Kennedy, heavy and hysterically irritable, is hounded by wife Florence Lake, mother-in-law Dot Farley and brother-in-law William Eugene. On the exclusive golf course, the group badgers Kennedy until he virtually explodes, all in a fashion highly amusing. The golfer, in particular, should be well entertained. A really funny comedy.—Running time, 20 minutes.

A Seat on the Curb

(Paramount)

Novel

Hugh Cameron and Arthur Aylesworth, the one a street sweeper, the other an iceman, appropriately dressed, meet and have their lunch on the curb, the while discussing, in the most faultless language the latest in art, music and the drama. The dialogue and its rendition is amusing when coming from the two laborers eating garlic, great chunks of bread and the like. Two gentlemen, dressed in evening clothes, stand beside them and discuss night clubs and ball games, much to the disgust of the lunchers. The idea is novel, the execution amusing.—Running time, 7 minutes.

The Candid Camera

Only Fair

In this effort a rather elderly comedy theme is draped with a bit of novelty, resulting in a short only fairly amusing. Franklin Pangborn refuses wife, Dorothy Granger, a new car, then proceeds to get himself into a mess and jail for mashing on the beach. His story by phone to Dorothy is of a heroic rescue, but at a film theatre the wife sees a newsreel shot of her husband being arrested. Of course she gets the car.—Running time, 19 minutes.

Spring Is Here

Novel

There is a certain amount of novelty in this number of the Terry-Toons cartoon series. The animated animals and flowers burst from the earth, as only the animated artist can do it. There is amusement for the youngsters as well as the adults in this number.—Running time 6 minutes.

The Iceman's Ball

(RKO Radio)

Amusing

A bit in the nature of slapstick, with a portion of pie-throwing in the old style, this comedy featuring Clark and McCullough is laughable, highly amusing. The pair are tossed out of the iceman's ball, then take possession of a radio-equipped police car. Enjoyable is the burlesque of the radio patrol policing. A wild party forms the excuse for the slapstick, and a husband-wife complication does its part. A good comedy subject.—Running time, 20 minutes.

Singapore Sue

(Paramount)

Fair

A Chinese boy and girl, Anna Chang, both attractive and possessed of reasonably good voices, render several popular numbers in a cafe setting, with four American sailors as foils for the girl. The number is moderately entertaining.—Running time, 10 minutes.

THEATRE RECEIPTS

The total of theatre receipts from 101 theatres in 20 key cities of the country for the calendar week ended August 6, 1932 reached $1,328,487, an increase of $76,765 over the previous calendar week, ended July 30, when 104 theatres in 20 cities reported an aggregate gross of $1,251,722. During the more recent week one house, the Golden Gate in San Francisco, established a new high record, with "Bring 'Em Back Alive." Seven new low individual house records were recorded. This compares with one new "high" and nine new "lows" during the preceding week.

"Back Alive" $20,000 Hit, Kansas City

KANSAS CITY, July 27.—Despite terrific heat and numerous outdoor attractions, last week proved there is no depression in the picture business if a quality film is offered and backed up with pre-depression exploitation. "Bring 'Em Back Alive," at the RKO Mainstreet, in the face of a 25 per cent reduction in admission prices, drew $20,000, as compared with $12,500, which is considered a normal week for the house.

The management billed the Frank Buck film like a circus and went the limit on exploitation. An RKO Opportunity Revue with 60 local performers and two standard acts rounded out the bill.

Second honors went to "Washington Masquerade" at the Midland, which nabbed $12,500, around $1,000 more than par. The Midland stressed the woman angle in the advertising. Grosses at the two other first runs were below average.

Estimated takings for the week ending July 22 (based on summer averages and exclusive of tax):

Seattle Prices Cut

SEATTLE, July 27.—Admission prices at the Egyptian, suburban house, have been reduced from 35 cents to 25 cents. Loges, formerly 50 cents, are now 35 cents, thus escaping the federal tax. The house is operated by [illegible] Pacific Theatres, Inc., a subsidiary of Fox West Coast.

"IT'S NOTHING FOR THE THEATRE"

STEVE M. FARRAR, Exhibitor, Harrisburg, Ill.

BLAMES CIRCUITS' GIVEAWAY POLICIES

To the Editor of the Herald:

Three clippings from one day's trade papers give one something to think about. One says that producers are going to say that no theatre can show their product for a dime, another says that a bunch of independents and one chain have had a powwow and decided to cut out cutrate prices.

And the third says that our largest chain just finished giving away 52 autos and 35 electric iceboxes.

It would seem to be all wrong for a small show in a cheap neighborhood to show his patrons the "gems" of art the exchanges furnish him, for an admission of ten cents, but it will be okay for his big chain competition to show the same picture for thirty cents and give away an auto or icebox with it.

Show me a bad practice in the exhibition end of this business and I'll show you a chain operated house that started it, and they are continuing to show us new ways to ruin the business of operating a successful house.

There is a lot of hollering going on about the contracts. Not a single contract will stand up in court, they never have and never will, for no piece of paper is a legal contract until it gives both sides who sign it an even break, and no contract for film does that—it's all for the exchange and nothing for the theatre.

I understand that next year all producers will attach the word "HELL" on the end of at least 50 per cent of their releases. That's fine, for the small towns eat these kind of titles up—and the Mothers and Dads eat the exhibitor up as they leave the theatre.

What can we do with a business like this?—Steve M. Farrar, managing director, the Colonial Amusement Company, Harrisburg, Ill.

PREFERS BANNERS AND THREE-SHEETS

To the Editor of the Herald:

Opened my new theatre last week and took the enclosed picture from the front door. (The photo is of the billboards across the street from the theatre, announcing pictures to be shown at the theatre.—Ed.) I believe it carried a story to the public and know that plenty of my customers saw it and commented on the pictures that they wished to see among those listed. Thus they looked over my programs with interest.

The use of banners and three-sheets has proven economical and I favor them instead of the stock 24-sheets, though of course the two must be used together.

I own my boards and do my own bill posting, which also helps some.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D.

STEFFES ON ADMISSION PRICES AND FILM COSTS

Mr. W. A. Steffes, president of the Allied States Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors, who is also an exhibitor in Minneapolis, is exercised on the subject of the current movement among distributors to discourage low admission prices, and in a letter to Motion Picture Herald raises the general question of "What are the different sales policies of the film companies going to be for the coming season?" Mr. Steffes remarks:

I am wondering whether or not the people who are at the head of this industry don't realize that the business is in such chaotic condition that it will not stand for much more foolishness.

One company announces it is not going to sell 10c theatres, another is writing 15c admission prices in their contract, another is fair enough to say they don't know what they are going to do.

Every company that has talked to exhibitors in this territory is asking more money for product than they received last year. This, in spite of the fact that there are hundreds of theatres in this territory that were compelled to close and will never reopen their doors, thereby costing the producers hundreds of thousands of dollars. The theatre owners who are still open are going to buy pictures for less money this year than they did last or they are also going to close.

In reading the various announcements relative to the 10c admission price, I get quite a kick out of it, especially in a territory like Minneapolis where all of the first runs in all of the key cities in the territory are owned and controlled by Paramount Publix or its subsidiary corporations and all one has to do is to go up Hennepin avenue to get a real laugh. Publix themselves are the ones who have brought the admission prices down in this territory and no one else.

For instance their Aster theatre in Minneapolis, which plays first-run pictures from all of the major distributing companies, has an admission price from 10:00 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. of 15c, from 1:30 to closing, 25c. Now I am wondering how the big mogul figures that I, with a suburban theatre who must play those pictures 49 days after the Aster theatre, am going to charge 25c. Our price should be 5c and probably will be before long.

Then we go a little farther up the street and find the Grand theatre, which plays all pictures second run. They happen to be showing this week—Greta Garbo in "As You Desire Me." The admission price for that theatre from 10:00 a.m. to 1:30 in the afternoon is the staggering amount of 15c, from 1:30 to 6:30 is 25c, and don't forget that I still have to play the picture 49 days after that theatre.

And we come up to the Lyric, another first-run Publix theatre that has big electric signs all over the sidewalk, in front of the building, announcing they are showing pictures for 15c from 10:00 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. and 25c from 1:30 to 6:30. I am compelled to wait 49 days after that theatre before I can get a picture.

Then we go to the Hennepin-Orpheum, another circuit house, that plays five acts of vaudeville, first-run pictures and has an admission price of 25c all afternoon and is now running a trailer telling the people to patronize that theatre because they are getting more for their money in that theatre than any other theatre in the city of Minneapolis can afford to give them—that in addition to the first-run pictures they will see vaudeville. I also have to wait 49 days after that theatre before I can get a picture. What do you think I should charge in my theatre?

Then we go down the street a few blocks and there is the big beautiful Palace theatre, with 1,800 seats and probably $18,000 worth of marble in the lobby, that shows pictures to the multitude for the great sum of 10c from 10:00 in the morning until 12:00 at night.

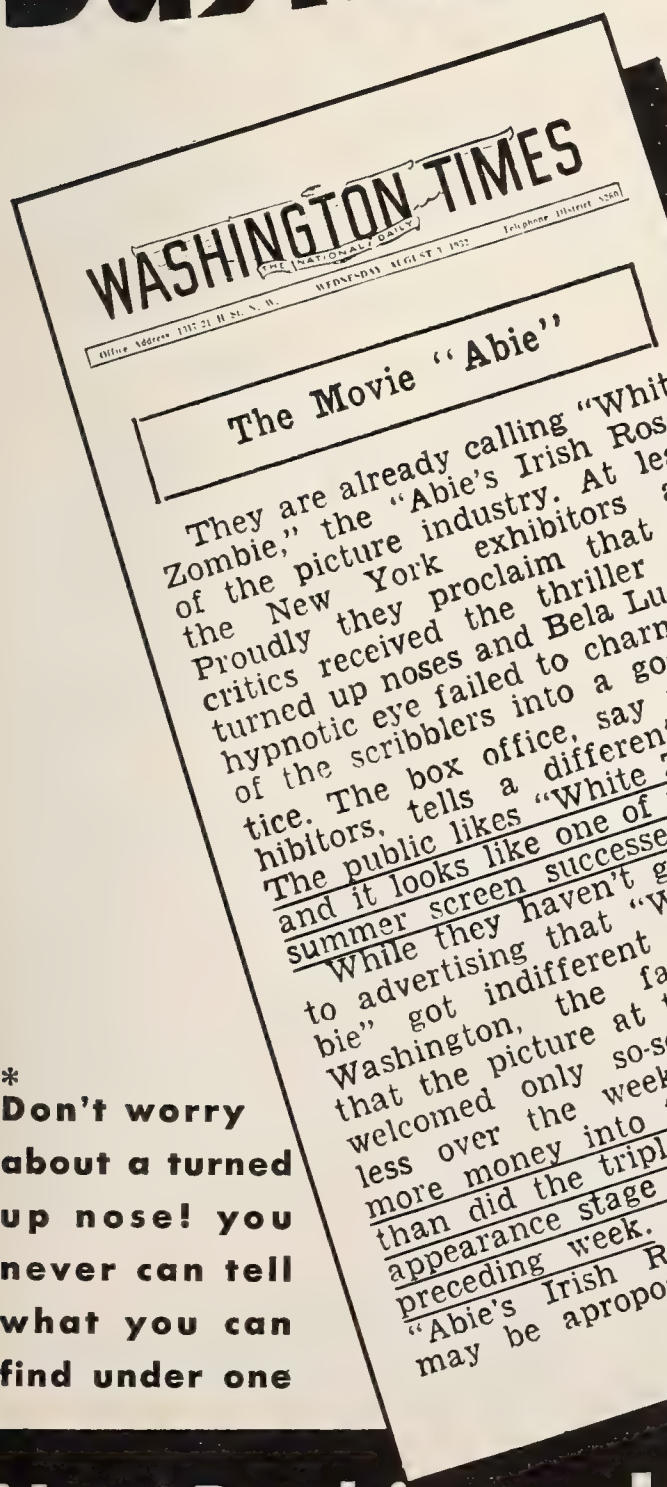
A few weeks back I was instrumental in calling a meeting of the independent theatre owners of Minneapolis in an attempt to stabilize the prices. It was suggested at that meeting that all independent theatres would advance their admission prices providing Publix would discontinue their funny 15c prices in their first-run theatres and would abolish the 10c price in their Palace theatre.

How far do you think we got? We were politely informed by one of the Publix representatives from New York City that they were going to operate their business any way they saw fit.

It does not cost us any more to have 50 law suits than it does to have one, as our attorneys collect by the year, and if the producers don't think we are going to keep these attorneys busy starting law suits against the producing companies every time they attempt to foist upon the theatre owners another unreasonable and unfair condition, they have another guess coming.

Minnesota, North and South Dakota up to the present time have been free of legislation pertaining to the motion picture business but I don't mind telling you that when the next session of the state legislature adjourns in these three states the statute books are going to be full of legislation directed against the motion picture industry.

This exclusive selling idea is as big a bugaboo to the industry as the one the producers had when they thought all that was necessary was to build a beautiful theatre and then ask protection which was most unreasonable over the surrounding territory.



There must be laws in this country that are going to stop some of these funny exclusive selling ideas and minimum admission price clauses. If there are no laws of that kind the producers may rest assured there soon will be. Then perhaps we will again be accused of calling for a cop.—W. A. Steffes, President, Allied States Association.

The Movie "Abie"

They are already calling "White Zombie," the "Abie's Irish Rose" of the picture industry. At least the New York exhibitors are. Proudly they proclaim that the critics received the thriller with turned up noses and Bela Lugosi's hypnotic eye failed to charm any of the scribblers into a good notice. The box office, say the exhibitors, tells a different story. The public likes "White Zombie," and it looks like one of real mid-summer screen successes.

While they haven't got around to advertising that "White Zombie" got indifferent notices in Washington, the fact remains that the picture at the Fox was welcomed only so-so. Nevertheless over the week-end it drew more money into the box office than did the triple star personal appearance stage program of the preceding week. So maybe the "Abie's Irish Rose" comparison may be apropos.

PROBLEM IS: TEN-DOLLAR HEADS ON MILLION-DOLLAR SHOULDERS

Greatest Need of British Pictures Is Creative Brain Force and Thought of Films as Other Than Throwaways: Mooring

by Wm. H. Mooring

London Correspondent
now on visit to America

In England there should be no ten-dollar heads on million-dollar shoulders.

This great danger, through which American motion pictures have passed, still confronts the British film business. What it cost America to place ten-dollar heads on million-dollar shoulders, to say nothing of what it cost to take them off again, only America could tell us.

The history of British motion pictures since 1927, when protective legislation started, proves that there are plenty of ten-dollar heads on this side of the Atlantic. Had there not been, the Gaumont-British Corporation would not today be so free of rivals.

At least a dozen companies started with fully subscribed issues of public money—and ten-dollar heads. Where are they today? Their company-rigging maneuvers put back British progress by years, and made the development of concerns such as British International and Gaumont-British affairs almost for superhumans.

Creative Brain Force Needed

Beyond doubt the greatest need of British films is creative brain force, young men who can think of British films not as national throwaways, but as entertainment for an eager but discerning world public.

The search for the next year on this side of the Atlantic—it appears likely to extend to the other side—will be for million-dollar heads which hitherto have adorned ten-dollar shoulders.

The hope of British pictures lies in the huge new Gaumont-British studios, completely rebuilt and expanded. The pick of British motion picture talent is now housed in the structure at Shepherds Bush. It is for C. M. Woolfe, deputy chairman and joint managing director, and Michael Balcon, his production associate, to substantiate the confidence expressed at the opening by Isadore Ostrer, president, and Lord Lee of Fareham, his colleague on the board, by creating with this enormous machine the reality of "better British pictures."

Committee Reveals Network of Dishonesty

When the Kinematograph Renters Society, largely through the insistence of its American distributor members, decided to press for the appointment of a joint investigation committee to operate with certain members of the Cinematograph Exhibitors Association and to safeguard the distributors in regard to their shares to be accounted under sharing rentals, there was a general hue and cry among the rank and file of British exhibitors.

"Why," asked many, "should we honest British traders be subjected to an inquisition of this kind? We have always met our obligations, and we resent the implications of an investigation committee, whether or not we are allowed to nominate members to sit upon it."

At various times since then—the committee was appointed in face of such opposition as existed—exhibitors have renewed the protest and have generally shown their distaste for the investigation policy pursued. At times it has been stated by exhibitors that the hired investigators were acting in many cases as agents provocateur and by various tricks were seeking to trap unsuspecting theatre owners into minor and technical offenses under their sharing terms arrangements with the distributors.

Great Service Cited

The committee has weathered that storm, and today, although there are still many exhibitors who would prefer that it did not exist, this autocratic little body is found to have rendered scores of exhibitors very great service. By its operations, the investigation committee has succeeded in unearthing and rectifying in a large number of British theatres, certain flaws of organization which were being systematically exploited by dishonest employees.

Financial leakage, in many cases, had reached serious proportions quite apart from the fact that defalcations undiscovered must necessarily gain in momentum.

Thus once again the integral nature of business as between distributor and exhibitor is illustrated. The committee, first set up as a protective machine for the distributors and regarded suspiciously by many exhibitors as an instrument of extortion, has proved to be not only a safeguard for distributors but a creative force in raising the standard of honesty among theatre employees, and in lifting efficiency to a higher level in theatre accountancy systems.

The haphazard method of the old school of theatre men gives way to more modern conceptions of business, and to the extent that this makes for greater precision in catering to the public, it has tonic values which cannot fail to benefit the whole industry.

Apart from all this, there are also the many deplorable cases of attempted fraud on the part of unscrupulous exhibitors, which this committee has exposed. When the show business had not progressed beyond the fairground, and such control as existed was vested largely in charlatans, sharp practice was excused, whether or not it was excusable, as a virtue in showmanship. We have gone past that time, and if any of the charlatans remain it is well they should be found out as a preliminary to being put out of the industry.

Continuous Vaudeville Spreads in London

Continuous variety bills are being operated with considerable success in a number of London theatres, and plans seem to indicate a spread of the vogue for vaudeville.

Hope of Production Placed in Huge New Gaumont-British Studios, Now Housing Pick of Homeland's Talent

Nicholas Schenk is quoted as saying that "There is nothing in this business which good pictures cannot cure." Well, now evidently is the time for good—and better—pictures, for the development at present threatening cinema takings is the swing back to vaudeville. Small theatres cannot afford such shows: larger theatres dedicated to picture policy must increase overheads in order to meet the latest demand, with resultant lowering returns on films actually.

Started at the Windmill theatre, a small former-cinema in central London, "Revudeville" playing from 2 to 11 p.m. did the business. Next the London Pavilion on Piccadilly Circus, for two years operated on pictures exclusively—most recently by British International—turned over to the vaudeville, billing the "Stars of the World" in non-stop 2 p. m. to midnight variety.

Not without point, the Era, British show journal owned by Ostrers of Gaumont-British, and edited by G. A. Atkinson, former film critic of the Daily Express, organized daily tryouts of British variety artists at Grosvenor House during the International Conference and Cinema Exhibition.

Bernhard Sees Conditions on The Road Back

Recent signs of improvement are noted by Joseph Bernhard, Warner executive in charge of theatres, who expresses the belief that conditions generally are on the "road back," in a message to theatre men in the field.

Mr. Bernhard said: "We are now on the road back. Wall street says there is strength behind the upward trend; mill towns tell us factories are opening and labor—long idle—is going back to work.

"Wall street gains new confidence. The laborer sees the smoke start from the factory chimney and his spirit rises with it.

"Starting on the road back, what have we to lean upon until the full effect of these improving times is felt everywhere? Your confidence in us! Our confidence in you! Our confidence in you is founded on respect. You stood and braced yourself, mind and body, against a force of circumstances which might have affected our theatres far more than was felt."

Dear Mr. Quigley:

At a meeting of our Association on Thursday, July 14th, the following resolutions were passed:

RESOLVED: That the members of the Independent Motion Picture Producers Association are very appreciative of what the Quigley publications have done for the Independents, and we pledge ourselves to reciprocate by giving them all the support at our command.

RESOLVED: That a contract be drawn up between the Quigley publications and the Independent Motion Picture Producers Association, so that the lesser advertisers may benefit through the group advertising.

Again thanking you for your interest, and trusting the above action will produce results which are mutually advantageous, we are

Very truly yours,

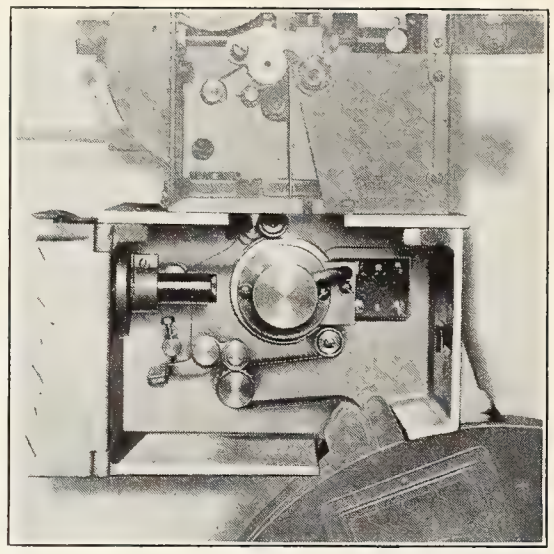
Academy Training Army Officers in Production

The United States government, through the war department, keeps posted on all technical developments in motion picture work by a cooperative program worked out with the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences. Selected army officers are regularly sent to Hollywood to spend time at the various studios gathering the latest knowledge of production.



Captain M. E. Gillette has been ordered to Hollywood this summer, where he will be aided by various production executives who are members of the reserve corps. Officers receiving this instruction will form the nucleus of a Signal Corps unit charged with the production of educational sound pictures to be used in the training of the regular army and the officers' reserve corps.

23 of Metro's 89 Shorts For 1932-33 Are Completed

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer has completed 23 of the 89 short subjects promised for 1932-33 release.

At the Hal Roach studios the eight completed comedies include Laurel and Hardy's "Pack Up Your Troubles," one of the two full-length features they are scheduled to do.

At the MGM studios, where 12 Sport Champions and six Oddities are being produced, eight releases of the first group have been completed and one of the Oddities. The MGM studios likewise have completed production of six Musical Revues, four in Technicolor.

TECHNOLOGICAL

CONCERNING CONDENSER LENSES

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 138.—(A) Does spacing condenser lenses farther apart than is necessary involve light loss? (B) How may the projectionist using a plano-convex condenser satisfy himself that the light beam from the collector lens more than covers the collector lens? (C) In what way is spherical aberration useful in the condenser light beam? (D) What is meant by the real image of the condenser?

From a prominent projectionist in New York City, who prefers that his name be not set forth, comes the following:

"Just glanced over the answers to Question No. 129 of the Bluebook School, and noted your remark concerning lack of knowledge of the Cinephor condenser. Who, aside from their maker, does really know the important details of these lenses? Personally, I believe the lack of knowledge is chargeable to the fact that there are relatively few of them in use. Here is how I figure it:

"These lenses were made for use with high intensity arcs using about 125 amperes of current. Today, due to the advent and wide use of the reflector type lamp, only the very large theatres can afford to, or do, use such high amperage. If they do use high intensity, they may nevertheless be using the old 4.55-inch diameter condenser. It then follows that the percentage of Cinephors in use must be relatively small.

"In your recent measurements of light on the screen of our theatre you found conditions you did not expect to find. At that time we were using the Super-Cinephor condenser. You came to the projection room and made the statement that you believed the light beam was too large in diameter where it met the projection lens, hence did not of course all enter the lens. Yet the company which makes the Cinephor recommends them for use with projection lenses of any focal length.

"From the figures you secured at the screen it was evident there was a decided unevenness of the field of light. This seems to be one of the characteristics of this condenser. [I cannot let that pass unchallenged even for a moment. It is the characteristic of any condenser or condition in which the light does not all enter the projection lens.—F. H. R.] With such unevenness there seems to be discoloration, which cannot be avoided, though some of it can be cleared up by carrying a wide diameter spot at the aperture. [In other words, by wasting still more light and using only the center of the beam.—F. H. R.]

"Another thing: The condensers we are discussing were designed for use with wide film—a relatively huge aperture as compared with what we are actually using. What puzzles me is how one condenser diameter can be used efficiently with apertures of varying dimensions, and at the same time be adapted to work efficiently with projection lenses of widely varying focal lengths, and therefore varying working distances. Surely a condenser of given diameter must work more efficiently under one condition than under one widely different.

"I am anxious to ascertain certain things, as follows: Possibly you can help me. The collector lens is plano-convex, but the curved surface has two curves. That is to say, it has two focal lengths, a short one horizontally and a long one vertically. This lens is usually termed 'cylindrical.' What are the focal lengths of the curved side. The converging lens has two curvatures. What about the focal lengths?

"It is very true that I could do little or nothing to change any condition now existing in these lenses, but a more complete knowledge of their design would aid me in using them at least at their highest point of efficiency. In fact, the true or perfect screen image can only be accomplished by the co-operation of lens designers, carbon engineers, projector and lamp designer, screen manufacturer and the projectionist."

That last is wholly true. However, I do not myself believe much improvement can be made when the projectionist is compelled to use equipment that is designed wrong, and I hold the present set-up, where a wide-diameter condenser, coupled with a short-distance condenser (from conductor to aperture) is used, to be wholly and entirely wrong. In expressing this opinion I am well aware that I am directly opposing the views of certain optical engineers for whom I have high regard.

However, personal friendship or high regard cannot be considered (except to regret the necessity for opposing) where the good of projection is concerned, and I take direct issue on several points. One eminent optical engineer made the following statement to me: "The outer zones of the picture should have less illumination than the central zones because of the fact that if the illumination were even, then there would be too much contrast between the picture and the picture border, which would be hard on the eyes."

With this I disagree, wholly and entirely. In the first place, after viewing literally hundreds of screens, under just about every possible condition of theatre and screen lighting, I have yet to see any case where I could agree that contrast with the border set up any unpleasant effect in the way of eye strain. Nor am I able to imagine that any such effect would be set up by absolute evenness in screen illumination, though, mark you well, I do hold that over-illumination of a screen—a too high illumination of the screen as a whole with relation to its surroundings—may well cause eye strain, and heavy eye strain, too. It is not, in my judgment, a matter of contrast between edges of the picture and the screen border, but a contrast between the whole picture and its surroundings. It is not a matter of contrast as between the edges of the screen and its border, but illumination which, by contrast with the surroundings viewed as a whole, makes of the screen a glare spot.

And now as to the matter of condensers: It is my opinion that the projectionist correspondent is entirely correct in his criticism. If the optical gentlemen insist upon the use of large-diameter condensers located at a short distance from the aperture, it then is up to them to supply some workable method of paralleling the beam between the aperture and the projection lens. It is an absurdity to say that such a hodge-podge of unmatched optical systems, as we now very often find on projectors, is efficient.

What we want and need is, in my opinion, an evenly illuminated screen, and we feel we have the right, at this rather late day, to demand that it be made available by lens makers, either by means of an added lens or otherwise. An unevenly illuminated screen means a poorly balanced screen image.

The Cinephor lens is a most excellent condenser for work for which it is suited, but I hold it to be not suited to all work, as the correspondent has said, except there be a lens interposed between it and the aperture to parallel the beam—also, now that we have changed the shutter location and that thus the heat is reduced by 50 per cent, I personally can see no really important objection to such a lens, except that it would, by absorption and reflection, reduce the light somewhat. But such reduction would constitute a very minor objection compared with the benefits derived. Also, the actual effect would, in most cases, be a substantial saving in light because that now falling outside the lens would be made available to the screen.

Sorry, but I am unable to supply the information asked concerning lens curves. Doubtless the manufacturer would not care to give such information out. I will be glad to hear from other projectionists their views on the subject under discussion.

CONDUCTED BY AN EXHIBITOR FOR EXHIBITORS

MIDSUMMER RAMBLINGS!

JUST TO PROVE THAT life is not always a bowl of cherries, our almost unbroken string of visiting showmen this summer brought one who did not hand out any compliments nor pat us on the back.

I was just trying to figure out whether it was the new grip or my changed stance that was making my rotten golf worse, when there was announced a Mr.——; well, we'll call him Mr. X. He was district manager for the so and so circuit in the state of what-zis. And he just wanted enough of my time to tell me what HE thought of me.

His views do not warrant wasting too much of my space, so I'll just take up enough to say that he called me all kinds of names and said that "guys like me" would be better off out of showbusiness. To all of which I heartily agreed, and further annoyed him by refusing to get mad or even perturbed.

He was a district manager and thought that we were handing the D.M.'s too many undeserved raps. I could merely say that if any of the shoes fit him he was entitled to wear them.

As a true statement of fact, we know more worth-while and real competent D.M.'s than we do the Mr. X kind. What my recent visitor should do is learn how to run a theatre himself, then he will be better qualified to tell his managers something intelligent and to gain their respect.

THE TEMPORARY SUSPENSION of the Ken Long ad series, due to his taking over the editing of RKO's "Now," does not mean that activity in this direction will cease.

Eddie Hitchcock and Dave Davidson are both working out ad series along their own individual lines that will augment the Long articles and ads. When they get a little further advanced we will announce the first date for publication.

We expect that Ken himself will be contributing before the end of August. So between these three representative showmen, all well versed in the art of theatre advertising, the Club pages will offer much that is worth-while in this particular line.

Now if we could only get Vic Gauntlett and Frank Whitbeck to start a series, along with some of those other swell ad men, then we could shout a little louder.

H. B. FRANKLIN, in a recent message to every RKO showman, said, ". . . Fortify yourself with tried and proven campaigns . . . and then enhance them with your own personality and fighting spirit. . . ."

That's swell. "H. B." again makes himself a great Round Table Club booster with that statement. He knows that the most authentic source for securing tried and proven campaigns is in this department. And he also knows that we have been shouting those same words for over four years.

Stop wasting time trying to do the almost-impossible feat of creating brand new ideas. There are too many tried, proven and successful campaigns on these pages week in and week out. Take the best of those campaigns that fit into your schedule of pictures and build them up to suit your particular situation, injecting some original twist of your own to make it still better.

Local managers can do more to stimulate conditions in their own towns than any other individual. They should be the leaders in all movements to increase business or sponsor merchandise-selling events. Showmanship is needed and recognized in this connection. Get busy NOW.

WATCH THOSE BOOKINGS more closely. We've been noting the programs coming into Club headquarters and believe me if I was a patron of some of those theatres I'd be doggoned sore at the way some of the shows are being assembled.

No excuse for poor bookings. Does't matter whether you or someone else is booking the house. You're the manager and should insist on well rounded-out programs and good balanced entertainment.

After the show is on the screen it is far too late to make improvements or changes. The word soon gets around town that your show is punk. That's the pay-off for you. If you are on your toes you will check up on the reviews of every subject, feature or short, so that you are reasonably sure that your patrons will see a darned good show.

COSTLESS EXPLOITATION is becoming so popular that we are wondering whether most theatres will ever go back to paying for what they find they can get for nothing.

We are still waiting for someone to trump Al Cox's eight stage weddings in one week. What-a-man he is for promoting! And not a dime did it cose the theatre.

DICK KIRSCHBAUM'S LOBBY LAFFS!

PAUL GLASE MADE A BIG HIT WITH FILM OF LOCAL INTEREST

It took the dedication of a new highway built by the unemployed atop a mountain to make Paul Glase, manager of the State Theatre, down in Reading, Pa., to drag out his old silent camera, but drag it out he did, and a newspaper tear-sheet before us is plenty evidence that he was well repaid for his work.

The front page of the paper carried a story headed "Capitol to See Skyline Highway." The bank of the head read: "Legislators Invited to Witness Film of Reading's Unemployed Project." The story went on to describe the dedication exercises and taking of the pictures and stated that the pictures would be shown to those higher up in state politics as a means of impressing authorities with the importance of continuing the project.

In other words, good will for the theatre and a hand of thanks from city and county officials for the showing of the film. As Glase observes, his old silent movie camera may again start grinding out shots of local happenings as of yore. And why not? In this case the old non-sync was also dusted off to provide the music and the local portion of the show was received by the audience with genuine interest.

VAUDEVILLE THEATRES!

Managers booking their acts direct should avail themselves of the service offered by the Stage Attractions Department of Motion Picture Herald.

This department, besides carrying reviews of different types of acts playing in and around New York City, can furnish you with full information about any act you are interested in booking. Such as a description of the act, type of material and agent through whom you can book direct.

It would also be a good idea if you filed act reviews as a ready reference guide which will eventually give you, at your finger tips, a complete file of all acts together with everything you ought to know about them.

Turn to the Stage Attractions Section and keep posted on what is going on in the world of "flesh."

HERE'S A GOOD GAG FROM SMITHIES FOR SCHOOL OR COLLEGE

Here's a gag from Ernie Smithies, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Kingston, Ontario, Canada, that can be used to perfection in a college or high school town. Since the first school term is but a few weeks away, it should be a most timely offering.

It all came about during a discussion he had three years ago with some senior cadets of a military school relative to information on current and coming attractions at the theatre. The cadets claimed it was impossible to secure information on what was playing on their days off, since the city was "out of bounds" and no newspapers were taken. Pay telephones were the only means they had of communication with the theatre and a cadet's allowance does not justify such an extravagance.

Today, as the result of a suggestion made by Smithies, it is the duty of all recruits, or first term cadets, to keep their seniors informed on current attractions at both theatres in town, having at hand all data concerning the picture, names of stars and names of all women players. Failure to provide this information penalizes the recruit his afternoon off and the carrying out of such duties as may be assigned by the senior.

The above policy was suggested three years ago and is still in effect today. In all probability it will be continued during the years to come. The idea should appeal to all Club members similarly situated and we're passing it along with Smithies' compliments.

MANAGER OF LUCAS THEATRE, SAVANNAH, STAGED GOOD BALLY

The broad thoroughfares of Savannah, Ga., echoed a short time ago with an attention-getting bally staged in connection with "Union Depot" by the manager of the Lucas Theatre.

Two boys carried the large banner (see photo), which read: "We are going to the Lucas Theatre to see 'Union Depot'—A Wonderful Picture." Two men dressed as Red Caps paraded about six feet in front of the kids, carrying satchels to represent their luggage. In back of them marched a boys' band with huge bass drums and wind instruments.

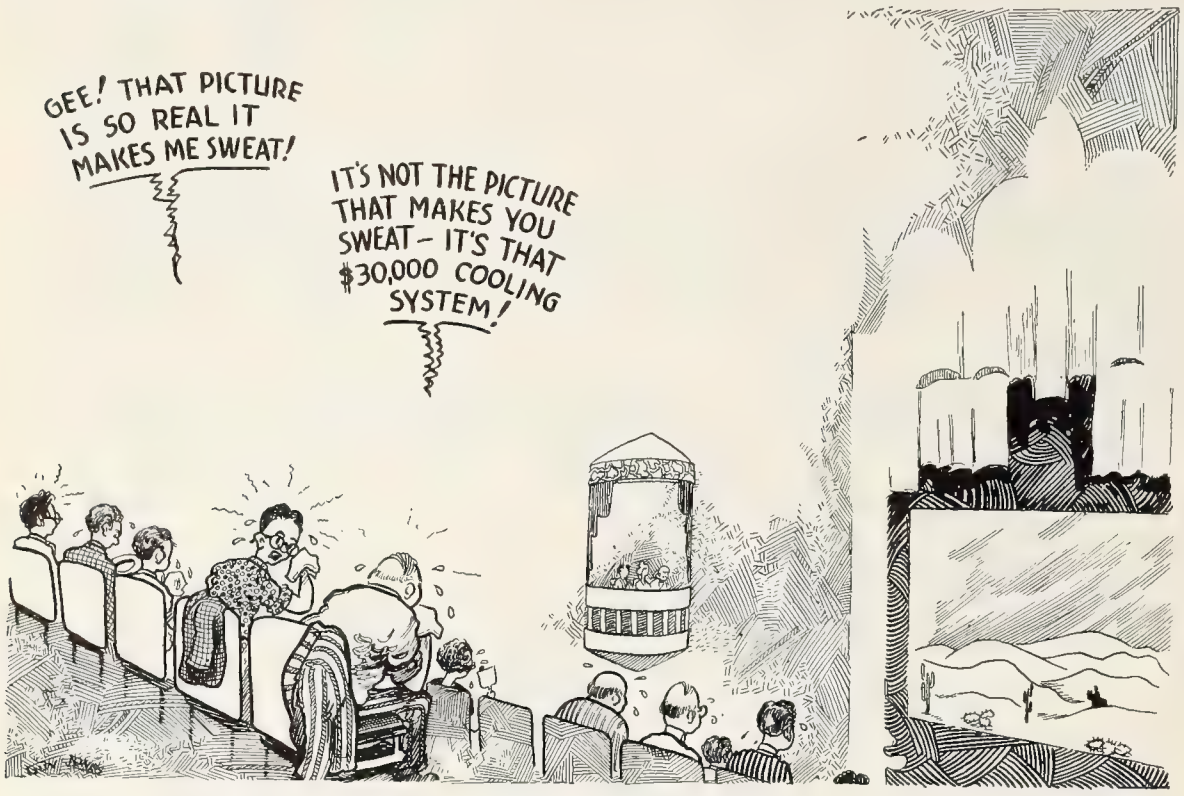
We're sorry that we cannot credit the manager for the above mentioned bally, but his name was not attached to the data we have at hand. However, we are given to understand that he had the town all "het-up" when he pulled the stunt and that satisfactory trade resulted from the move.



Here they are — trailers that pack a punch — a new screen sensation designed with one purpose: to SELL your patrons! See them shoot across your screen. THEN watch your box-office!

KEEPING UP WITH THE TIMES!

Are You Still Trying to Kid the Public?

MUTNICK OBTAINED EXCELLENT RESULTS FROM A PRESS BOOK

Comment from Nat Mutnick, manager of the Castle Theatre, Irvington, N. J., on the subject of Columbia's press sheet on "Shopworn" is indicative of the change of attitude most managers have undergone relative to selling aid which at one time came in for considerable adverse criticism. Through a suggestion made on this particular sheet, advises Mutnick, he was enabled to put across a corking tie-up with the Kleenex Company of New York and Boston.

This company furnished him with 1,000 salable packages of their product for giveaway on the first night the picture was shown. The firm also contributed a trailer and set up the attractive lobby display illustrated on this page. This, together with window displays in neighboring drug stores, helped Mutnick draw about 800 to the theatre that evening.

So, as this Round Table member suggests, it pays to comb through all press sheets these days and seize upon any selling idea that will tie-in with a nationally advertised product. The men who are turning out selling campaigns for the several producing companies are keyed to the sharply competitive selling situation that exists and are forever on the lookout for tie-ups which will help sell a picture. Give them due consideration and consequently turn a deal which will be reflected in an increase of box office trade.

Buck Jones Club Event!

Fully 20,000 young Buck Jones Rangers, members of an organization sponsored by Columbia Pictures Corp., are expected to assemble at a rodeo to be held in Central Park, August 10, when the ceremonies of banding together all Buck Jones Clubs in the Metropolitan district will be observed. Prominent screen and radio stars will help entertain the gathering. Later on in August the entire group will go to Luna Park,

DAVIS HONORED!

Evans B. Davis, manager of the Strand Theatre, Dolgeville, N. Y., received a surprise a short time ago when he attended a meeting of the "Exchange Club," only business organization in his city. He was nominated for president of the club and elected.

All of which points out what can happen to a theatre manager who enters a strange town and makes an effort to help his fellow merchants build for better business. Ever since Davis went to Dolgeville he has taken an interest in public affairs, cooperating with others at every opportunity. That he is held in high esteem is evidenced by being elected head of the business men's club.

NOTHING WRONG WITH MUSSELMAN'S STUNT; IT LOOKS GOOD TO US

"What's wrong with my handbill and monthly calendar?" asks Ray W. Musselman, manager of the Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Neb., and as far as we can see there's nothing the matter with either. On the contrary, both appear to be excellent pieces of work, and proof that this Club member is on the job.

During the summer season the Utility Commission in his town generally shuts down on the use of water so Musselman took advantage of the expected move by getting out a hand bill which read: "Notice to Water Users—Owing to the extremely dry weather it will be necessary for all parties using water for lawn or garden to shut off the water at 8 P. M., June 21, in order to see 'Reducing' at the Princess Theatre. Signed, Marie Dressler." Ray tells us that the bill may have peeved a number of folk but it made them talk, and that's what counts.

As far as his calendar is concerned, it appears to be a good example of the monthly calendar "art." Copy is not too crowded and there's room here and there for a little squib on this order: "Why stay at home and battle bugs and heat when you can enjoy a good show in cool comfort at this theatre." Last but not by any means least, is a ruled-off portion at the bottom about 3½ inches deep. Three sections carry five ads each from local merchants, a total of fifteen, which, incidentally, pays publishing cost. Yes, it's a good calendar, don't you think?

The next time Ray writes maybe he'll include some more news about what he's doing to step-up trade for his house. So we'll sign off until then and wish him the usual lots of luck.

ROUND TABLE BIOGRAPHIES

The highly important matter of providing food for an empty stomach prompted Robert C. Pearson to enter showbusiness, but for all the distressing circumstances at that time the move turned out to be one thoroughly to his liking. Ask him today if he would again choose this business for a career and he would answer in the affirmative.

Robert Pearson

Pearson was born in Stockholm, Sweden, in the year 1905, and is a graduate of a high school in that city. He later took a half-year at Heidelberg, Germany, and two years at Harvard, U. S. A.

He began his theatre career as an usher at the Imperial Theatre, San Francisco, Calif., and from that time on went consistently up the ladder to his present managerial post at the New American Theatre, San Jose, Calif. He has served with Publix and the National Theatre Syndicate in various capacities, acting as manager, advertising manager and exploitation manager.

He is a member of the Exchange Club, Olympic Club, Advertising Club and the San Jose Golf Club. And he's still a single man.

NOVEL ADS FEATURED GUITERMAN'S EFFORTS ON "FREAK" PICTURE

The much discussed picture "Freaks" was advertised in a novel way by Robert S. Guiterman, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Manitowoc, Wis.

With utter frankness he told his public through the newspapers that it was "With Shame Our Screen Unfolds the Worst Picture Ever Made—Don't See It—And Be Assured You Have Missed Nothing—You'd Be Stunned! You'd Be Terrified! In Watching These Abnormal People and the Lives They Lead," etc. The ad reproduced on this page will show balance of copy. Teaser ads in single column such as "Can a Pinhead Think?" "Can a Full Grown Woman Truly Love a Midget?" "Can the Alligator Man Roll a Cigarette With His Lips?" were run several days before opening.

Most of our members will recall that a certain "horror" picture was strongly sold in the first runs through more or less the same sort of advertising used by Guiterman. It did the work in great shape then and it is quite possible that the public will react the same way again. However, the negative note in advertising is something to experiment with.

TEASER POSTER HAD REETH'S PUBLIC IN DARK ABOUT PICTURE

Making new use of an old gag, Fred Reeths, Jr., manager of the Sheboygan Theatre in Sheboygan, Wis., put over a "teaser" campaign on "Two Seconds" to marvelous box-office results.

Fred's first move was to spot around town a large card about 24 inches by 12 inches carrying nothing on it but scarehead letters, black on white, "TWO SECONDS." Two-thirds of the card was left blank.

Three days later, Fred sniped the bottom of the scare head with a red on yellow strip reading, "The Time It Takes for a Woman to Ruin a Man's Entire Life!"

Then, as the finishing touch to the card, two days later he pasted on his preview announcement and the cast. Comment on the gag was tremendous and Fred is going to use it again, particularly so since he found out that all of the cards he placed around town "stayed put."

Oke, Fred; such showmanship must be deserved. You know there has been lots of good stuff coming out of Sheboygan in the past and for that reason we expect some more from you in the future.

TED EMERSON PAYS STRICT ATTENTION TO SHORT FEATURES

Although word frem Ted Emerson, manager of the Iowa Theatre, Cedar Rapids, arrived too late for acknowledgment in the short subject section which appeared in this department several weeks ago, it seems never unseasonable to pass along a boost for the so-called step children of the screen and, at the same time, let Emerson know that we are appreciative of his approval of a Club policy.

He, too, believes that the importance of featuring "the whole bill" cannot be too strongly impressed on readers of this department. As he points out, it takes all kinds of folk to make up this world. Everyone doesn't like a Chevalier or Garbo and, very often, a Laurel-Hardy, a Mickey Mouse, a newsreel, a Screen Souvenir, or some other short, will be the means of pulling in some customer who would otherwise be lost. Some people like dancing, others like music, while some go in for just plain old belly laughs; hence, a well rounded out bill stands more chance of capturing average taste than one limited to the well known and hackneyed line, "Two Big Features."

Newspaper ads, theatre front, lobby, screen and other advertising mediums are employed by Emerson to plug his short features. One of his ads, herewith reproduced, is evidence that the little fellows are not being overlooked at the Iowa. You can see at a glance that space was almost equally divided between features and shorts. Also, like many other members of this Club, he regularly combs through his newsreels, ever on the alert for some outstanding shot that will rate special mention.

We are only too glad to mention Club members' views on this interesting subject, special section or not, and particularly so since there is no pronounced trend these days among exhibitors to find some solution of the double feature problem. Some are in a position to make up a diversified program; others are not. We will be glad to have opinions of other Round Tablers on this subject.

It is apparent that Emerson is a good student of human nature and has taken pains to observe reaction among his patrons to different type bills. His methods of advertising are, accordingly, based on what he truly believes will most appeal to readers.

DISPLAYS MADE BY KUEHN HELPED HIM PUT OVER PICTURE

Below are a couple of displays fashioned a short time ago by Rudy Kuehn, manager of the RKO Capitol and State Theatres, Union City, N. J., both of which materially helped sell pictures.

The one made for "One Hour With You" was animated to the extent that the eyes blinked and the clock hands moved, a flasher and a motor providing the means of animation. The portion of the photo on the left shows the displays made for "Arsene Lupin" and "Feet First."

We also note that Kuehn has been effecting some tie-ups with candy manufacturers, a number of small envelopes at hand testifying to deals made with "Life Savers" and "Black Crows." The candy samples worked most appropriately with "Delicious," while the name Life Savers tied in nicely with "Suicide Fleet."

Kuehn's displays are interesting and we hope he'll find it convenient to send the Club more evidence of what he and his assistants are doing over in Union City.

Claude Morris Promoted

Claude Morris, exploitation man in Kansas City for M-G-M, has been appointed exploitation director for the middle western states and is at present in charge of campaigns on "Grand Hotel."

NO DUES OR FEES!

We are again prompted to broadcast the fact that there are no initiation fees, dues or charges of any kind in conjunction with your membership in the Round Table Club.

You are likewise under no obligation of any kind other than to keep us posted on your activities and to let us be of whatever help we can to you and your theatre.

NEWSPAPER TIE-UPS PROVE VALUABLE TO LASHLEY'S SELLING

The South does more than serve as an inspiration for mammy songs. This you will realize—or perhaps you know already—when you see some of the consistently good work being turned out by the southern showmen, and among them H. T. Lashley, city manager for Publix in Greenville, S. C.

Lashley maps out a campaign for every picture playing his houses, and he has yet to record a loser. There is no reason why he should, since he puts in a marvelous amount of work on them. Take the one on "Destry Rides Again," for example.

Here he wanted not only to play the kids on the film, but to bring in the grownups as well. Constant alertness has taught him that despite what they say, grownups enjoy westerns as much as the kids. He plugged "Tom Mix TALKS" in every way possible.

Next, he used a special trailer on the Carolina screen. This was followed by a unique front at the Rivoli, and an atmospheric display consisting of saddles, bridles, etc., in the lobby of the theatre. In addition to this, he tied-up with the boys' department of a local store and arranged to give away an autographed photo of the Western star to the first 200 boys visiting the juvenile section. The department store ran an ad in the paper plugging the picture and announcing a treat.

A tie-up with the newspaper was also arranged whereby children's names were scattered through the classified ads, and the kids informed that if they found their names in the ads they could have tickets to see the picture.

This stunt was one that you, too, might work to good results. Lashley uses it often, not only with the kids, but grownups as well. The adults' names are culled from the subscription list and strewn throughout the ads. The newspaper gives Lashley a free ad on this each week. Why not try it?

But to continue the story of Lashley's Western invasion. Signs were placed on the backs of all newspaper sales boys during the run of the picture. The boys were later invited to attend the film, and a reporter was assigned to cover the story, thus giving Lashley another break on good-will and free publicity.

Talking about covering stories reminds us that Lashley never misses an opportunity to keep the theatre in print. On Mother's Day, for instance, he invited the aged inmates of the county home to attend the show. He received a great story on it! But that wasn't what made him so happy. No, he did more than just invite the men and women to his special show. He also promoted handkerchiefs for the ladies and socks for the men; he obtained free transportation to and from the theatre; he had Boy Scouts guide the old folk, and, to top off the proceedings, he presented each guest, upon leaving, with a potted plant from the local florist.

Stunts like these not only keep the job interesting for the showman, but also prove to the town that they have a wide awake man at the local entertainment palaces.

And just one more, before we strike our last period. Lashley has a select mailing list of a thousand people who usually ask when certain pictures are playing. Whenever this particular type of film hove into view he has his cashier write out a postcard which is send to the prospective patrons. It is a very effective medium, says Lashley, and he passes it along to his fellow showmen, so that if they have a spot for it they can use it, too.

Thanks, "H. T.," and here's hoping you break a few box-office records during the summer.

PERSONALITIES

LIVINGSTON LANNING has succeeded Russell Leddy as manager of the Wisconsin Theatre, Fox-Midwesco key house in Milwaukee, Wis., Leddy having been transferred to the Uptown, local neighborhood house managed for several years by Round Tabler Louis Orlove. Lanning was a former manager of the Mastbaum Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa.

FRANK BOUCHER, well known manager of the Capitol Theatre, Winchester, Va., sends us a card from Havana, Cuba, where he has been taking a few days rest. We say "rest," but his message states that he "has a lot of new ideas," so we're forced to think that his mind has been on showbusiness. Or, perhaps Havana inspired them. There are places down there that could do just that.

PAUL SHORT, former manager of the Melba Theatre, Dallas, Texas, has taken Jim Lander's place at the Old Mill Theatre, Dallas. Most of the Melba staff have been shifted to the old Mill until the former reopens in the Fall.

S. L. SEGELBAUM, with Fox-Midwesco in Milwaukee for the past three years, has been appointed manager of the Palace Theatre, local first run house, succeeding William Watson, resigned.

C. A. REHM, operator of the Ro-Nile Theatre, Dallas, Texas, recently closed his house.

HERB GOLDBERG, manager of the Fox-Isis Theatre, Kansas City, has been receiving congratulations on his marriage to Miss Mildred Greenbaum, a culmination of a college romance begun when both attended the University of Missouri several years ago.

LOU HOLLEB, manager of the RKO Family Theatre, Cincinnati, has switched jobs with Joe Alexander, manager of the RKO Majestic Theatre, Columbus, Ohio. Both men formerly occupied these positions.

TOM O. DAVIS, manager of the RKO Palace Theatre, Columbus, Ohio, has been promoted to the post of city manager. He was formerly in charge of the Andalus Theatre, a Cincinnati neighborhood house.

VICTOR BONETTA, art director for Publix-Dubinsky, Kansas City, recently airplaned to New York City to wed Miss Audrey La Rue. The couple are spending their honeymoon in Europe.

L. K. BRIN, operator of the Majestic and Garden Theatres, Milwaukee, Wis., has also taken over management of the Rex and Ironwood Theatres at Ironwood, Mich., houses formerly controlled by A. J. Picker, of the Ironwood Amusement Co.

DAVE WESHNER, Warner theatre executive, recently made a survey of company houses in Albany, Utica and Syracuse, N. Y.

ROBERT "SMILIN' BOB" LEWIS, formerly at the Fox-Paradise Theatre, West Allis, Wis., is in charge of the Fox Theatre, Marinette, Wis.

GEORGE KEMBLE, formerly assistant manager with Perry Spencer at the Lindy Theatre, Philadelphia, is acting as assistant manager at the Benn Theatre in Philly.

E. VAN HYNING, operator of the Kelley Theatre, Iola, Kas., and president of the M. P. T. O. of Kansas and Missouri, is a candidate for the Republican nomination for State Representative. Van Hyning also holds down the job of president of the Iola Chamber of Commerce.

OLIVER WILLIAMS, former operator of the Rialto Theatre, Monett, Mo., is at the helm of the Gillioz Theatre, Monett.

JACK McMANUS, manager of Loew's Midland Theatre, Kansas City, recently caused quite a sensation with a street bally of "savages" when exploiting "Blonde Captive."

BRECK FAGIN, manager of the Fox-Plaza Theatre, Kansas City, is now running a stage show with Danny O'Shea as M. C. It is reported that business has improved as the result of the new attraction.

F. A. REINHARDT, who recently formed the Broadway Theatre Corp., Cleveland, Ohio, has reopened the Fountain Theatre in that city.

W. S. CLARK has purchased Mrs. N. S. Goodnight's interest in the Star Theatre, Warrensurg, Mo., for the reported consideration of $35,000.

OTIS BOWERS, formerly associated with the Grand Theatre, Regina, Sask., Canada, is temporarily filling in as assistant at Metropolitan Theatre in Regina.

ALLIE KRAUS of Clarksville, Ark., has leased the local Dunlap Theatre from Malco Theatres Company and will also manage the house. Former manager, Thomas Simmons, has been transferred to the Malco home office.

DOYLE MOWRY has taken over the management of the Colonial Theatre, Alma, Kas.

MAURY FOLADARE has replaced H. B. Sobottka as manager of the Fox-Liberty Theatre, Wenatchee, Wash., the latter having resigned to take the helm of the Orpheum Theatre, Seattle.

OTTO MEISTER, pioneer exhibitor of Milwaukee, and famous for his poster fronts on westerns that show at the Whitehouse Theatre, recently opened up a Penny Arcade next door to his house, the city's first venture of this kind since '98.

JOHN HAMRICK, well known theatre operator in Seattle and head of the Hamrick chain there, recently announced the closing of his Blue Mouse Theatre, a 1,000 seater in the downtown district. Inability to secure rentals on a profitable basis is the alleged reason for closing the house. There is a possibility, however, that it may reopen as a second run.

LOUIS ORLOVE, for many years manager of the Uptown Theatre, and a factor in neighborhood activities, has been transferred to the Tivoli, another Fox suburban house. We know that all the youngsters in the vicinity of his theatre and the North Avenue Advancement Association will miss the familiar figure of Orlove.

A. H. R. MILLER has been appointed manager of the Fox-Modjeska Theatre, Milwaukee, succeeding H. E. Laurie, who has taken E. W. Van Norman's place as manager of the Garfield Theatre, another local Fox-Midwesco house.

FRANK McCABE, manager of the Criterion and Capitol Theatres, Oklahoma City, is back on the job again after weathering an attack of the flu.

RUSSELL TERHUNE, former manager of the Strand Theatre, a Publix house in Plainfield, N. J., has been transferred to the Strand Theatre in Long Branch, N. J. He is due back in Plainfield in the Fall.

A. V. WADE is rebuilding the Majestic Theatre, a house in Gainesville, Tex., recently destroyed by fire.

CHARLES CARROLL, manager of the Audubon Theatre, New York City, and Bill Corum, manager of the Academy Theatre, both local Fox houses, have switched jobs.

HAL DAIGLER has assumed his duties as general manager of John Hamrick's chain of theatres in Seattle, Wash.

NEIGHBORHOOD SELLING

Milo DeHaven Achieving Fine Results Against Heavy Odds In Upper-New York Theatre!

NEW YORK CITY, perhaps, presents to showmen the hardest problem in the world, namely, how to grab off tie-ups for the neighborhood houses, especially when you have to explain to local merchants the meaning of the word "exploitation" and its co-operative and helpful value.

Handling a big house at the cross-roads of the world is one thing. Newspapers then want to play ball with you. A showman caters to hundreds of thousands weekly. Why shouldn't merchants be glad, on Broadway, to assist in any way possible?

But what of the man who is in a neighborhood which, if it isn't dotted with theatres competing fiercely, is composed of a collection of small stores? A showman then must prove his worth, because he has to go out and start the ball rolling just by virtue of sales talk.

Off the Main Streets!

That is exactly what Milo De Haven did and is doing at the Burke Theatre in White Plains, N. Y. The Burke is not located in a White Way spot. It offers no conveniences for tie-ups that are natural. Milo makes it his business to see that his tie-ups are made "naturals," and he would beard a lion in its den to accomplish his purpose.

The true showman has in mind always this one thought: "My theatre is a good one, and I cater to the public; therefore, as a business man my contemporaries should be glad to work with me, as we are all out to progress."

Milo has followed this credo wherever he worked. And at the Burke he has stuck to it! In face of obstacles that beset every neighborhood showman, he hurdled them. And here are a few of the jumps he took.

The neighborhood had no business men's association. The showman realized the value of such an organization and the subsequent aid it would be to his theatre. He started one! And in so doing aroused the admiration of a local paper, which gave him and the theatre a great break.

Bathing Beauty Contest!

Another activity was his bathing beauty contest, put on in a showmanlike manner, and in a way that spelt assured success for a box-office whose barometer was steadily rising under the stimulating treatment it was receiving.

Girls flocked to the theatre to enter the show and compete for the coveted title "Miss Bronx" and a later opportunity to enter the New York State National Pageant. The affair was a huge success, with many of the marvelous tie-ups that fall in line on such a gag and that are known to showmen.

Milo promoted a bridge outfit and five other enticing gifts which he offered to fortunate patrons at the theatre on nights when it looked as though the picture would not hold up, and an additional jolt of showmanship would be necessary to keep the cobwebs on the red ink bottle.

He concentrated on his house organ and cooling idea, keeping them all in green. His comments on the pictures conveyed that intimate touch patrons love and which sells them on the attractions.

Little tricks were used on his heralds, such as a letter being placed on each one, and a free ticket offered to kids or grown-ups who put together heralds spelling out the title of the picture.

Kids, too, came in for a play from De Haven, who well realizes the value of kiddie business, and he promoted a model automobile roadster from a nationally known manufacturer and gave it away. The kids all sported buttons plugging the car. And talked plenty about the theatre!

Special attractions in the form of headline acts and guest stars are often offered at the house. On these occasions, Milo hustles about and sees that the acts come in for their full share of publicity.

All in all, considering his lobby displays, his house organs, his spotless theatre, and his business contacts, we might even award a cup to Milo for the way he is working to further show business and trying to help his fellow showmen by passing along his good work.

Proved It Could Be Done!

We are very glad to report activities such as occur in White Plains, as the work is reasonably sure to prove to other showmen who may be a bit doubtful about broaching what at first appear to be belligerent and unreceptive merchants, that contacts can be made by a good showman any place.

Window cards, we find, are very helpful for establishing first contacts, particularly so if they give the merchant a break by tying in his product. He might even go half way with you on the price right at the start. It doesn't take long, usually, before they begin to realize the value of co-operation.

Then, the showman has flowers for his lobby; presents to give away; special nights through co-operation with the dealers, free advertising and many other things that keep a house humming on all 16 cylinders.

And again we repeat, Milo, you deserve a cup. But, remember, this is a depression. And we can't afford one much as we'd like to. But how about coming into Club headquarters on a surprise visit and have a cuppla cups coffee with us?

DIFFERENT SLANT ON COUNTRY STORE NITE GOOD GAG, SAYS BIXBY

Country Store night as handled by Fred L. Bixby, manager of the Kameo Theatre, Pittsfield, Mass., has made a big hit with the patrons of his house and proven a pleasing variation from the old time method of presentation.

Bixby uses a character by name of "Uncle Eph" and has him planted in the audience while giving a short M. C. on the stage about "the old farmer who is back stage waiting to come out." Naturally everyone takes it for granted that "Eph" is behind the curtain, and when he appears in the aisle, talking as he walks to the stage, the audience gets quite a kick from the surprise. He carries a suit case and places it to one side when reaching the stage.

The give-aways are made in the usual fashion except that "Eph" wisecracks and keeps the audience in the best of spirits throughout the procedure. He also has the basket brought to him when a patron raises a hand to claim the award. When all baskets have been given out "Eph" always has some surprises in his suit case for someone in the house. Sometimes it's a pie from "Aunt Sarah," or a few bottles of milk "from the cows on the farm." Whatever it is the gag is sure to get a good laugh and leave the audience in a happy frame of mind.

Running his Country Store as described above has resulted in an increase in attendance each week for Bixby and so he's passing the idea along for other Club members to try out. We'll be interested to hear how others fare with this stunt.

BOOK COVERS FOR THE KIDDIES!

Schools will reopen within the next three or four weeks. It should therefore behoove exhibitors to lay some plans whereby they may glean some benefit from the short-lived enthusiasm of the kids which generally accompanies the tolling of the (mythical) school bell.

Book covers represent a swell slant both for the kids and the theatre because it provides a fine wedge to get the school authorities to tell the youngsters that they must cover their text books and that free covers will be distributed by the Blank Theatre on such-and-such a day.

These covers can be imprinted with good, sensible institutional copy that will be just as appropriate at the end of the school term as at the start. We do not advise the imprinting of such book covers with current picture copy. It outlives its value to the theatre as soon as the run is ended and then prompts the kids to mark or paste over it.

We can think of no better medium to attract the children and school teachers' attention than book covers. If you don't know where to buy them ask us. We'll tell you and help you if necessary. But don't wait too long, since you must be prepared to distribute these covers as soon as school opens.

REAL CIRCUS BALLY PUT FREAK PICTURE OVER FOR W. BURNS

Typical circus ballyhoo along the main streets of the town and in front of theatre was effectively employed in selling "Freaks" by Will Burns, manager of the Princess Theatre, Joliet, Ill. The same note was stressed in newspaper ads, one of which we are reproducing on this page.

The theatre front represented a carnival sideshow during the four-day run of the picture. Two large muslin-covered frames about six feet wide and reaching from marquee to the ground covered the entire front, with exception of space wide enough to permit patrons to alight from cars stopping in front. Both frames carried the attractive six-sheets for the picture. Over the top on one was, "Now! See!" and at the bottom, "with the strangest cast of half-humans ever assembled." At top of the other six-sheet was "Adults Only," and at the bottom—"No advance in admission price." This copy stood out in red letters eight inches high.

A marker in carnival dress stood in front of the theatre most of the time, but especially just before each feature showing in order to attract a crowd with his especially arranged selling ballyhoo of the "never before witnessed monstrosities on the inside of the tent." With him, a local, 22-year-old Midget rendered cornet solos. After each appearance the Barker and the Midget drove around the Loop district in a carriage drawn by a small pony. In the cart was a four-foot sign which carried copy reading, "Don't Miss Freaks—Now Playing the Princess." Each of the four days found the bally at various schools and playgrounds of the city during recess time, urging the hordes of youngsters who stood around to be sure to see "Freaks" on Saturday, when they (Barker and Midget) would appear on the stage to explain the picture's main points of interest.

The two-column ad reproduced here appeared the evening prior to opening and we'd like to call attention to the 72-point catchline at top and the much smaller following copy. This was followed by an ad suggested in the home office manual, laid out to suit local conditions, and on Thursday it was decided to pull the unusual in Joliet and hold over the show for two more days. Another large ad, the same size as the one used prior to opening, carried the announcement. Additional copy stated that "popular demand forced" the theatre management to extend the engagement.

Developments Interesting

It will be interesting to watch developments on this odd and somewhat maligned picture. It was played many points, but has been held off in others, its appearance in New York City being current with this writing. Of course, it will be sold on its oddity, or, as some have described it, its gruesomeness. Perhaps the "dare" angle, which boosted "Frankenstein" to dizzy grosses in the big towns, will also prove effective in the larger centers. Perhaps the out-and-out sideshow slant used by Burns will turn out to be the most alluring selling method. In his ads he warned that children would not be admitted, as were adults not in "normal health." However, the kids turned out for the show and were let in, so Will advises, and we havn't heard of any one dying from heart failure.

In summing up, it might be well to keep in mind, as one New York exhibitor who played "Frankenstein" in the neighborhoods pointed out, that too much of the horror angle in the first-run campaigns might have a similar tendency to kill trade in the subsequent-run houses. This was apparently due to an over-selling of the horror angle, despite the fact that the larger houses reaped a rich harvest.

SPENDING TO SAVE!

Does it take courage, or is it just good business, to spend several thousand dollars at this time of the year on booth equipment and new screens?

We are of the opinion that it's darned good business if such equipment and screens are needed. So long as your house is open and catering to the public you are duty-bound to present as fine a show as is possible. If the projectors are run down and beyond repair, of what use is it to keep putting off the buying of new ones? A breakdown is almost as bad for your house now as during the height of the season.

Screens that are faded and are ruining otherwise perfect projection are likewise a foolish operating angle. If you must buy screens, BUY them. Waiting until the fall won't make the paying for them any easier. Money can be spent just as sensibly now as at any time.

We happen to know of a theatre owner who just spent close to three thousand dollars on new projector heads, screens and drapes around the stage. And his theatres are merely six-hundred-seat neighborhood houses doing about as badly as any neighborhood house can do at this time of the year.

We admire both his business ability and his courage. He is a real showman because his first consideration is not the almighty dollar. It is for the comfort and convenience of his patrons. He will, no doubt, be amply repaid for his investment because of the fine pictures he can project through the use of perfect equipment and up-to-the-minute screens.

GOES TRAILER!

Irving Lipnick, Round Tabler, and formerly connected with Fox Theatres in Chicago, is now putting in his time as city sales manager for Filmack, a trailer concern in the Windy City, so Irving Mack tells us. All Lipnick's friends in show business wish him lots of luck in his new field.

MAC PHERSON AND SCHELLING OPEN NUBIEBER THEATRE

Messrs. Granville MacPherson and L. A. Schelling, proprietors of the new Nubieber Theatre in Nubieber, Calif., will have to go some in their next publicity endeavors if they expect to top the sensational plugs they received in the local newspaper at the opening of the theatre.

Twelve pages of the tabloid sheet, "Northwestern News," carried stories and ads on every page congratulating the new owners, stressing the value of a theatre to the town, and setting forth in detail the new policy.

Publicity stories galore on the coming attractions flooded the pages. All of the various companies who participated in the construction and equipping of the theatre extended their congratulations through ads.

It is a certainty that every one for miles around knew that Nubieber had a new theatre. We want to wish the partners luck on their enterprise, and say we expect to hear from them frequently so that we can report to the Club how things are progressing.

ROUND TABLE BIOGRAPHIES

Thirty-four years ago, Harry Black, manager of the RKO Palace Theatre, Albany, N. Y., first saw light-o'-day in the city of Leeds, England, for that was this Round Tabler's birthplace

Later on in life he took the long trek to Flushing, N. Y., and was educated in the high school of that city. At the age of 16 he entered showbusiness and has been at the game ever since, with exception of the time he spent in the Naval Reserve during the late war.

Harry Black

His experience to date includes managerial posts with the Walter Reade Circuit of New Jersey and Radio-Keith-Orpheum. He has managed the St. James Theatre, Asbury Park, N. J., the Park, in Caldwell, N. J., the Liberty at Plainfield, and the RKO Proctor Theatre in Troy, N. Y.

He belongs to nearly all of the prominent fraternal organizations and tells us that he would again choose showbusiness were he to start all over again.

DIVERSIFIED EFFORTS EFFECTIVE

Wide Range of Exploitation Ideas Used by Paul Kunze Reflected at the Box Office

EVEN though Paul W. Kunze and his charming wife are now ensconced at their new spot, the Old Colony Theatre, Plymouth, Mass., and Paul is already planning campaigns that will dazzle the natives, we are going to record the highlights of some of his ideas as they were executed to excellent business at the State in Stoughton, because we know showmen will find them of value.

One of his biggest and most recent offerings was a radio stage presentation which he says "must not be confused with radio try-outs or amateur talent," especially since it involves a tie-up with a leading station.

He effected an arrangement with the Westinghouse stations whereby he was permitted to use the station's name and sponsorship in connection with a series of six, one hour radio stage presentations entitled "In the Spotlight."

A complete studio broadcast was enacted in full view of the audience, as the major chains do it. Microphones and special amplifying equipment carried the program across the footlights. Local orchestras, high grade local talent and a regular studio announcer shouldered the entertainment burden.

The local talent proved more than amateurs. They had to have the goods, or the station would prohibit use of its name. Each program carried a 10-piece local orchestra at no cost. Preceding the opening of the broadcast, the trailer requested silence, and also announced the announcer. Every 15 minutes the studio announcer made the station announcement just as if the program was going out through space to millions of listeners.

During the broadcast, all artists either remained seated or stood on stage, in an atmosphere of intimacy. This broadcast idea is one that showmen throughout the country should be able to use. Kunze ran it for six weeks because he had enough talent. Other showmen can limit their time if they wish. You might even be able to secure—as did Kunze—regular radio artists to make appearances as guest stars for an evening in exchange for publicity.

Not Expensive!

The cost of the show was small, the only expenditures being the salary of the station announcer and a small sum for "mike" rental and amplifying equipment.

Incidentally, during the last two weeks of his show, Kunze spotted dancing acts and changed the name to "WBZ Radio Revels." This move pepped up the proceedings and gave him a wider range of talent to choose from, tightening up and accelerating the pace of the show.

He intends to pull the same gag in the fall, but as usual will tackle it so as to again attract new patrons and bring back old ones.

Spring Fashion Show!

And now we come to a gala event in Stoughton—the Spring Fashion Show, which was such a success that Kunze bemoans the fact he used it only one night instead of two.

We have constantly tried to stress the importance of injecting novelty and variety into the show-selling activities of our many members. No one will question the wisdom of such advice. Yet, the fact remains, that many smart showmen do not vary their ideas sufficiently to keep up the interest among theatre-goers that their efforts in this direction ought to be doing.

We could have selected the material received from any one of a hundred different members. However, we selected Paul Kunze because we have watched his work for several years and feel confident that his is a real example to other showmen who really want some accurate reports on what an aggressive manager can do in the way of creating and engineering different ideas all the time.

He started off with a handicap, but overcame it. The obstacle was the limited number of small stores in town, but he managed to make the best of the situation by securing the services of a professional woman to put on the show.

Ten merchants, co-operating, paid for the woman's work. In return for this, they received advertising credit on the screen. Kunze advertised for 10 models and 34 showed up. So he used them all! Those he couldn't find room for on the stage were pressed into service as hostesses and program girls.

The models were rehearsed 10 days in advance. The show was entitled "Through the Day," a very appropriate title, as morning wear was displayed by pajamas and lingerie; afternoon attire by sportswear; the party clothes served for later in the day, with a grand finale of evening wear, and a bridal number, in its entirety to top off the show.

In connection with the show, Miss Stoughton was selected, by popular applause, from the models, and given a silver loving cup. The cup was presented by "Miss Louisiana," winner at Atlantic City in 1931, and whose services Kunze secured as a surprise. A professional master of ceremonies carried the comedy and announcement job. In between scenes, dance specialties supplied by the local school were presented, lending a novel touch to the affair.

Inside the theatre, the customary runway was built around front of the orchestra pit to bring the models in closer contact with the audience and to receive the full benefit of the spotlights. A six-piece orchestra played throughout the show, which was held only in the evening, the matinee being used for dress rehearsal.

Advance publicity on the show, in addition to the regular channels, included invitations to 15 prominent town officials, etc., with their names published. A full-page co-operative ad in the newspaper listed the merchants taking part.

Results on the show, as we reported above, were satisfactory. In closing, Kunze remarks: "No moderately sized town with fairly representative merchants should pass up this sure-fire bet, as it can't miss." What do you think? Isn't he right?

"Musical Hour"

But we can't close this story without also recording Kunze's "Stoughton Musical Hour." When we get these examples of fine showmanship, we just have to find space to devote to them.

This stunt can be worked in any town having a radio station within easy radius at no cost to the theatre and needs only the co-operation of about 10 leading merchants and the sponsorship of the local Chamber of Commerce.

Kunze propositioned his Chamber of Commerce and they agreed to buy an hour of radio time, which was paid for by the combined contributions of 10 leading merchants, who were given a hundred-word announcement over the air. The theatre supplied the talent and presented the show. The entire program was handled and announced by Miss Tolman, and presented on Saturdays.

The broadcasts were given for 13 consecutive weeks, and interest built up locally by the merchants, the theatre, and the Chamber of Commerce. No difficulty was encountered in securing artists, speakers and talent from Stoughton and nearby towns. Kunze supplied transportation facilities to and from the studio.

The talent, for the most part, was selected because of its popular appeal. Every prominent man was presented as a speaker; local orchestras and high school glee clubs were featured; church quartettes, the fire chief, and ministers, too, broadcast. And you'll agree that having them on the air is a corking angle.

All the merchants displayed paper pennants in their store windows. A trailer in the theatre announced the broadcast, newspapers were tied in, and the community benefited beautifully. An avalanche of mail rumbled into the radio station. The entire broadcast was made for 13 weeks at no cost, and ended with every one being pleased.

Perhaps this is just the gag you have been looking for, too, and if it is, and you're seeking further information on it, drop Paul a letter and we are sure he'll be glad to help you out.

We hope the description of these activities will prove helpful to other showmen who are laying their plans for future merchandising and building up business at the box office.

John Creamer Promoted

John Creamer, one of the oldest members of the Round Table Club and former manager of the Fox-Palace Theatre at Muscatine, Iowa, has been promoted to the post of city manager for Fox theatres in Salina, Kansas, assuming his new duties on August 9th.

Many valuable suggestions on show selling have been received by this department from Creamer and we will watch with interest his activities in connection with his new job.

WE OFTEN WONDER

By JOE FLICKER

—what runs through a patron's mind when he comes out of a theatre, as pictured here, and looks up at the $100,000 sign. Suppose you ask them yourself?

RED HEADED GIRL SHOW HELPED SELL FILM FOR COFFELL

A Red Headed Beauty Contest for "Red Headed Woman" was a successful selling aid employed on that picture by Carroll Coffel, manager of the Strand Theatre, Crawfordsville, Ind.

First he went out among the merchants and promoted the idea to have several of the leaders sponsor a girl to represent the store. The idea was enthusiastically received and each agreed to furnish their representative with a suit and robe of the very latest in beach-wearing apparel, with shoes to match.

Prior to staging of the event, Coffel called around to his newspaper office and inserted a want ad for red-headed girls, resquesting photograph and outlining what they were wanted for. As a result of this he was able to pick out nine attractive red heads. When word was circulated that each merchant was out to out-do the other as to costume, this bit of advertising produced the snappiest dressed aggregation of girls that the town had seen in a long time when they lined up for the show. Even the judges were nonplussed when they first gazed on this array of local pulchritude.

Several days in advance rehearsal began to teach the girls how to carry themselves on the stage and during the latter part of the week a runway was built fifteen feet into the orchestra from stage, a fine effect being obtained through use of amber lights on sides and one end. The judges, chosen among the ranks of artists and photographers to give the girls a break, sat along the runway. The stage was set with a beach scene and the usual accessories. Coffel used a nine-year-old girl on the stage with him to assist as M. C. The judging proceeded in a snappy fashion and every merchant was satisfied with the deal.

Additional work on the picture included a large lobby board of Harlow head for one week in advance, the entire cutout in different colored flitter; an advance lobby display in shadow boxes; a sound trailer for a week in advance; the distribution of 2,000 heralds from the Publix Air-Tour 'plane, a number with passes; the distribution of 2,000 other heralds on special show and picture, and newspaper advertising.

He received a generous amount of free space from the newspaper in connection with the girl show and picture and the girls, in addition to the outfits donated by the merchants, received first award of a silver trophy and three others in gold, ranging from $1 to $5. Consolation awards were given to the balance.

It may be quite a job to find a flock of extra-good looking red heads in every town but Carroll seems to have accomplished this feat. From all accounts his stunt went over with a bang and counted heavily in box office returns for his picture attraction. There's a contest being held on this picture for best campaigns and while this Round Tabler hasn't mentioned this fact, we're going to put his name in as an entry. It certainly looks as though he did a good job. It's too bad he didn't forward some photographs to illustrate his stunt.

MEYERS PROMOTED A FREE VACATION TRIP; HE'S NOW IN CORBIN

Since leaving the Warner forces at Mayfield, Ky., and taking charge of the Kentucky and Hippodrome Theatres, Corbin, Ky., George E. Meyers has been hard at work on the new job. We're glad to report that he's up and doing and still packs the wallop necessary to sell shows these days. Moreover, he still retains the ability to go out among the merchants and put over a free vacation stunt.

Some dodgers he issued to augment advertising in a newspaper which did not have wide enough coverage to fully circulate his message, really tell the story, and we're sorry that the nature of the stunt prohibits reproduction of one. However, we can go so far as to state that details were set forth at length and that all participating merchants took advertising space, thus letting the theatre go scot-free as to publishing cost.

The several merchants stood all other expenses attached to the deal, including the 4,000 special tickets at one-half cent each. They, in turn, were allowed to issue two-for-ones good one night weekly and were given a month's screen advertising in return. The Vacation Tour Company furnished the trip at actual cost in return for the advertising it received. Sale of the tickets took care of entire cost, including the first award of $25 given away each week and the $168 trip given at the close. Awards were made in the usual give-away fashion, which all readers are familiar with by this time.

We're glad to hear that Meyers shared in the good will and profits resulting from the promotion of one of these popular stunts and hope that many other Round Tablers will make the same report. Detailed information of the plan has been set forth in this department from time to time and the excellent results obtained by many members have also been reported on in any number of instances. Sure, it takes some work and sales ability to get out and put over one of these deals, but we're here to state that the average Club member possesses qualifications necessary to put it over. More power to George Meyers for the way he handled his end of the deal, and we'll await reports from other members who used the same stunt to stimulate trade during the slack season.

Chaplin 2-Reeler Books

As a means of exploiting the Charlie Chaplin two reelers, RKO has arranged for country-wide distribution of illustrated books to be sold for ten cents each at Woolworth stores. Each book contains a complete story in pictures, with captions based entirely upon the film.

The first of these publications, which will be placed on sale at release time, is "Easy Street" and it is claimed that the initial order calls for 120,000 copies. Other books on "The Cure" and "The Rink" are in process of manufacture. The books will be printed in heavy glazed stock in sepia rotogravure.

AN ADVANCE TIP!

It might seem strange to start talking about furnaces and heat when the thermometer hovers around ninety in the shade; but while the weather may be hot, the cold facts are equally as "hot".

This is the time when you must start thinking about the condition of your theatre's heating plant. Was it in perfect shape when it was closed down after last winter? Are repairs or changes necessary before the cold weather arrives? Must valves, grates, oil-burner parts, etc., be ordered and installed?

Then again, the best time to negotiate a fuel contract, oil or coal, is now. Best arrangements can be entered into and this important detail of your next winter's worries cleaned up long before the rush of the new season and the new season's product takes up too much of your time.

Sorry to have to call attention to such "little" things when so many of us are still suffering from prolonged spring fever; but better to be annoyed now than harassed later.

ANNA BELL WARD IS GETTING GREAT BREAK FROM LOCAL NEWSPAPER

One of the finest publicity breaks we've had occasion to observe in a long time is the result of a tie-up made with a local newspaper by Anna Bell Ward, publicity director of the Strand and Ben Ali Theatres, Lexington, Ky.

Picture to yourself a full-length three-column ad in a paper—almost a half-page—with 50 per cent of the space devoted to an eight by ten still of some star who is to appear in a forthcoming attraction at either one of the theatres. The balance of the copy following the caption, which names the star and tells when he or she is to be seen at the theatre, is based on "P. A.," or Personal Appearance, and neatly ties in with the newspaper's plug for fashion advertisements on other pages.

One of these large ads appears every week and all it costs the theatre is the expense attached to making a cut from a still. As stated above, 50 per cent of the space is devoted to theatre and the balance to sparsely worded copy designed to focus readers' attention on "Personal Appearance" ads inserted on other pages by different merchants.

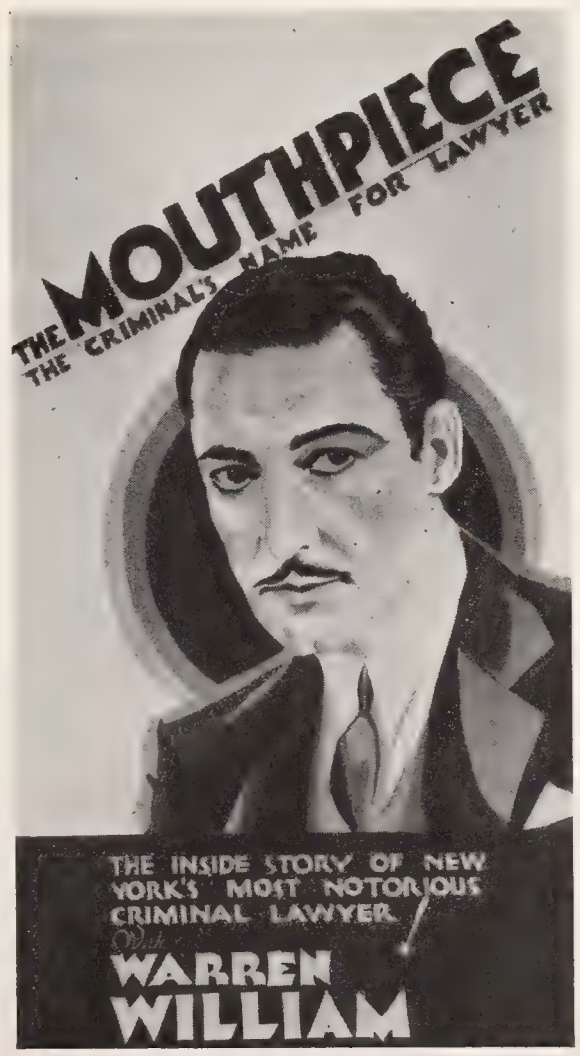
Many cooperative ad ideas from Club members have been published by this department, but we believe the "Personal Appearance" angle to be a brand new method of tying up newspaper, merchant and theatre. Miss Ward was able to engineer this very profitable deal for her theatres and we venture to state that when the above tip reaches the many other live-wire showmen in our organization there will be other "P. A." tie-ups in every section of the country. So, come on, fellows; let's go!—and thank Miss Anna Bell for passing along the word.

OLD RELIABLE STAGE WEDDING PROVED ITS WORTH TO LES KROPP

That good old reliable stunt of a Stage Wedding again proved its worth as an A-Number-One attraction at the Melba Theatre, a Fred Wehrenberg house in St. Louis managed by Lester Kropp.

The couple were residents of the neighborhood and all local merchants contributed handsomely to the occasion. Barely any expense was borne by the theatre, as the merchants were content with a lobby board giving them credit for the gifts to bride and groom. A local undertaker furnished a limousine and Fred Wehrenberg, head of the circuit, donated a liberal cash gift to the couple.

Complete details of Kropp's stage wedding are lacking, but we're sure that practically every Club member knows how to promote one of these dyed-in-the-wool attractions. Some claim the toughest assignment in the whole deal is to produce the couple, and that once they "are in the bag," it's a cinch to line up neighborhood merchants for their part. It may not be exactly a cinch, for promotion of gifts is not any too easy for these times, but at least the selling angle is there. The whole scheme has been gone into from time to time in this department, even to the extent of promoting free honeymoons, including bus or railroad fares, hotels, etc. We're glad to know it worked out so well for Kropp.



POSTER ART WORK FOR THE THEATRE!

Here are two more fine posters from the shop of Will Wills in Syracuse, N. Y., and on two stars who are good b.o. bets.

We are particularly gratified at the fine comment regarding this series of poster from, not only poster artists, but managers as well.

Artists going in for display pieces, in addition to their regular posters, should send photos along of such displays. They are in great demand now.

CARROLL TOLD THEM IN HOUSE MAGAZINE WHAT A SEAT THINKS

Remember that M-G-M ad in the Herald a few weeks ago headed, "We Wonder What A Theatre Seat Thinks About!" Good line, that, and one that excited the admiration of many a copy writer. Well, anyway, it caught the eye of L. W. Carroll, manager of the Flynn Theatre, Burlington, Vt., and he used it for a neat little gag in the "Flynn and Majestic News," house organ of his outfit. Following the head mentioned and with chairs illustrating each paragraph, appeared the following copy:

"Gosh, I'm enhausted tonight! If the Boss holds over Noel Lester another week I'll have a complete collapse.

"Gee whiz, if there was only one restful week! What a season I've put in with "As You Desire Me," "The Tenderfoot" and all the other seat fillers!

"A chair like me gets to be quite an authority on pictures. When Jean Harlow's on the screen they seem to sit in breathless enjoyment. I saw the trailer on her next hit, "Red Headed Woman," and I can hardly wait.

"You can't blame us Flynn chairs for getting proud. The way folk rush in here and fight for us is quite a thrill. Well, doors are opening now. Here comes a fat Mama. Just my luck!"

Certainly a theatre chair could say a lot of things if able to talk and it will not take very much imagination on the part of the average manager to put words in a chair's "mouth." Seems to us a gag such as the above made pleasing variation from regular run of house organ copy.

TWO STUNTS USED BY HAGEMANN FOR PEPPING-UP TRADE

Two stunts recently employed by L. P. Hagemann, manager of the Penn Theatre, Ambridge, Pa., were highly successful as good will builders and were also reflected at the box office.

One was a party he arranged with the local Ford dealer for crippled children in two homes near the city. The kiddies were first given a ride in the new model Fords and then driven to the theatre to witness Jackie Cooper's picture, "When a Feller Needs a Friend," a particularly appropriate title for the occasion. All cars were bannered with copy announcing the event. Aside from word-of-mouth advertising the local daily paper carried a two-column front page story and a weekly paper also gave front page mention.

The other stunt was a tie-up with a bottling company that produced results right at the cashier's window. Everyone attending the theatre on Saturday was given a card that entitled the holder to a free bottle of soda. The bottling concern furnished the beverage and a local Five and Ten firm dispensed it to theatre patrons. A small card in the lobby and brief screen mention took care of the theatre's end of the deal.

A couple of snapshots at hand showing the Ford cars on parade are somewhat lacking in detail for satisfactory reproduction, but get across evidence that the event must have attracted attention. We're glad to know that Hagemann is still plugging along and will await further information on his "Surprise Week," one of his latest stunts.

MORE NEW MEMBERS FOR OUR CLUB

THEODORE E. RUTH is the skipper of the Strand Theatre, Doylestown, Pa., and his is another name to hang up on the Club roster. Welcome to the Table, Ted, and shake hands with the gang. Now that you're a member of the livest group of showmen ever banded into an organization, give heed to the needs of your fellow men and share your show-selling secrets with them. No doubt you have found some of the suggestions in this department helpful in your work. Those were contributed by your brother Round Tablers. Here's hoping you do your part to continue the good work.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

GEORGE ELLIS hails from Uniontown, Pa., where he manages the Penn Theatre. We also have his application for membership at hand and it's a pleasure to list his name among the several thousand managers who belong to this organization. Ellis tells us that he followed Club pages long before he joined up with Publix at Uniontown and found many accounts of show-selling sent in by other Round Tablers of great help. Now he intends to do something in the way of repayment, which means he will become a regular contributor to this department. We will await with interest his future communications.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

WILLIAM COLE is another assistant manager to become a Round Tabler and he has the job of helping L. S. Stein manage the Parthenon Theatre at Hammond, Ind., which is said to be one of the smartest appointed theatres in the state. We also extend a cordial welcome to Cole and feel sure that his association with a seasoned showman such as Stein can only result in a further climb up the ladder in due time. Between these two Club representatives at the Parthenon this department should be kept fully informed on what's going on in show business at that point.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

WILLIAM PARRISH has the job of assisting Howard Thomas with the management of the Carolina Theatre, Rocky Mount, North Carolina, and he's another assistant manager who is in line for regular full fledged membership just as soon as he climbs the next rung in the ladder. Judging from the way he's going along that will not be a long ways off. He's only twenty years old and has been working his way up from the ranks, having held the post of doorman prior to his recent promotion. We will depend upon both Parrish and Thomas to keep us informed on what's going on at the Carolina.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

HARRY BERMAN is in charge of exploitation and publicity for Shea's Theatre, Buffalo, N. Y., and we also have his application for membership at hand. Meet the rest of the gang, Harry, and tell 'em you're glad that you have at last taken the step that makes you one of the fastest growing group of live-wire showmen in the world. There's many a worthy stunt been pulled for the sake of showbusiness at your theatre and we'll take it for granted that you are following the footsteps of your predecessors. Shoot along an account of what you are doing to sell shows and we'll see that the tips are passed along the line.

J. C. KEEFE'S application is at hand and we are very glad to record that he has become a member of this organization, for reason that he's a seasoned showman and we know that his contributions to this department will be read with interest by all his fellow Round Tablers. He is the City Manager for Warners in Sandusky, Ohio, and makes his headquarters at the State Theatre, a house formerly managed by Walter Morris. Prior to appointment to this post he held a number of important managerial jobs and also recently acted as "trouble shooter" for the Warner circuit in Ohio. His first contribution is some exploitation work on a current picture, which will appear in a forthcoming issue.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

MORGAN ELLIOTT is the manager of the Ben Ali Theatre, a Phoenix Amusement Company house in Lexington, Ky., and we are indebted to Publicity Director Miss Anna Bell Ward for sending along his application for membership in the Round Table Club. We've heard mighty good reports on work turned out by the fellows down in the Phoenix outfit and we're glad to include Elliott's name on the roster. Now that he is in this great army of showmen, we hope he'll contribute his share of the ideas this department publishes every week.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

ROBERT BURNETT is another associate of Miss Anna Bell Ward's in the Phoenix group of theatres down in Lexington, Ky. He manages the Madison Theatre and operates on a straight picture policy. He's another new Round Tabler in line for introduction to his many fellow members and we're taking this opportunity to extend him a most cordial welcome to the ranks of the fastest growing organization of its kind in the wide world. Thanks, again, to Miss Ward for sponsoring his application, and we hope that he, too, will become a regular contributor.

F. M. KENDALL manages the Empress and Bleich Theatres at Owensboro, Ky., and he's another one of Zone Manager Lee Goldberg's boys to join this organization. We've received many a good show-selling tip from the fellows who stand at the helm of Warner houses down in that territory and here's hoping that Kendall will also run true to form. Shoot some of your ideas along to Club headquarters, Kendall, and we'll see that the rest of the gang are informed.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

FRANK K. SUTTON hails from down South in Danville, Ky., where he manages the Kentucky Theatre. He, too, is one of Lee Goldberg's sharpshooters and we're mighty glad to have this opportunity to introduce him to the rest of the live-wire managers in this great organization. Frank changes 'em four times per week and that's enough action to keep any man on the alert for ideas to put over shows. We hope he will keep his Club posted on what he is doing.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

WILLIAM B. SMALL is lessee and manager of the Victoria Theatre, New Smyrna, Fla., and he's another Floridian to accept our invitation to become a member of this outfit. A cordial welcome is also extended this new Round Tabler and we sincerely hope he will let headquarters know what s doing in show business down in his community. We will look forward with interest to his communications.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

HUGH C. NEALE is in charge of the Dixie and Princess Theatres down South in Mayfield, Ky., and he's the next new member in line for introduction to his host of fellow showmen in this organization. Readers have heard from the Dixie and Princess before, when George Meyers, now managing two houses in Corbin, Ky., had charge. Neale is another one of Zone Manager Lee Goldberg's lieutenants and we're also mighty glad to have him with us. We hope he'll follow the good example set by Meyers and shoot in to us any good show-selling ideas he has at hand. We'll pass them along to the other fellows.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

WILLIAM C. CLOSSEY is the manager of the Strand Theatre, a Publix house in Wilkes Barre, Pa., and a cordial welcome is also extended this newly elected member of our Club. We pleasantly recall Wilkes Barre as a good show town and this department has carried many a yarn full of valuable suggestions sent in by local managers. We hope Clossey will keep up the excellent example set by Herman, Rosenthal and others mentioned from time to time on these pages.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

MISS MABEL PRATT is another showman to become a member of the Round Table Club and her application is also sponsored by Publicity Director Anna Bell Ward of the Phoenix Amusement Company, Lexington, Ky. Miss Pratt is in charge of the Bourbon Theatre, one of the local Phoenix houses, and we wish her to know that we're mighty glad to have her with us. Now that she is a full fledged Round Tabler we'll expect her to do her duty in the way of keeping Club headquarters informed on what stunts are used to keep those 780 seats in the Bourbon filled.

FOR PICTURE THEATRES

SONG AND DANCE

Rita Royce and Company (4)
Brooklyn Metropolitan

This song and dance team of two girls and two men offer a turn with a decidedly different twist to it, an act which proved highly entertaining to the patrons.

Miss Tina, a vivacious brunette chockful of personality, acts as mistress of ceremonies, introducing Miss Royce and her dance partners, the Reiss Bros. She explains that during the dancing all will speak their minds as they see fit. This part of the act is called "Truth and Consequence," and during this, they get more laughs than the comedians featured on the bill, and a great hand at the finish. Miss Tina follows, singing "Human Thing," and though her voice is far from the best, she "sells" it to the audience in a first-class manner. The Reiss Bros. are next with a "scat" song, later going into a neatly done hoofing routine. For the finale, after some preliminary arguing with each other, Miss Royce does her specialty of tap dancing, on her toes, and is joined by the entire company.

This act is one of the most entertaining of its kind. It has clean lines, good work and capable performers.—E. D.

Lake, Harris and Hayes
Detroit Fisher

This was once a fair to middling act, but it is now acquiring an air of staleness. The trio consists of a pretty, slim girl dancer, an M. C. character and a fat lad. Their Floradora burlesque bit is flat here. A dance impression of a trip in an old Ford, despite its age, is still good for a hand and a few laughs.

The Gray Family
New Orleans Orpheum

Four girls and two boys who dance nicely and sing, working some usual but well done routines. One of the girls, a blues singer, gets over well, ending her song by kissing the orchestra leader. One of the boys is an adept acrobatic dancer. The act is good for an opener.

Florence Gast and The Three Playboys
Detroit Michigan

This number combines eye and ear appeal Florence Gast, with charms galore, performs a clever, graceful stepping routine to the rhythmical vocal harmony of the Playboys. No scantiness of applause for this.

Mary and Marge
Milwaukee Wisconsin

These two lassies, the one a tall, slender blonde and the other a short, dark brunette, carry on a snappy bit of patter filled in with a song and dance bit.

Stroud Twins
San Francisco Fox

The only thing off with this act is that it has been offered in local playhouses so many times that it is moth-eaten. The boys certainly look alike, talk alike and dance alike. They please, but need a new act.

RKO May Use 44 Vaude Weeks If Scale Changes

Whether RKO will have 44 weeks of vaudeville this season is contingent upon readjustment of union wage scales. To date 23½ weeks have been set. In RKO's vaudeville department it is pointed out that there must be a reduction of overhead in expenditures for service of stage hands and electricians to make a full season of vaudeville a paying development.

Sixteen full week stands already have been determined upon. These are the Palace, New York; Albee, Brooklyn; Palace, Rochester; Keith and Boston theatres, Boston; Palace, Cleveland; State-Lake and Palace, Chicago; the St. Louis, St. Louis; Orpheum, Denver; Main Street, Kansas City; Orpheum, Minneapolis; Orpheum, Omaha; Orpheum, New Orleans; Majestic, Dallas; and a theatre, unnamed, in Fort Worth.

Split-week engagements, as lined up currently, are these: Coliseum or Audubon, and Academy of Music, New York; Prospect, Brooklyn, where acts will be broken in; Palace, Albany; Proctor's Schenectady; Keith, Syracuse; Capitol, Trenton; Albee, Providence; Keith, Lowell; the 105th Street, Cleveland; Palace, Youngstown; Keith, Dayton; and Palace, Akron.

Presentation units will play a full week at the Albee, Cincinnati, and split weeks at the Palace, Youngstown; 105th Street, Cleveland; Rivoli, Toledo; and Orpheum, Madison.

The schedule, subject to change as union deliberations proceed, already includes three Fox theatres now booked by RKO as a result of the recent pooling deal with the Skourases covering Manhattan.

Stars on Capitol Stage

Ben Bernie and his band, Eddie Dowling, Ray Dooley, Fred Coots, Boswell Sisters, radio singers, will be featured in the stage presentation of the Capitol in New York during the week of August 11.

Radio Stars in RKO House

Mills Brothers, radio singing group, will play the RKO Albee, Cincinnati, during the week of August 13. Following the appearance the group will resume its tour of the Publix circuit.

INSTRUMENTAL

Benny Meroff and His Orchestra (15)
Detroit Michigan

This is more than a mere musical group; it is a whole bill in itself, combining the talents of a comedy troupe and a college glee club. "Rhythm Everywhere" is the number used for a flashy opening with the full band on the stage. This is followed by the appearance of Meroff before a traveler, announcing that the show is full of novelty and that anything might happen. His solo bit as a juggler should be deleted; it affords him much amusement but means nothing to the audience. What follows, however, bears out his announcement. Outstanding is his impersonation of Ted Lewis, in which role he is ably supported by his versatile band. In another good bit he performs on nearly every instrument on the stage, including a tin whistle and a Chinese fiddle.

Irmanette
Detroit Michigan

Irmanette draws sweet music from a violin. The high spot of her act is a bit in which she does a tap and acrobatic routine while playing her own music.

Eugene
Chicago Chicago

This young chap makes the xylophone get hotter than hot, and not only proves himself a master of the instrument but makes his act entertaining to a high degree. Plenty interesting—and different.

COMEDY

Mitchell and Durant
San Francisco Fox

This pair, plucked from Earl Carroll's "Vanities," put on a rough and tumble act that gets a lot of applause. They slam into each other like a couple of prize fighters but come out of their mixups smiling and doing difficult flip flops. It's new stuff To exercise their voices they sing "Old Man River."

Milton Berle
New York Capitol

Doing a master of ceremonies for this show, Berle proved a laugh riot. He sings, dances all over the stage, gags about anything and everything, in short, does everything an audience needs for stimulation. His medley of song titles is a clever concoction and gets a spontaneous reception.—H. P.

Russell, Marconi and Jerry
Cincinnati Albee

The two men offer violin and accordion harmony while doing a straight character and stooge, while Jerry, the feminine member, does some nifty soft-shoe steps. Later the trio offer a soft-shoe dance, playing their own accompaniment. The violinist offers a song, "I Called It Love," displaying a pleasing tenor voice. The stooge puts over some subtle comedy of the "dumb" variety. The act clicked.

STAGE ATTRACTIONS

REVIEWS OF ACTS FOR PICTURE THEATRES

Rome and Gaut

Detroit Michigan

There is enough low comedy in this piece to rule it out for the average audience. With a little overhauling it could be turned into fair, respectable entertainment. What remains after the so called wit is deleted is the contrast of a very tall and slim character with a short and squat one, a number of good comedy steps suiting the extreme physical proportions of each, and some middling pantomime comedy. The applause that might have gone out to the merit was cancelled by the disgust aroused by the cheap bits in it.

Harry Welsh

New Orleans Orpheum

Assisted by a straight man, Harry Welsh brings on his own bag of comic tricks to great effect. He gags for the first part, does a song, then goes into a restaurant scene, which the audience found very funny. In this last the RKOlians were as much a part of the act as he, working echo effects from the pit with a zest that added to the comedy.

Charlie Melson

Detroit Michigan

Melson's screen test is something of a riot. He stands at one side of the stage and kids the screen image of himself, and directs himself in a round of panicky antics. He finishes off by shooting the screen Melson when that lad persists in singing like Rudy Vallee. Melson also fits capably into the M. C. spots for the stage show.

Nell Kelly

Baltimore Century

Singing off stage first, she came on in a broad comedy solo, following with a burlesque of "Peanut Vendor" and "What Is It I Ain't Got."

Ted Leary

Detroit Fisher

As M. C., Leary strikes a happy medium, for he is neither too smart nor to much of a fixture. Consequently, he should suit any audience.

Gold and Ray

Baltimore Century

An imitation of amateur tap dancers, with forced introduction, is followed by a routine of burlesque falls and mixed steps. Good reception.

NOVELTY

Russian Canine Actors

Detroit Fox

There is an animal act apart from the common run in one outstanding point: no human being appears on the stage throughout the act. The dogs are dressed in Russian costumes and wear boots. They offer several little skits that keep the audience delighted. The trainer, in Russian dress, appears for a bow at the close of the act.

Arnaut Brothers

Milwaukee Wisconsin

Comedy dancing and other antics feature the work of these two brothers. Their main event is a whistling dialogue between two birds which is good for heavy laughs.

15 Minutes of Grand Opera and Morton Gould, Pianist

Forest Hills Theatre, Forest Hills, Long Island

Manager Heinz, of the Forest Hills Theatre, made an interesting experiment in presentation acts on Monday evening, August 8. The attraction was a rapid-fire, condensed version of the best known arias and trios from Verdi's "Il Trovatore," with Morton Gould, young American pianist-composer, as soloist and accompanist.

The three opera stars were Ernest Davis, tenor; Myrrh Sollars, soprano, and Leo de Hierapolis, baritone, each of whom appeared as soloist as well as in the trios.

Mr. Gould opened the act with his original transcription of Ravel's "Bolero," in which he displayed a brilliant technic and achieved a realistic drum effect through the use of his forearms, giving the effect of three pianos being played at the same time.

Miss Sollars scored effectively in the aria from the first act, revealing a dramatic-lyric voice of great range and lovely quality. Mr. Davis, in the solo preceding the trio and in the great "Miserere" scene, proved a tenor of exceptional vocal equipment with ringing top notes. Mr. de Hierapolis sang the famous "Il Balen" aria with luscious tone and real artistry. These three fine artists were accorded a splendid reception, their spirited singing of the big trio from the first act being the outstanding hit of the act.

With the proper stage settings in houses of more ample proportions than the Forest Hills (which seats 900) it is evident that this act should appeal strongly to class audiences.—J. S.

Donatello Bros. and Carmen

New Orleans Orpheum

This act, consisting of the three Donatellos, Carmen, and later two older people whom she introduces as her mother and father, is a combination of dancing, instrumental work, song and novelty. The act opens with the boys offering a clarinet and piano accordion novelty, goes into a dance for Carmen, then allows more fast stepping, a sax solo by one of the boys, piano and song megaphone work and finally brings out Carmen's father, who plays "Waiting for the Moon" on an Italian shepherd horn. The older man is expert on this instrument. Carmen's mother follows, playing a tambourine with all the fancy twists, yet this novelty is really a triumph for her husband, who accompanies on the shepherd horn with perfect tonguing.

Zelda Santley

Philadelphia Fox

Her realistic impersonations went over big. Completely submerging her own pleasing personality, Miss Santley with a twist of her hair and a change of inflection made Greta Garbo, Fannie Brice, Helen Morgan, Jimmie Durante live on the Fox stage. Her takeoff of Zasu Pitts was greeted with peals of laughter. In addition, Miss Santley acted as mistress of ceremonies.

Tom and Hank

Milwaukee Wisconsin

Here are two youngsters who need take a back seat for nobody, not even Will Rogers, when it comes to twirling the lariat. They are also able horsemen and demonstrate their abilities with fancy riding.

DANCERS

Mae Wynn and Foursome with "Zella"

New Orleans Orpheum

This is an all tap dance act which skillfully avoids monotony and presents clever entertainment. It opens with two men and two women doing a song and tap dance. Then Miss Wynn steps out for a solo spot, after which the other girl takes her place and the two men do an acrobatic tap. The high spot is a tap to "St. Louis Blues," danced before a drop upon which is painted a Negro's face, through the gaping mouth of which a trio of dancers, dressed in Harlem manner, make their entrance. They work fast and cleverly, fine lighting helping the turn. Miss Wynn follows with a routine on a drum, trying to outdo the pit drummer who gives her a run for her money, and the closing brings the entire company for the usual tap routine up and down a pair of steps. Good entertainment, well dressed.

O'Connor Family (6)

San Francisco Fox

Members of the family trickle on to the stage, one by one, each offering a specialty. Most of the work is done by the two grown boys and a girl, but the mother also does a neat bit of hoofing and two tiny youngsters appear toward the close of the act. The youngest seems scarcely able to navigate, but gets his share of applause. The dancing is good, without being spectacular, and family appeal helps put it over.

Ramon and Virginia

Detroit Fox

There is something of a novelty in the comic adagio number offered by this pair. They appear in the costumes of comic opera soldiers. The girl is diminutive and pretty, two qualities which may account for the ease with which her partner tosses her about.

Gordon, Reed and King

New York Capitol

This clever trio intersperse comedy with their routine of dancing. While two of the boys play the guitar and clarinet the third offers an eccentric tap dance, after which they finale with a difficult shuffle tap dance. Their efforts were well received.—H. P.

Raquel Torres

Milwaukee Wisconsin

Miss Torres, decidedly petite and pretty, does other things besides dance; she speaks Spanish and serves as a party to lively repartee. Her dancing, however, modeled on the style of that seen in "White Shadows in the South Sea" and "Aloha," is her forte.

Veloz and Yolanda

New York Capitol

This famous dance team, formerly featured in "Hot-Cha," opens with a graceful specialty dance to a nice hand, coming back later in the show to offer a tango which went over big. A class act that should go well anywhere.—H. P.

Three Rhythm Kings

Baltimore Hippodrome

These three boys offer some of the most intricate tap steps and keep up the pace throughout their act, offered with Cab Calloway and his band.

STAGE ATTRACTIONS

LEADING SONGS AND SLIDES

To the Stage Attractions Department:

In the July 16th issue of Motion Picture Herald your Stage Attractions Department listed ten leading songs for the month of June. On re-checking that list I notice a coincidence that might interest you.

Every song on that list is one on which slides were available without delay or argument. Slides were ready on seven of the ten songs listed practically as soon as the songs were released. This I know, because I had the first set of slides on those seven songs and introduced them to my audiences as "first time on any screen." This method of introducing new songs seems to me to have many advantages:

(a) It gives the organization a chance to present a good number before the audience has become wearied of it by its constant repetition on the radio;

(b) The audience reaction at the time is good, because people are always interested in something new;

(c) The subsequent reaction of individual members of the audience is good, for, hearing the new number later on the radio and listening to its growing popularity, they feel almost a personal interest in it and likewise give credit to their organist for being a good "picker,"

(d) Slides which reach the organist when a song is new can be repeated as many as four or five times in the course of the life of the song, whereas slides that are held back until the song is a radio "wow" can make at most two successful appearances; and

(e) From the angle of the publisher, who is most interested in selling copies, does it not seem logical that more copies will be sold by a set of slides on a catchy new song than by a set of slides on a song with which everyone is already familiar?

I do not pretend even to intimate that organ slides alone were responsible for placing those ten songs at the top of the heap. But it took something besides dumb luck. And the fact that early organ slides were a part of the exploitation schedules for those ten successful songs should at least give food for thought to the publishers.—Bill Meeder, Organist.

RKO Air Program Set

"Hollywood on the Air," new RKO Radio air program, will be broadcast each Saturday over a Coast-to-Coast National Broadcasting Company network. The broadcast is part of the plan of Merlin H. Aylesworth, president of RKO, for cooperation between the radio and motion picture in exploitation.

Norma Talmadge on Stage

Norma Talmadge, screen star, will appear on the New York Paramount stage during the week of August 12. George Jessel will write, produce and star in the presentation, which will also feature Burns and Allen, radio team.

Saenger May Have Shows

The Saenger theatre in New Orleans will again resume the presentation of stage shows, if Publix division manager Maurice Barr has his way, it is indicated. The units, if they are resumed, will be locally produced by a New York director. Mr. Barr is understood to have been consistently of the opinion that stage shows are needed for profitable operation of the Saenger.

REVIEWS OF STAGE ACTS

DANCERS

Ramon and Rosita

New York Paramount

This dance team offer their original interpretation of Ravel's "El Bolero," getting a nice hand. Later in the show these dancers go through a graceful tango routine.—H. P.

Petch and Deauville

Milwaukee Wisconsin

This young lass and lad are efficient tap dancers. They are capable of offering an entertaining moment of snappy steps.

Merna Fortune

Philadelphia Fox

A dainty little acrobatic dancer, she gives an outstanding performance and her variations of the split won continuous applause.

Dick and Edith Barstow

Detroit Fisher

Judging from the ease with which they handle a toe-tap, these two have been doing their act for some time. Together they caper up and down a flight of steps, and the boy alone goes through a difficult routine of Russian wings on his toes over the same flight of steps. While the act is not exactly a sensation, it makes a good spot on the bill.

The Three Jacks

Baltimore Hippodrome

Three boys in dress suits do fast work on a reed mat, interspersing with singles and together in finale. They were well liked.

Rangerettes (12)

Detroit Michigan

This is a new line here, with something of an edge on previous groups for pulchritude and routine polish. It is really a Betty Northrup line, known as the Rangerettes only for the stage production, "Yellowstone Trail."

Jack Holland, June Knight

Milwaukee Wisconsin

Here are as neat a pair of dancers as you'd care to lay eyes on. For their first appearance they offer a tango and for the second the rumba, both executed to a nicety. The young woman and her partner are whirlwinds of grace.

ACROBATICS

Roy Rogers

Philadelphia Fox

The "International Inebriate" puts over a hilarious number and his clever tumbling and acrobatic stunts, climaxed by reaching into a bowl of goldfish and calmly eating two, entertained an appreciative audience.

4 Casting Stars

New York Capitol

This team of aerial acrobats opens the show with a routine of thrilling work on the trapeze. An excellent opener.—H. P.

DeLong Sisters (3)

Detroit Michigan

Three charming girls offer a strenuous tumbling act. In their feature bit the girls form a pillar three high, the lower one supporting the other two on the top of her head. The act won a good reception.

SINGERS

Vaughn De Leath

New York Valencia

Billed as "Radio's First Lady," she wins the audience from the moment of her appearance before the microphone. Her graciousness and charm as well as her crooning voice, singing such favorites as "Paradise," "I Love a Parade," "When It's Sleepy Time Down South," and a medley of Southern melodies, give a special appeal. She cajoles the audience into joining her in singing "Minnie, the Moucher," and supplements her act by introducing two local singers "discovered" in radio audition.

Brox Sisters

New Orleans State

This vaudeville and picture trio played before a cordial audience, which had applauded some acts preceding them that hardly deserved applause, but which for some reason did not give it the show stopping applause it deserved. Spotted in two places, the girls appear the first time in pink lace gowns, singing "Evening in the Carolines," then "Falling in Love Again," repeating it in the manner of Marlene Dietrich, even to revealing the hose supporters. The latter was an especially fine imitation and the closer, "Dinah," was well handled. Their second spot had them in rain coats doing three rain songs.

Martha Vaughn

Milwaukee Wisconsin

Miss Vaughn is a singer of no mean ability. She has a very pleasing voice and her Mexican and Spanish songs, as well as "When Irish Eyes are Smiling," click in good style.

Ann Roth

Detroit Michigan

Ann Roth's chief audience bid is the fact that she is Lillian Roth's sister. She does a session of patter and song with Benny Meroff and sits on the piano in emerald pajamas to sing "He's So Nice." She fills a spot but is no cause for excitement.

Roesner Orchestra on Air

In observance of "Achievement Week," Walt Roesner and his fifty-five charges, including the choral ensemble of twenty vocalists, took to the air, presenting a special concert from the quarter deck of the Shell Happytime Ship of Joy, a feature of radio station KFRC. The concert was for a full hour and included some of the overtures that have met with the most favor in the year.

Stanwyck Song Published

Harms, Inc., Warner music publishing subsidiary, released this week "Take Me Away," number sung by Barbara Stanwyck in "The Purchase Price," opening in New York last week.

Completes Jolson Songs

Irving Caesar, playwright and song writer, has gone into retirement with George White to compose the book and several songs for the new "Scandals." Mr. Caesar has completed five songs for "The New Yorker," Al Jolson's new picture for United Artists.

STAGE ATTRACTIONS

ORGAN SOLOS

WILD OSCAR (New York 175th) opened his community-sing with a cleverly worded oral introduction of Nick Kenny's new song, "The Song That Broke My Heart," which he first played in concert style and then for the audience to sing. Audience were a little slow in starting, so Oscar led them in the singing, giving them a good start, which they followed up lustily to the finish. Oscar next announced a request for "St. Louis Blues," a hot chorus of which he played with a singing chorus following. Next was "Two Loves Have I," with the audience singing well on the three numbers, "Alice Blue Gown," "Blue Heaven" and "Stein Song," which closed the solo.

Oscar, who has been featured here a long time, is justly popular with these patrons, who apparently enjoy his smart novelties.

ART BROWN (Richmond Byrd) recently presented a group of optimistic songs for the audience to sing and entitled it "Musical Remedies." "Brownie" doctored the novelty up with a lot of "mike" chatter which drew plenty laughs. Numbers used were "When the Clouds Roll By," "Shanty in Old Shanty Town," "Great Big Bunch of You," "Night When Love Was Born" and a finale of "Tiger Rag." The first four numbers were sung by the audience, Brownie playing a special arrangement of the last named song as a plug for the current feature picture, "Bring 'Em Back Alive." The solo was received well, with most applause being given "Tiger Rag."

LEW BETTERLY (Detroit RKO Uptown) is back at an old stand. Here for the past four or five weeks, he has found an audience with some voice confidence, and as a result has regularly been getting a fair share of response as well as a good hand. In a solo entitled "Musical Mad-mess" he serves a conglomerate menu of novelty and old and new numbers. "Lazy Day" is a fair opening number. As a memory challenge the slide for "Down By the Old Mill Stream" flashes a rebus instead of the usual lyric. The audience caught the symbols and co-operated lustily. A tongue twister with an alliteration of m's, followed by a sibilant puzzler to the melody of "Coming Through the Rye," is a combination which Betterly has used before with some success, and it fits well into this solo. This is followed by a song and whistle version of "Paradise." The new number in the program is "While We Danced at the Mardi Gras" and "Strangers" is the closing. Betterly continues to find effective the use of a slide of a "mike" when he addresses the audience.

UP AND DOWN THE ALLEY

PHIL FABELLO, RKO's most popular orchestra leader, is now at the RKO Albee, Brooklyn, where he quickly is building up his popularity the same as he did for four years at the Coliseum, uptown. . . . Heretofore the other Brooklyn leaders in the neighborhood hadn't much to worry about, but now that Phil is in their midst, they will have. . . . Incidentally, Phil can brag of his record of having his name up in lights in two spots on the marquee for the past four years and never having seen it taken down. . . . That's his record at the Coliseum. . . .

Brill Brothers, the famous clothiers, have gone decidedly Broadway in their advertising of their new store on the "Main Stem." . . . They have a big sign in the window stating: "Brill Bros., Now in Rehearsal for a Return Engagement. . . . After a Successful run of 21 years on Broadway . . . We are Happy to Announce our Return to This Corner . . . etc.—Suits Us."

Fred Waring, after a sojourn in Europe, is back in this country and opens at the Brooklyn Albee on August 13th with his Pennsylvanians. . . . This is the start of an 8 week tour of RKO houses for Fred and his versatile orchestra. . . . Al Friedman (Bad-Gag), is now professional manager of the newly formed Majestic Music Corp. at 1650 Broadway. . . . Arlo Hults, formerly featured organloguer in a number of RKO Metropolitan houses, is spending the summer in Kansas City, Mo., and is being featured over Station WRE, locally. . . . Phil Baker and Ben Bernie are back together again—but only as tunesmiths. . . . They have completed "Strange Interlude," and Miller Music is publishing it. . . . This is their first professional partnership in more than ten years—when they were a No. 2 act in vaudeville. . . .

The newly formed Standard Studios, Inc., of 154 W. 46th St., has as its president Herman (Rosie) Rosenberg, formerly of National Studios, and as treasurer Maurice Workstel, head of the studios under his name. . . . The new firm will devote itself to the manufacture of slides, photography, etc. . . .

ED DAWSON

OVERTURES

PHIL FABELLO (Brooklyn Albee) and his Versatile Orchestra, for their opening overture, presented a group of popular selections, that earned them the early favor of this audience. This orchestra is prominent for its versatility and novelty and in this overture proved beyond a doubt just why they are so popular. The orchestra members have musical ability and Fabello is just what this house needed to pep it up. This young personable chap is a great showman. Outstanding in this first overture was the novelty built up around hats, with songs fitting in with each as they wore them.

WALT ROESNER (San Francisco Fox) and the Fox Concert Orchestra, with a choral body of twenty voices, are heard in excerpts from the works of Franz Schubert, presented under the title "Musical Moments." There are such familiar numbers as "Hark, Hark the Lark," with violin accompaniment by concert master Thorstein Jensen; "March Militaire," "Serenade" and bits from the "Unfinished Symphony." The offering proves one of the most enjoyable in recent months.

LOU SCHRADER (Baltimore Hippodrome) directed the orchestra through an overture called "Popular Favorites," in which he started with a number and was interrupted by a violinist in the upper right box asking if he could join in, Schrader giving him permission after comic dialogue. Then he went into a selection from "Rose Marie," the violinist finishing. Some comedy with finger exercises followed, with a classical number and "My Rosary."

LEONID LEONARDI (Brooklyn Paramount), introduced as guest conductor, presented the "Slavic Rhapsody" as this week's overture, and capably directed the Paramount's fine orchestra throughout, except for his own piano solo, in which he played parts of the "Rhapsody." Though he played with a flourish and technique that proved him a master of the piano, much of his playing was "muddy," which unfortunately took a great deal away from the pleasure of his playing.

Goldwyn Girls to Tour

Samuel Goldwyn plans to send 16 girls, chosen from 76 in Eddie Cantor's film, "The Kid From Spain," on a tour as a unit in connection with the first run showings of the film. The unit will be billed as "The Goldwyn Girls."

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1931, unless otherwise specified.

Constitutional Rights an Issue

Questions of constitutional rights, interstate commerce and federal copyright laws will form the basis of an appeal to the United States supreme court in the Kansas contract case if the distributors should decide to take the case to the high tribunal for a review.

Attorneys for the film companies consider the issues raised of utmost importance to the trade in Kansas. It is claimed that under the federal copyright laws the distributor, licensing the use of films, has the essential right to fix admission prices for the copyrighted article. The Kansas ruling that prices cannot be stipulated in contracts clashes with the federal laws and impairs the distributors' constitutional rights, according to the attorneys.

It is contended that the state laws against price fixing, if, as ruled, they apply to contracts made outside the state, impose a direct restraint upon interstate commerce. That contracts made in one state licensing a film for exhibition in another state are as much a part of interstate commerce as is the transportation of the photoplays or other articles from one state to another has many times been decided by the United States supreme court, the attorneys contend.

Slide Company Sues Others For Infringement of Patent

The Radio-Mat Slide Company, Inc., New York, announces that it has brought suit in the United States district court against Lloyd Oppenheimer, operating as National Slide Company, New York, charging that the "radio-mat" patent No. 1,271,775, is infringed by the "rapid type" slide of National.

The Radio-Mat company is also taking action against Peerless Slide Company, Minneapolis, manufacturers of the Peerless slide. The complainant charges in each case that it originated and built up a substantial business in the "radio-mat" slide, which has been injured by the alleged patent infringement.

Heads Powers Exchange

Harry A. Lande, industry pioneer, has succeeded Roy Alexander in charge of the Chicago exchange of Powers Pictures. Sam Berkowitz has taken over the Powers exchanges in Los Angeles and San Francisco, with Mel Halling as general sales manager.

Ten New Series from Educational

Ten new series will be launched by Educational Pictures in September, the first of each having been scheduled for release next month, together with five other subjects. This is said to be as heavy a release schedule as Educational has ever had.

Named to Philippines

Edward Ugast has been appointed special representative in the Philippine Islands for United Artists, with headquarters in Manila. Mr. Ugast was formerly with Paramount for nine years in Paris and New York.

JENKINS' COLYUM

Winchester, Ind.

Dear Herald:

Bill Brenner still operates the Cozy theatre here in Winchester, and with each succeeding month he acquires an added accumulation of gray hairs that gives his gourd the fleeting appearance of a jackrabbit vanishing over a Nebraska sandhill. We used to know Bill when he was a boy and lived in Newton county, Indiana, and when he would get mad and wade around in the frog ponds and catch tadpoles and pollywogs and pull their tails off every time his mother made him wash his ears. But Bill has improved a little since then, due no doubt to Mrs. Brenner, and by the way Mrs. Brenner has invited us to a fried chicken dinner at her house tomorrow (Sunday) and if Bill starts anything we are going to give her the lowdown on Bill's early history.

The Cozy was doing a fairly good business when we called, but Bill said it was the first time it had happened in several months. Winchester has felt the depression the least, perhaps, of any town we have visited lately, due no doubt to the glass factory which operates on full time and is adding more men to the payroll every day, and this means a lot to a town the size of Winchester.

R. A. Goshorn is the owner and operator of the Lyric, which is equipped with Western Electric sound and, what little we heard of it, we would pronounce it A1, although one can't judge sound and projection very well when he is in the office visiting with the manager, and R. A. is a good visitor as well as manager. He kicked like a yearling calf because we registered at the hotel instead of occupying a bed at his house. That's the kind of a Hoosier R. A. is.

We note that in the case of the United Artists vs. John Piller of Valley City, N. Dak., Judge Swensen of the federal court at Grand Forks handed down a decision holding the uniform standard exhibition contract to be illegal. That's the trouble with the courts of this country; they are too doggone slow. You boys may recall that we handed down that decision in this Colyum something like three years ago, but then we are just one of the gravel-pit boys and our decisions don't weigh very much.

LISTEN, girls! We smell fried chicken.

There, we have just come from that fried chicken dinner and there wasn't the slightest indication of a depression around Mrs. Brenner's dinner table, but their henroost will show a falling off in attendance this evening by two members of the chicken family. We are too full for further comment.

Wenger Points Up the Grand

W. S. Wenger has dolled up his Grand theatre at Union City like a Hollywood flapper out on dress parade and he has a washed air cooling system that will cool you, but won't wash you. This system will make you feel so cool that you will want to go back home and cover up the tomato plants before the show is over. Mr. Wenger's son is the author and purveyor of this system.

Indiana has 750 theatres, 373 of them are closed, which means that the producers are not getting as much revenue from Indiana as they once did by 50 per cent, and if other states have fallen off in proportion to Indiana it means just one thing for the producers, and you can make your own guess as to what that is.

Kokomo, Ind.

We had a delightful visit yesterday with our old friend, A. E. Bennett of the Liberty theatre at Muncie. Mr. Bennett is the type of showman who believes in giving his patrons good shows at reasonable prices, and our judgment is that he will be operating the Liberty long after the double feature houses have folded their tents and silently stolen away.

Mr. Bennett believes that too much pie will ruin the digestion, even if they're excellent pies. We are agreed on that and we have both cut out pie and have taken to bean soup, and Mrs. Bennett makes excellent bean soup also.

Clyde V. Wilson of the Ritz theatre at Tipton says we called on him once before. We didn't believe it until he proved it to us. Mr. Wilson is a delightful fellow to meet and he has a theatre that is the pride of the town as well as Mr. Wilson. The factories at Tipton are closed and that makes business tough, but the town is surrounded by as fine a farming country as can be found outside of Nebraska and that ought to be worth a whole lot to Tipton.

L. R. Ball manages the Alhambra theatre at Elwood for Frank Rembusch of Shelbyville. He was running a free matinee for the kids when we called and we didn't suppose there were that many kids in northern Indiana. These Hoosiers are certainly a progressive kind of people. Mr. Ball is a sociable chap and that's what makes him so popular with the Elwood people. The tin plate factory, which normally employed a thousand people, has been closed for four months and that has had a telling effect on business. Elwood has three theatres, all running, but the managers have all got their fingers crossed.

Old-Time Showmen

During the days when they had natural gas, Kokomo grew clear beyond the city limits on the assumption that the gas supply would never run out, but it did, and now she has taken her belt up several notches, but she is a right sizable town yet.

The city is all dolled up with flags and bunting and welcome signs for the state American Legion convention. The boys are coming in to paint the town. Somehow the boys all turn painters after every war; we probably would be a painter ourself had we ever been in a war, but the only war we were ever in was when we came home one night singing "Sweet Adeline."

J. E. Whitley operates the Colonial theatre and has been in the business for 20 years. He has seen them come and go, and our guess is that he will see more of them come and go, for he knows every man, woman and kid in the town and can tell you whose dog it is a block away, and you can't beat that kind of a theatre manager. We like him, for he's a 100 per cent guy.

The Indiana, Sipe and Isis belong to the Gregory circuit and are being managed by Mr. S. W. Neal, who is also an oldtime showman. The Indiana is closed temporarily for repairs, and that reminds us, we are going to close this week's colyum for repairs right now.

Industry Brightens With Assurance of Money-Making Films

Confidence in increased grosses and profits are being expressed by leading executives in show business. The position of this industry, always affected by the quality of its marketable film, has become highly optimistic in the last week. This feeling has been created by the new Paramount program which will bring to the screens a line of definitely saleable pictures.

The Four Marx Brothers in "Horse Feathers;" Harold Lloyd in "Movie Crazy;" Marlene Dietrich in "Blonde Venus," a Von Sternberg production; "A Farewell to Arms" with Helen Hayes, Gary Cooper and Adolphe Menjou; Maurice Chevalier's "Love Me Tonight" with Jeanette MacDonald, directed by Rouben Mamoulian; "The Big Broadcast;" and "No Man of Her Own" with Clark Gable and Miriam Hopkins, will no doubt turn the tide to successful financial returns everywhere.

Trading between theatre owners and this leading picture company is most active, and contracts are being rapidly arranged in almost every part of the country. All indications point to a most profitable fall and winter season, and belief is expressed in all

JOB FOR EXPERTS

EVEN in the motion picture business when a contract is to be drawn it is customary to call a lawyer, and even the most versatile of executives will readily consult a doctor if they have a tummy ache, a garage if the tenth cylinder does not fire, a tax expert if the treasury department gets quarrelsome. But it is impossible to find any person in this industry what or whom or where-so-ever who will not: First, give you an expert opinion on any motion picture anytime; second, who does not know all there is to know about writing advertising, always!

On four distinct occasions this season the writer of this page has had occasion to discuss outstanding copy performances with members of the advertising staffs of as many motion picture companies, commenting on certain outstanding jobs. In three of these instances the accompanying comment from the producer of the copy was, almost verbatim: "I wish you could have heard me trying to sell it—the higher-ups were afraid because it was different." In the fourth instance the proofs had been adroitly concealed from executive attention higher up.

Type, typography, color, printing and copy writing are quite enough for one man to know about. Lay judgments are likely to be about as valuable as a bachelor's advice to nursing mothers. Motion picture display advertising is looking better. This is possibly because it is not suffering too much supervision from above.

NO HARM IN ASKING

A DELICIOUS Broadway naivete is betrayed by an editorial in the current issue of "Equity," the magazine organ of the Actors' Equity Association, which ventures to suggest that the Federal Reserve System should extend credit to established theatrical producers to finance new plays, and thereby increase employment.

"Equity" makes argument that while it may be admitted that theatrical production is speculative, farming, "dependent on the vagaries of unpredictable weather, at the mercy of insects and blights," and unstable prices for products, is speculative, too.

When there shall be found in the halls of Congress a "Broadway bloc" controlling some fair number of votes comparable to the number of voting farmers, Equity will find the politicians and forces of government just as excited about the first night reviews as the crop reports and as solicitous about players and producers as they now profess to be for the horny handed sons of the soil behind the plow. But until then——.

IF POISON, IT'S SLOW

AFTER a season of reading the expressions of sundry alarmists who hold that the motion picture has put our civilization in the middle of the highway to Perdition, one is set to wondering about the status and condition of a certain good woman of Zanesville, Ohio, who has kept faithful fan record of seeing 4,350 motion picture programs since 1903—which was the year the photodrama was born. Our correspondent finds that this super-customer, Mrs. J. G. Lemert, appears in normal health and vigor, that she is a successful American mother with two grown children, and betrays no outward symptoms of the corrosive effect sometimes attributed to the films. The excellence of her status is indicated by active membership in the Order of the Eastern Star, the Legion Auxiliary and Roas Shrine No. 8. The best picture she can remember was "Hell's Hinges," with W. S. Hart, of the 1915-16 vintage. She has gone to Redwood City in California to visit a daughter, and has expressed no desire to look backstage at Hollywood.

POINTING WITH PRIDE

THE publication this week by Coward-McCann of his novel entitled "A New York Tempest" reminds us that in Mr. Manuel Komroff, the artist and novelist, we have probably the most distinguished alumnus of motion picture business journalism. He has received signal recognition in the higher strata of the world of letters, and has in the last few years produced a succession of best sellers of rank, notable among them "Coronet," a two-volume novel. Mr. Komroff served a novitiate with type and words as a minor member of the staff of Film Daily under the late Mr. Joseph Dannenberg, and as a contemporary of Motion Picture Daily's Mr. Maurice Kann. Mrs. Komroff is Elinor M. Barnard, formerly of London, celebrated internationally for her able work in watercolor.

HOWARD FITCH TURRILL

THE first generation of the motion picture is passing rapidly. This week we record the death of Mr. Howard Fitch Turrill who for some two full decades was a faithful worker in various departments of motion picture endeavor, beginning in the dim days when the Mutual Film Corporation officed with the ancient Reliance studios in Union Square, just at the dawn of the feature era in 1912. He came of an historic Connecticut family. He brought to his motion picture work a competency and a code to which he steadfastly adhered all his life, a contributor to the good that is known of this industry.

the dramatization of an idea by means of modern dynamic photographic art

INCREASINGLY the camera and photography come to the service of American industrial and commercial merchandising.

The motion picture, a 100 per cent photographic industry, may well observe with emulative interest the extraordinarily competent use of photography in other lines of selling activity.

The picture on this page is one of the most striking contemporary examples — from a newspaper advertisement prepared by Batten, Barton, Durstine & Osborn for the Central Republic Bank and Trust Company of Chicago, selling the importance of that city as a rail center and the fact that a majority of the big roads bank with Central Republic.

Motion Picture Herald's "Still of the Month" page is maintained for the appreciation and encouragement of photography in all departments of motion picture activity, from production to selling. For twenty years the advertising men of the motion picture have been struggling with preoccupied, and variously indifferent, directors-on-the-lot for better selling stills. The "Still of the Month" page in Motion Picture Herald during the last year has definitely recorded progress.

RETURN TO BILLBOARDS PLANNED BY PRODUCERS AND EXHIBITORS

Several Companies Prepare to Launch Campaigns in Line With Growing Note of Optimism in General Business

Steadily Increasing Number of Motion Picture Accounts Is Noted; Reactions of Circuit and Theatre Ad Men Rev'w'd

There is rapidly accumulating evidence that the motion picture industry will assume once more its position of prominence among the large users of billboard advertising space across the nation.

The spreading note of general business optimism is lending impetus to the industry's movement back to the billboards and is transforming nebulous plans into definite early action. Producers see in the billboards a show medium adapted to serve them in re-establishing some of the partially eclipsed prestige of the industry's big names, both corporate and individual. And exhibitors are looking upon the explosive messages of the boards with the somewhat wistful hope that in them lies the much-sought excitement that will awaken the public from its theatre-going lethargy.

Chiefly Institutional

The bulk of this billboard advertising, in particular that of the producers, would be institutional advertising. Many of the large producers and producer-exhibitors have decided upon a return to billboard advertising in volume for some time, and have been awaiting only the auspicious moment. Believing they have read the signs aright, several are whipping their campaigns into final shape, and one company, at least, is already entered upon the first stages of an extensive national drive.

Outdoor Advertising, Inc., one of the largest renters of billboards to the amusement industry, reports a steadily increasing number of motion picture accounts, and recently established a new service department to cooperate with amusement advertisers exclusively. Wayne Pierson, former motion picture advertising executive, has been placed in charge of this department, which coordinates the facilities of 1,175 poster plants throughout the country. No similar department has been maintained before by any outdoor advertising concern.

The first large producing company to embark on a new campaign this season is Paramount Publix which, with several strikingly original boards already in preparation in Brooklyn, N. Y., plans eventually to conduct a national outdoor campaign of significant scope in New York, Detroit, Boston, Chicago, San Francisco, Los Angeles, St. Louis and Philadelphia.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, one of the largest users of billboard space, is continuing its heavy use of paper in advertising its more important releases. Pictures designed for long runs, such as "'Trader Horn," last year and "Hell Divers," "Grand Hotel" and "Strange Interlude," this year, have been given extensive outdoor billing, in charge of W. R. Ferguson and Phil Di Angeles. Metro has also employed the boards to a lesser extent for an occasional picture such as "Tarzan." Mr. Ferguson, MGM outdoor advertising manager, is convinced, he says, of the benefits.

In the theatre field, advertising executives are planning increased use for both program and institutional advertising. In the larger metropolitan centers, circuits are coming to rely upon them for their neighborhood theatres because of the cost of newspaper space on the basis of large city wide circulations. In New York, RKO, Publix, Loew's and Fox Theatres have several thousand boards under contract.

Oscar A. Doob, advertising manager of Loew's Theatres, frequently uses boards nationally for announcement of price and policy changes and similar institutional messages. Jack Hess, of Paramount Publix, favors them for neighborhood theatres and for long run pictures, as does Gabe Yorke of Fox. Robert Sisk of RKO believes the boards well adapted to getting off terse messages and for pictures of unusual theme, such as "Bring 'Em Back Alive." Skouras Brothers recently revoked an order against use of billboards by Fox West Coast theatres in and about San Francisco. The order, issued in reduction of operating costs, was revoked after having been in effect less than two months.

Mr. Pierson of Outdoor Advertising, points out that there has been no increase in billboard rental rates during the past nine years, although the circulation of the boards has increased tremendously with the large increases in metropolitan population. The advertising rates of other media, he said, are increased with every increase in circulation.

The attention commanding properties of the big sheets is demonstrated again and again, Mr. Pierson said. He cited the case of a Palmolive advertisement illustrated with a picture of a mother and child. Within a few weeks, he said, hundreds of thousands of letters were received calling attention to the fact that the mother was not wearing a wedding ring.

Of the reasons advanced for the decline in the use of billboards by the industry in the past 18 months to two years, virtually all were these: decline in the quality of pictures and restriction of advertising budgets.

With the decline in picture quality and the consequent drop in roadshowing and shortening of runs, showmen became unwilling to undertake the expense of long term billboard contracts, many theatre advertising men declared.

Some advertising executives contended that no more than a normal reduction of theatre billboard advertising has been made. Billboards, these said, are inevitably the first to go under the pressure of enforced advertising reductions.

Other factors cited were the constantly improving advertising facilities of newspapers and radio. Most theatre advertisers hold that for all practical first run purposes the daily newspaper is best adapted to fulfill the theatre's requirements, particularly with the recent amalgamation of large city newspapers.

R. B. Wilby, Publix-Wilby Theatres, Atlanta, Ga.: "We are using billboard advertising only to a small extent. From its very nature, it is flashy advertising, valuable for attractions of the type which George Schaefer has defined as 'I Got It' shows. Since most of our current attractions require considerably more than mere announcing, we are spending most of our money in the newspapers."

Lease Toronto Boards To Other Advertisers

The one big splash of 24-sheets in the past six months at Toronto was for "Grand Hotel" at the Royal Alexandra. The big posters are to be found regularly on rear or side wall spaces of four leading theatres, the Imperial, Shea's, Tivoli and Loew's. However, various other theatres are actually selling their wall space to other enterprises. A number of suburban theatres are using selected spots for 8-sheets. Some use of 24-sheets is also being made by film distributors. Occasionally Manager William Brady of the Madison theatre, outstanding independent, uses 20 to 25 stands.

RESEARCH COUNCIL BEGINS TASK OF IMPROVING STUDIO STANDARDS

Academy Unit Under Zanuck Starting Study of Increasing Maintenance Costs Due to Patching Reels Together

This week launches the work of an important new division of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences in Hollywood, the recently formed Research Council. This organization takes over all important technical research and study formerly handled by a number of separate committees. Headed by Darryl Zanuck, who presides over the production activities of the Warner Brothers plant, its membership includes leading figures in various branches of motion picture activities. These, in turn, will call upon the best brains in all lines to solve the particular problems as they come up, and report back to the Council. Exhibitors and distributors, exchange operators, theatre projectionists, manufacturers of all kinds of theatre and studio equipment will be among those whose advice and support will be sought by the Council from time to time in its business of improving the technical and artistic standards of the motion picture. Then, through the machinery and membership of the Academy, the results will be properly disseminated to all interested persons after being formally set forth by the Council.

Under Mr. Zanuck's chairmanship, following are the members of the new Council: Irving Thalberg and B. P. Schulberg, ex-officio, as Academy officers; C. E. Sullivan of RKO Radio, representative of the producers' branch; Adolphe Menjou, representing the actors' branch; E. H. Griffith, directors' branch; Carey Wilson, writers' branch; Max Ree, art directors' section; Virgil Miller, cinematographers' section, and these representatives of the studios designated: William Holman, Columbia; H. A. McDonnell, Educational; E. H. Hansen, Fox; Douglas Shearer, MGM; Franklin Hansen, Paramount; Carl Dreher, Radio; Hans Weeren, Tiffany; A. M. Brentinger, United Artists; C. Roy Hunter, Universal; Nathan Levinson, Warner-First National.

Several important matters will be taken up immediately by the Council. An investigation will be launched to study the increasing maintenance costs in all film exchanges, due to mutilation of the Academy standard release print by projectionists who patch two reels together during the running of a show, cut them apart afterwards and return them to the exchanges. At the same time a study will be made of changes in theatre equipment since the advent of sound pictures. An effort will be made to devise a method for more exact changeovers between reels so as to keep dialogue and music running smoothly. Consideration also will be given to the very complex problem of the length of reels, which has become much more of a difficulty since sound was added.

Experts under the Council's jurisdiction will proceed with efforts to develop a 35 mm. camera sufficiently silent in operation that studios may do away with cumbersome "blimps" now used to house the machines and prevent mechanical noises from reaching the microphone. Considerable progress already has been made along this line over the crude housings used in the early days of sound pictures, commonly known then as bungalows or iceboxes, but even the best of the present "blimps" are far from satisfactory in many ways.

Methods of salvaging an enormous annual waste of film stock used in recording the sound track also will be worked out. The ordinary practice at present is to record one narrow sound track on a strip of 35 mm. stock, the remainder of the area being waste. "Split film" recording, by which at least two sound tracks can be put upon the same strip of film, on opposite sides, and various other possible adaptations of such methods will be given scientific and economic consideration by the Council and its designated investigators in the field.

The use of colors in costumes, draperies, furniture, wall coverings and the like for black and white photography is another matter which will have early attention with a view to standardization. The best pastel tints to avoid halation that results if actual white is used for such purposes as dress shirts, wedding dresses, curtains, etc., will be determined in this connection. Economies may be effected by studios and by actors, as well, if all agree, through Academy negotiations, upon certain acceptable tints which will become standard.

Another highly important subject up for immediate consideration is the matter of the brightness of a picture on a theatre screen, as seen by the audience. Many variable factors enter into this problem, such as the original ilumination on the set, the illumination used in projectors, kind and strength of the light source and the quality and condition of screens. It will be the aim of the Council to aid theatre operators in obtaining the best possible projection and picture illumination so that the public may see photography at its very best.

The Research Council will be prepared to take up all matters which involve improvements in the art and technique of the motion picture, whether it is the direct concern of production, distribution or exhibition. Already the predecessors of this Council—the Academy Technical bureau and the Producers-Technicians Committee—have accomplished important results, such as the new aperture standard, the Recording School of Instruction, and a score or more of published treatises on technical subjects. Having in the new Council the advice and resources of all branches of production, and the consultant counsel of other departments of the industry, real progress and improvement may be anticipated along many lines, and, with the improvements, substantial economies.

Developments such as the standard form artists' contract, the producer-writer code of practices, the anti-raiding agreement, the conciliation machinery and now, the new research council, are evidence sufficient that no matter what Hollywood may be charged with, the production community, through the Academy, is coordinating its efforts in every conceivable manner—that cooperation is its watchword, rather than competition. It is proper to say that slowly but surely the unparalleled creative resources of the production community are being pooled for the benefit of those engaged in production, distribution and exhibition and—which is most important—the man who lays his money down at the box office window.

Method for More Exact Changeovers Sought; Silent Camera Doing Away With "Blimps" Is Another Objective of Study

Iowa and Virginia Business Improves

General business improvement of 25 per cent has been reported from a number of cities in Iowa in the past week. The gain was marked at Fort Dodge. Theatre receipts of $1,500 to $1,600 were noted at Burlington as against a previous average of $1,100 to $1,200. Even greater increase was reflected at Dubuque.

A. H. Blank said the product for the new season appears better than in years. He is keeping his theatres open. He operates 32 Central States houses.

From Virginia Beach, Va., come reports that business is definitely on the rise in the seashore and river resort. Not more than half a dozen houses in the state are affected by the admission tax. About 50 theatres in Virginia are closed, but a number of new enterprises have been chartered.

Loew-RKO-Warner Pool at Memphis Dropped

The Memphis theatre pool of Loew's, RKO and Warner Brothers has been abandoned after four months of operation. All will resume individual operation when the theatres revert to their original owners, within a fortnight. Two reasons given for dropping the pool are that Loew's, handling joint management and operation, objected to carrying that burden, and distributors were dissatisfied with the returns.

Under the plan Loew's Strand and Palace were closed, the Warner became the de luxe house, Loew's State went to a split week picture policy, as did the RKO Orpheum.

Seeks Lower Film Duties

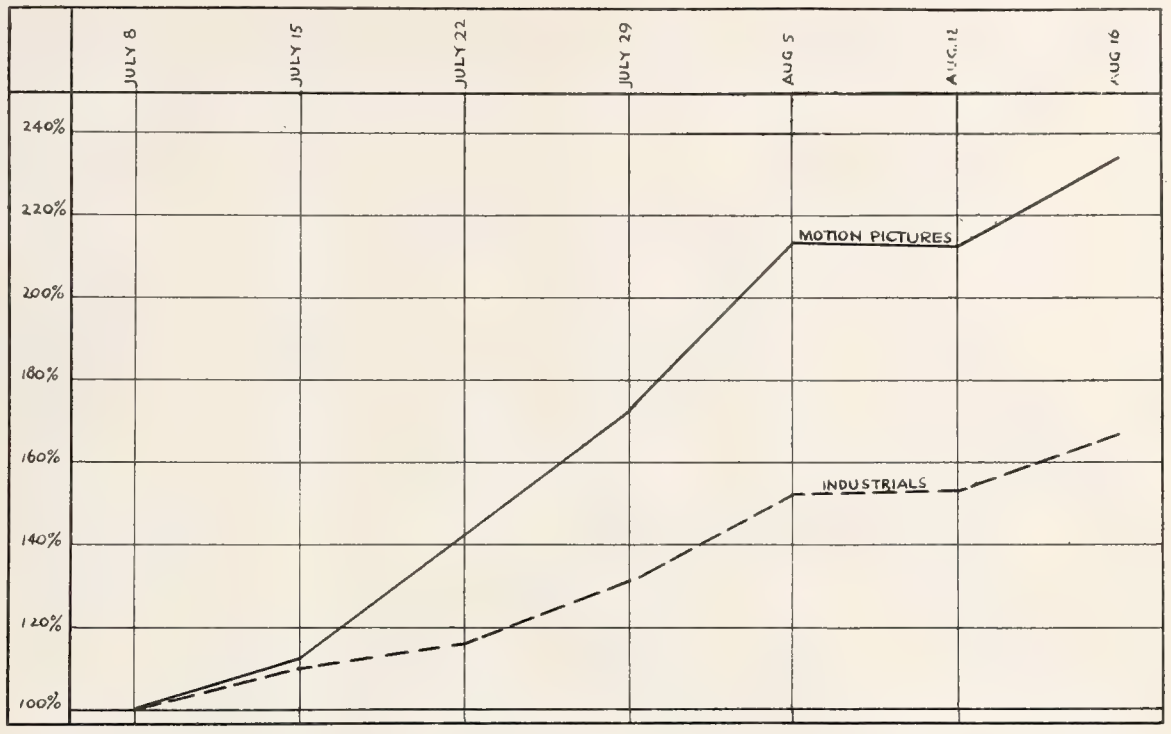
Movietonews, Inc., has filed an application with the United States tariff commission at Washington for an investigation of the present tariff rate on developed negative and positive newsreel film, for the purpose of obtaining a decrease in duty.

18 INDUSTRY ISSUES APPRECIATE $111,356,875 IN VALUE IN 6 WEEKS

Increase of $115,455,500 from Low of Year Is Recorded on New York Exchange, to $254,420,000, on Tuesday

by THE ANALYST

Stock issues of 18 motion picture and allied equipment companies listed on the New York Stock Exchange appreciated $111,356,875 in value during the "bull" market of the past six weeks, increasing $115,455,500 from the low of the year. The market value of the group totaled $138,965,000 at the year's low and $143,063,625 on July 8, when the current upward movement began; it jumped to $254,420,000 last Tuesday.



Although the rise from the low of July 8 was in most cases a steady upward trek, several issues showed sensational gains. Loew's common doubled in value, from 14 on July 8 to 28¼ on August 16, while the preferred hit 68 on Tuesday, as compared with 39 six weeks ago. Warner Brothers preferred rose 9 points during the six weeks; Universal Pictures preferred gained 8; Paramount, 4; Columbia, 5½; Eastman Kodak, 18¼; Keith-Albee-Orpheum, 13¼, and Metro preferred, 4⅜.

Trade bellwethers point to an industrial revival in the fall, already foreshadowed by daily reports of resumption of activities in many branches of the country's industrial structure, and the picture business, according to Wall Street observers, is expected to be one of the first to reflect the end of the so-called depression. The gains in film issues were enjoyed by every issue without exception, as follows:

Stockholders of the motion picture companies made many millions of dollars in paper profits since the current rise in security and commodity prices started, and with reports of business improvement pouring in from all parts of the country and Wall Street getting set for another real "bull" market, more millions in value are expected to accrue to film stocks and bonds, which played such an active role in the midsummer stock recovery. Reacting favorably to a marked upward economic trend in the film business, the market value of a representative group of five motion picture stocks rose 134 per cent during the six weeks' "bull" market, making considerably more progress than a group of "blue chip" industrial stocks which increased 67 per cent in value. A comparison of the stock prices and increases of both groups during the six weeks, which follows, is based on the average weekly prices of 30 representative industrials selected by Dow, Jones, and of Fox Film A, Loew's common, Paramount, RKO and Warner common, representing the film group.

The sensational rise in prices and valuations of motion picture securities has been a highlight of the "bull" movement in the stock market of the past six weeks. In the chart above, the appreciation in market value of a group of film stocks is compared with the increase by leading industrials. The comparison is based on the prices of July 8 when the movement began, this price representing 100 per cent. It includes a weekly average of a group of 30 "blue chip" industrials selected by Dow, Jones and Company, as compared with a group of motion picture stock leaders, including Loew's common, Fox Film A, RKO, Paramount and Warners common.

BULLETIN: The upward movement of motion picture stocks and bonds continued on Wednesday sending some issues to new high ground for the year and in spite of a market for the day which was off slightly. Paramount was one of the big features of the day, closing at 7, an increase of 1⅛, Loew's gained 2½ points on a close of 30¾. RKO gained ⅞ of a point, closing at 5⅞ after reaching 6½ earlier in the day. Fox Film "A," Warner Bros. common and Consolidated Film each showed gain. Picture issues in the bond market responded accordingly.

Sharp rises also took place in bond issues of motion picture companies, for which an increasing investment demand was in evidence. Loew's and Paramount were the highlights, with Keith 6's '46 following closely. Paramount-Broadway Corporation 5½ s gained 20 points during the six weeks period and 22 points since the low of the year. Warner and other issues were well taken at steadily rising levels, as illustrated in the accompanying table:

MOTION PICTURE BONDS	Low of Year	Low on July 8	Close Aug. 16	—Pt. Gains— Low of Year to Aug. 16	Low July 8 to Aug. 16
Bond
Gen. Thea. 6s '40.....	1	1	3⅝	2⅝	2⅝
Keith 6s '46.....	24	24	40	16	16
Loew's 6s '41.....	64	70½	86	20	18½

Para.-Fam.-L. 6s '47.....	13	14½	33	20	18½
Para.-Pub. 5½s '50.....	10⅛	11½	29	18⅞	17½
Pathe 7s '37.....	49	49	58½	9½	9½
Warner Bros. 6s '39.....	9¼	15½	25	15¾	9½

Increased attendance at theatres noted by Paramount, RKO and other large circuits was evidently reflected in the motion picture stock market, and the subsequent upward reaction of prices of all film issues immediately made itself felt directly in the business by lending moral support to a general feeling of optimism. Paramount reported business in recent weeks well up over the June and July levels and exhibitors in various sections have been heartened by booming wheat and cotton and the reopening of factories all over the country.

RISE OF MARKET VALUES

One of the remarkable features of the "bull" market in stock issues during the past six weeks is the extent to which the market value of several "blue chip" picture stocks was doubled, tripled and in some cases nearly quadrupled by the rising movement in prices. A graphic picture of the new movement and its relation to previous market conditions in film issues is shown in the following recapitulation of stock prices and valuations:

UPTURN STARTED, SAYS WALL STREET JOURNAL

Wall Street Journal, in commenting on economics of the picture business, said this week:

"Motion picture companies are now starting their annual fall upturn with the release of the new program of films and the return of the public to the theatres. Box office receipts of the large Broadway houses have shown a marked increase with the showing of new films. Paramount's new Marx Brothers picture brought the gross of the Rialto up to $50,000 for the week, against $12,000 weekly during the July slump.

"With the many economies in force, lower film costs, lower theatre rentals and lower salaries, there is an opportunity for the large film producers to get out of red ink by the end of the year, particularly if there is an improvement in general business."

E. C. Grainger and Kupper Head Fox Sales Divisions

Fox Film Corporation has divided the United States into two distribution divisions in a change of sales policy. E. C. Grainger, who has been handling circuit sales, becomes eastern division manager, in charge of all sales east of the Mississippi. William J. Kupper, formerly assistant to James R. Grainger, general sales manager, is named western division manager.

MGM May End Foreign Versions

M-G-M will discontinue all foreign language production upon completing its ten foreign versions now in work as a protest against quota laws and other restrictions on American film exporting, Arthur Loew, foreign director of M-G-M, announced. Unless the quota laws are changed, he said, Metro would withdraw from the foreign language production field permanently.

The attitude of American producers is that foreign countries should let exhibitors decide what to do about imported films rather than have the governments put restrictions on outside product, Mr. Loew said. M-G-M would like to continue to do business abroad but refuses to donate its money to foreign governments. The big problem confronting the American companies, according to Mr. Loew, is whether foreign countries can dictate to them.

"If we permit them to dictate to us this year, what can we expect next," he asks. "Foreign countries will probably tell us how much to pay their artists and carpenters if we permit them to tell us how to do things abroad."

In the last two years M-G-M has invested between $4,000,000 and $5,000,000 in foreign production on the Coast, Mr. Loew said. Hundreds of foreign players will be thrown out of work within the next few weeks, and will not be put back on the payroll until the foreign quotas are changed to their former status, he added.

According to Mr. Loew, the United States is expected to take a definite stand against stringent legislation on imports.

Paper Protests Fining of Exhibitor Opening Sunday

Sharp criticism against the discrimination practiced by local authorities in fining George H. Bubb, operator of the Rialto theatre in Canton, Pa., for opening on Sunday, has been registered editorially by The Canton Sentinel, local daily paper. The paper points out a general disregard of the blue laws of 1794, and terms discriminatory the fact that Mr. Bubb, in his theatre operation, is the only violator prosecuted.

Skouras, Warners Working on Deal

Spyros Skouras and Warner Brothers are negotiating a deal whereby Skouras would take over 15 Warner theatres in Wisconsin on a pooling arrangement for a trial period of six months, and if the arrangement proves satisfactory at that time a long-term deal would be effected for this block and other of the Warner theatre properties. The houses would be operated in conjunction with the Fox Midwesco circuit, which Mr. Skouras now operates with other divisions of the Fox theatre interests.

Final Papers in Cleveland Zoning Suit Still Unsigned

Settlement papers of the Cleveland exhibitor suit in which the independent exhibitors charged producers and distributors with monopoly in restraint of trade through unfair protection policies, are still unsigned, although it is understood that all details have been satisfactorily concluded.

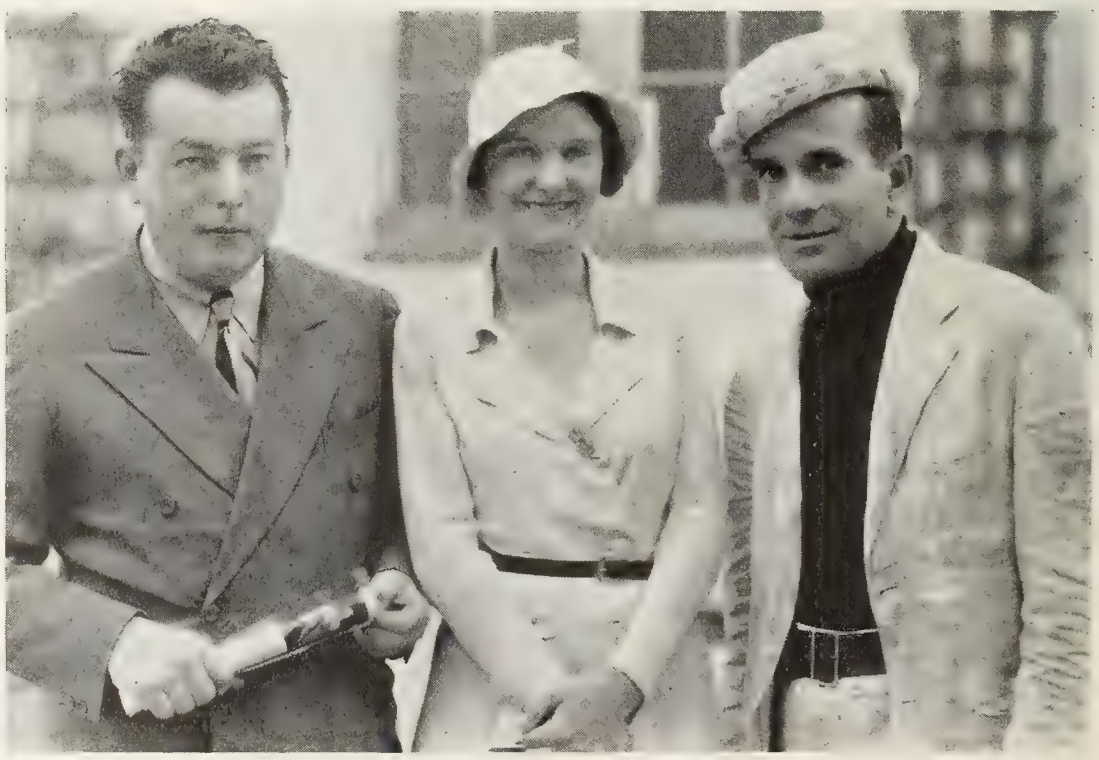
THE CAMERA REPORTS

EXHIBITORS HEAR PARAMOUNT HEAD. Members of the MPTO of Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware in session in Philadelphia, at which the principal speaker was Adolph Zukor. Following Mr. Zukor's address, the executive committee adopted a resolution thanking him for the encouragement and enlightenment in his remarks, which "bespoke good will and optimism" for the motion picture industry.

AT OPENING. Of MGM's latest starring vehicle for Norma Shearer, "Strange Interlude," adapted from the Theatre Guild success by Eugene O'Neill. Shown are Sid Grauman, at whose Chinese theatre the picture was reproduced; Miss Shearer, and Irving Thalberg, MGM production executive and husband of the star.

LONG SHOT. Fetching in both foreground and background. Colleen Moore, for years one of the silent screen's biggest money-making stars, who has returned to pictures as an MGM featured player. This is a most recent study of Miss Moore, and was made on the grounds of her California home.

IN DEATH'S SHADOW. Billie Burke, widow of Florenz Ziegfeld, working in a scene for "Bill of Divorcement" at the RKO Radio studio. She is shown with John Barrymore, Director George Cukor and staff.



FIRST BIRTHDAY. (Above) Soon to be celebrated by this child of screen celebrities. She is Barbara Bebe, daughter of Bebe Daniels and Ben Lyon. Mother, by the way, will return to the screen soon in First National's "Silver Dollar."

NEW FILM FACE. (Left) William Daly, whom Universal has recruited from the New York stage. He will make his first screen portrayal in "Air Mail," to which Gloria Stuart and Lilian Bond have also been assigned.

REFRESHED. So we may assume, at least, for here is Ruth Chatterton, Warner star, as she returned the other day on the Bremen from a vacation in Europe, scheduled for an early return to work.

GENTLEWOMAN OF THE PRESS. Ethlyn Hayden, British newspaperwoman, who reported the Olympic Games for London papers, as she visited the United Artists studio. She is shown with Director Lewis Milestone and Al Jolson, the latter appearing costumed for his role as a big city vagabond in "The New Yorker." Milestone's current production is "Rain."

SUPPORTS BOY STAR. (Above) Jane Parker, one of the newcomers to the screen, who has been cast in a featured role of MGM's "Father and Sons," which is a starring vehicle for Jackie Cooper.

AIRING THEMSELVES. Warner folk who greeted 105 CBS stations the other night—Bob Goldstein, Patricia Ellis, Joe E. Brown, Lloyd Bacon, Jack L. Warner (who was the M. C.), Edward G. Robinson, Mervyn LeRoy, Bebe Daniels, Ken Murray, Paul Muni, Glenda Farrell and David Manners.

BUFFOON. (Right) In his own right, rather than in that of the old clothes man. He is the prim, well established Charley Chase, whose enduring brand of humor in Hal Roach comedies merits this notice.

BROADWAY STAR GOES FILMWARD. As Frank Morgan, star of such successes as "Topaze" and "The Band Wagon," left New York for the RKO Radio studios to portray Ashton Wolfe, French detective, in "Secrets of the French Police." He is shown receiving the good wishes of his friend, Earl Carroll, proprietor of the droll and pulchritudinous "Vanities."

ON DECK. Figuratively as well as literally, for with the new season approaching, E. W. Hammons, president of Educational, returned from his sojourn abroad. He is shown with Mrs. Hammons on the Olympic.

TO TALK OR NOT TO TALK

Professional Story Tellers of Japanese Picture Houses Strike Against Sound Films

The benshi—professional story teller who explains the development of theme of the motion picture as it unfolds upon the screen—presents a problem to the industry in Japan that is little closer to solution today than when the transition from silent to sound productions first began.

Strikes of the organized benshi have cost the more extensive circuits very large sums of money. The effects have been felt also in two other directions: first, there have been fewer than a dozen Japanese dialogue pictures made since sound pictures first started; second, distribution of American pictures is handicapped by benshi interference.

Three Speakers on Payroll

The motion picture always has been exhibited in Japan with the aid of the benshi. This professional speaker, in the tradition of the film theatre, has become as necessary to the Japanese patrons' entertainment as the orchestra or organ or piano was to the American in the day of the silent picture. There are at least three speakers on the payroll of each theatre. If talkers make headway in Japan these men will be out of work. They are an organized body and are fighting to retain their jobs. To dismiss an employee in that country is a difficult matter requiring "heart balm" with numerous other conditions attached to the dismissal.

With the exception of theatres in the six principal cities, the programs all are mixed, made up of a Japanese silent picture and an American or European production. Unless an exhibitor can obtain a steady supply of Japanese talkers he cannot afford to install sound equipment, and he cannot get the pictures because of the benshi complication. More than 90 per cent of all the motion picture theatres in the Empire are owned or controlled by three Japanese producing companies and these concerns have neither the courage nor the finances to make a wholesale change to talker apparatus.

The most difficult task of the American distributor has been to induce exhibitors to install sound equipment. The electric companies do not maintain a sales staff in the territory and the American distributors must sell the equipment for the electrics if they are to have showrooms in which to exhibit their product.

After the theatre does install sound equipment it has the problem of making the English dialogue picture understandable without the aid of the benshi. Most theatres continue to use the professional story teller, reducing the volume of sound sufficiently to permit his voice to be heard above the screen sound. This is the most common method but it has proved unsatisfactory because the picture dialogue, while not loud enough to be audible to the audience, nevertheless is sufficiently loud to destroy the best effects of the benshi's story.

Some Superimpose Titles

Some distributors are now importing superimposed Japanese titles in most of their pictures. This practice has been found helpful though not a perfect solution. The system works out fairly well in the large cities, where the patrons consist primarily of students and upper class residents, but when the pictures reach the smaller places, most of the people cannot read fast enough to catch the meaning of the titles.

There has been only one American picture dubbed in Japanese. This has by far been given the heartiest endorsement in Japan. The picture was Fox's "The Man Who Came Back," starring Janet Gaynor and Charles Farrell.

In the general economic situation of the present, all companies have been adopting the least expensive method. Whether superimposed titled pictures will draw audiences in normal times, or whether productions will have to be dubbed for best results, is to be determined when normal times reappear.

Another factor in the situation is the fact that Japan is possibly the most competitive film market in the world for American companies. The five larger American distributors compete for approximately 15 per cent of the entire Japanese film rental business, the 85 per cent going to Japanese films.

"K.D." Is Elected Photoplay Chief

Kathryn Dougherty, for many years treasurer of Photoplay Magazine, was announced this week as the new president and publisher filling the vacancy resulting from the death of James R. Quirk. She is widely known in the world of the motion picture as "K. D." and as a close associate of Mr. Quirk through the years of the rise of Photoplay.

Miss Dougherty continues as treasurer of the concern and takes on her new duties in execution of a succession program evolved under the advice of Mr. Quirk some months past when medical reports made provision of the sort appear discreet. The election of the new president is by action of the board of directors, which includes Robert M. Eastman, Frederick Secord and Edwin C. Crawford, in addition to Miss Dougherty and John C. Toumey, her husband, who succeeds Mr. Quirk on the board.

No successor to Mr. Quirk as editor of Photoplay is being named. Presently a statement will issue from Miss Dougherty's office naming a board of editors, made up of members of the editorial staff of Photoplay now with the organization.

Warner Promotes Dover

William Dover has been named manager of studio personnel of Warner Brothers on the Coast, and will handle the engaging of directors, writers and artists in the signing of long-term contracts, directing dealings with all agents. He is taking over former activities of Rufus LeMaire except those that Maxwell Arno will perform as casting director.

75 Cent Quarterly Paid by Eastman

A quarterly dividend of 75 cents on common and the regular quarterly distribution of $1.50 on preferred has been declared by Eastman Kodak Company. Both dividends are payable October 1 to stock of record September 3. The two preceding quarterly dividends this year were $1.25 each, the extra quarterly disbursement of 75 cents a share, which had been paid for some years, having been omitted at the February meeting. Dividend of 75 cents places the stock on a $3 annual basis.

William G. Stuber, president, in a statement said:

"At the February meeting, when the extra dividend was omitted, the directors concluded that until business conditions substantially improved dividends should not be paid unless earned. Although current earnings on the common stock are somewhat in excess of the dividend declared, the directors nevertheless feel that the sound financial position of the company must be maintained and that the declaration of any larger dividend at this time would be unwise.

"While earnings during the balance of the year depend largely on general business conditions, it is expected that a dividend on the common stock of at least 75 cents will be declared out of earnings in the last quarter. If that occurs, the company will have declared common stock dividends, out of earnings, aggregating at least $4 a share during 1932."

Current earnings of Kodak are running behind a year ago, when they totaled $13,408,785, equivalent, after preferred dividends, to $5.78 a common share. However, in recent months there has been a distinct pickup noted in the company's European business. The Stuttgart, Germany, plant of the Nagel works, is operating overtime. The Nagel property was purchased last year by Kodak to round out its line of cameras. Kodak has two other plants in Germany, two in England, and one each in Canada, France, Hungary and Australia.

At the close of last December, when the last report was submitted, Eastman had net current assets of $61,354,983. Current assets total $76,604,082, of which $16,321,217 was cash and $10,789,568 was marketable bonds and stocks. The remainder of current assets consisted of accounts and bills receivable of $15,951,456 and inventories valued at $33,541,840. Current liabilities totaled $15,249,099, made up of accounts payable of $6,644,683, notes payable of $4,000,000 and dividends payable of $4,604,415. The current ratio was 5 to 1.

184 Films to Be Released In Germany During 1932-33

The German Exhibitors Association estimates that 184 features will be released in the country during the season 1932-33, according to a report of George R. Canty, American trade commissioner in Berlin. Fifty-eight of the films will be from American producers.

Among the German producers Ufa leads with a first series of 20 features scheduled for release. The total figure compares with approximately 250 features released in Germany in 1931-32.

THE GOOD OF THE MOTION PICTURE

Give the Good Points a Boost And the Others Would Vanish, Declares This Woman Exhibitor

The following article is a sterling expression of the wholesome hometown friendship of the interior of our big America, written by an exhibitor who has intimately related her theatre to her community and what it expects of the screen.

Here is significance, a voice of authority, more perhaps in the manner of the speaking than in what is directly said.

It is unlikely that any important executive of production, busy with the weighty affairs between Broadway and Hollywood, can ever come closer to the heart of small town America than in this story of this little theatre out on the Iowa prairies. It reveals considerably more, inferentially, than many columns of statistics and highpower research reports.—TERRY RAMSAYE.

by Mrs. J. Lester Therme

Wampas Theatre, Keosauqua, Iowa

The average picture fan is a clean-minded person with a dream-world complex, and he sees his make-believe world come to life on a silver screen. Pick up any of the motion picture magazines, and you'll see a heart-throb printed there—somebody in a dark corner has found light and inspiration and happiness in "going to the movies."

The fans are the best censors. They know their movie world. They hand their own "bouquets"—they throw their own "brickbats." All the uplift ladies and gentlemen, the greater proportion without doubt sincere in their efforts to better the world, may rest assured that the motion picture is being well taken care of, and by those who keep themselves accurately informed. Did you ever wonder why commissions and committees and other legislative groups are appointed to bring in findings of the evil in current pleasures? If only they would give the good points a boost, the bad would of necessity drop away, as the better part gained in momentum. It would take patience—infinite patience—and painstaking care for the new treatment to get under the skin.

If you would see the good of the motion picture, sit in on the exhibitor's end of it. Also, try taking the theatre from out your city. It's the big friendly stove of your busy downtown world, and it keeps the folksy feeling alive on Main Street, and its cheer and its warmth are one big factor financially to your small city or little town.

What other form of entertainment which gives so much for so little could have stood the test of the years and still hold to its public? Day in, day out, it grinds out a play, a newsreel, a comedy, and we laugh, we sigh, we're breathless over the daring of one, we cry over the ill-fate of another! But always we return for another ticket that we may see one more phase of this ever-changing world and the ever-changing inhabitants thereof. Popularly priced and within the reach of all! And the "one who runs the show" gets first-hand knowledge of human nature, and most of what you glean is fine.

It's the happiest crowd of all that attend the picture shows. They haven't much to spend, but they want their bit of pleasure along with the more prosperous. The fellows that line up roughshod in their work-aday clothes, and file in for the Saturday night show, taking a rear seat, glory be! but they are a loyal bunch! We call them the "back-seat contingent."

Six years we have acted in the capacity of theatre managers of our baby playhouse in a little town of less than a thousand inhabitants. Made money? Not much, hardly any, and lately we're in the red a greater part of the time. All the hard luck that can come to a rural community has been ours with which to contend. But the little spent has helped to keep up the morale of a town torn by bitterness and small hates over financial disappointments. And it has been those who have kept on "coming to the movies" that are the most charitable today. Somewhere they have found a courage to carry on, and the movies have helped.

Children Tell the Story

If you want to get the real works, just meander down the aisle and find a seat with the kids! They'll leave their seats, and snuggle close to you, and get a double reaction from the picture, because they have somebody "big" with whom to share their fun. The Saturday Matinee can crowd your heart with genuine pleasure.

You've never heard a child yet, a boy or a girl, cheer the bad man. It's jeers for the villain and cheers for the hero. One small boy there was, who walked out on his show, his reaction to injustice was so strong, and he wouldn't come back for the happy ending, his "heart was too full of sorrow."

Then there are the "couples." What matter if they do cuddle close in the friendly dark of the theatre. Aren't they seeing themselves and their love in a glorified form on the screen? Many a time has the little play-house served as a "parlor" to a boy with his girl friend, and it's a safe and happy place for them to be. We've offered annual passes to the ministers of the town, but only two ever availed themselves of the privilege. One used to slip in to the last show on Saturday night, just to relax, and get a new angle on his line of vision. And the boys and girls were all his loyal friends.

Sunday Shows and Intrigue

And then one day we came to Part Two of our theatre history as managers, opening our little house for Sunday showings—a decision we did not force on the people until our movie project was doomed to die financially. We blazed a trail for Sunday Shows in the county and the neighboring towns, but how the trail tried to blaze us! We were harangued in the pulpit; we were intrigued against in more ways than one; but we kept the wise and silent tongue, and there are still shows in the baby theatre. Some of the results have been very good. For one thing, it helped to keep many shekels at home where they were needed.

The motion picture has been the outcome of the changing times, not a complex problem that has changed the world. The good old days with the family gathered 'round the home fires or tucked into bed by 9 o'clock, are past, it's true. But in their place it is not an uncommon happening to have the family circle gathered at the movie, their enjoyment in each other just as great as when the "way back home" taffy pullings and appleroastings served as the piece de resistance. It isn't changing hearts; it is a changing world.

One woman there was, who took her share of bettering the world very seriously. She never went to a picture show but that she came away offended. She was a preacher, it was revealed, after she had enlightened a luncheon audience on the "Movie Menace." Very likely she felt it her duty to look for flaws. They are there, to a degree, but not to the extent some would have you believe. Studying the picture product day in, day out, has brought about a very definite decision in our minds that there is a marvelous improvement, and a consistently steady one, in the motion picture.

A woman who "mayors" a small town near here was asked at a social gathering if she had any children. "Oh mercy, no!" was her horrified reply, "I haven't time for children. I'm too busy a woman. This town and the W. C. T. U. take all my time."

The Exhibitor's Problem

If theatre box office receipts depended on the clubwoman, the movies would have died a natural death long ago. The last people in the world to coax into your playhouse with a high-class picture, for which they so often voice a need, are the cultured ladies and gentlemen. To put over an outstanding feature is the hardest work we do and the least profitable.

There is fascination in dealing with the theatre-going public. Showmanship is a talent. Over-advertising quite often creates a resentment, especially when the promise falls short of fulfillment. If an exhibitor could always see his feature for sale before selling, it would save many a headache. Our bargain night, which has been a part of our weekly program for years, is "TAKA CHANCE" night. It is trading sight unseen a program for the minimum admission. And they come—how they come.

And now I come to the end of my story. It's a Big Book which lays open for the movie theatre audience travel, stories educational themes, but it was created first for entertainment values, so let it be first, last and always, entertainment. It's wholesome and inexpensive and truly American, and those who strut its stage, publicity agents to the contrary, are just the nice, normal folk we ourselves claim to be.

CANADA OFFERING BRITISH FILMS FREE ENTRY IN PLACE OF QUOTA

Waiving Duty and Censorship Costs Would Save $288 on Each Feature to British Producers or Exporters

by W. M. GLADISH
Canadian Correspondent

The report of the sub-committee on films, presented this week to the British Imperial Economic Conference at Ottawa, was of a general nature, on progress of British product and standardization of censorship. There was no reference to quotas or other restrictions, but from trustworthy sources came a report that tariff agreements with secret schedules will be adopted for probably five-year terms and terminable thereafter by six months' notice.

For some enthusiasts, the Conference has been proving a flat disappointment with regard to film questions but in certain Canadian quarters there is a mounting belief that the quota battle was won and lost before the parley was formally opened. It is felt that the resolutions of protest which had been previously voiced against any quota proposals by the various independent exhibitor organizations in Canada gave a Canadian viewpoint so definitely that quota proposals were knocked on the head before being advanced, it is declared. Oscar R. Hanson of Toronto, general manager of Allied Exhibitors of Ontario, led the attack of the independents against prospective quota measures.

Would Save $288 a Feature

It is generally agreed among Canadian newspapers and elsewhere in Canada that the agitation did some good in bringing some trade facts to light. In any event, the Canadian Government has apparently followed another tack by offering free entry into the Dominion for British films in lieu of a British film quota. Moreover, there has been a strong suggestion that the Provincial Governments can help the cause along by arranging free censorship for British pictures, all of which would give the British industry a rather substantial advantage in its Dominion holdings. Distributors of United States films in Canada have hinted that such favorable treatment towards British films would be considered acceptable under the circumstances while the same proposals are treated with favor by the independent exhibitors. Officials of the biggest theatre circuit in Canada have maintained a discreet silence in the matter, at least for the reason which is to be found in the well-defined rumor that the return of Famous-Players Canadian Corporation to Canadian control, with a Gaumont-Beaverbrook-Fox background, is "already in the bag" and awaits only formal announcement on the return from Europe of N. L. Nathanson, former managing-director of the company, on or about September 10.

Removal of the Canadian duty on British film imports and free censorship of British films by Canadian provinces would mean an average saving to the British producer or exporter of $288 per feature, the total cost of censoring the usual feature across Canada being $168.

Of further interest is the intimation by Hon. R. J. Manion, Canadian press liaison officer, that technical phases of various subjects before the parley will be further dealt with in the months to come by more or less permanent Empire committees which are to be set up, before the Conference closes, for the working out of details. While the Canadian Minister declined to give specific information regarding this plan, insofar as films or any other subject is concerned, this statement gives rise to the belief that final arrangements for film preferences within the Empire may not be fixed until some time after the Conference itself has become a matter of history. Then, too, there is the absolute certainty that Conference conclusions on any and all points will not become actualities until Imperial and Dominion Parliaments have passed upon the Conference agreements in order to make them law. Therefore, it is difficult to imagine that any definite move affecting British films in Canada or any part of the Empire will be made until October or November at the earliest. Reports and recommendations of the committees appointed by the Conference may not be received in time for Parliamentary consideration this fall and it is therefore possible that some questions may not be decided until well on into 1933.

Brilliant Film Audience

The "Gala Empire Motion Picture Display" of the Imperial Conference, held in the Ottawa Capitol last Friday evening, had all the earmarks, and more, of a world premiere at Hollywood. The British film show attracted a most brilliant gathering of 2,500—mostly statesmen, high government officials, scientists, soldiers, scholars and financiers of the Empire. Outside, thousands stood for hours in the brilliant reflection of the theatre front to watch the arrivals and departures. Lines of "Mounties" kept the spectators in place while traffic officers escorted the limousines of famous personages to the theatre entrance.

The arrival of Their Excellencies, the Governor General and the Countess of Bessborough was signaled by the playing of the national anthem by the scarlet-coated Guards Band, and the show was under way. As for the program itself, England, Canada, New Zealand, Australia, Ireland and Wales were all represented in the nine short subjects while the feature was "The Faithful Heart," a Gainsborough picture presented by Gaumont-British. Truly it was a British night. South Africa, Southern Rhodesia and Newfoundland had also sent short subjects for the gala performance but they were silent films and were not used.

The Imperial Economic Conference, which opened in Ottawa on July 21, will probably be in session until the first or second week in September. Each of the self-governing countries within the British Empire sent official delegates, the countries represented being Great Britain, Irish Free State, Australia, New Zealand, India, South Africa, Newfoundland, Southern Rhodesia and Canada, with the smaller colonies also having representation.

A special sub-committee of the Conference deals with the subject of motion pictures and this body will study the information that has been collected and will hear representations from designated delegates of British countries. No formal announcement is likely to be made regarding the phases of the subject that will be discussed. It has been intimated that trade representatives from foreign countries will not be heard on the floor of the meeting but statistics on foreign film production and trade will be available.

Believe Final Arrangements for Picture Preferences May Not Be Settled Until After Imperial Conference Closes

CITES INCREASED GROSS IN BUSINESS REBOUND

"For the first time in the history of this circuit I am pleased to announce that we are in the black," said Ed Dubinsky, president and general manager of Publix-Dubinsky theatres at Kansas City, as he told of business being on the rebound.

Increased grosses in recent weeks were cited by Mr. Dubinsky, as well as reduction of house rents and other expenses. The circuit operates 22 Class A and B theatres in Kansas and western Missouri, including two downtown first-runs in Kansas City.

Rin Tin Tin Dead; Son Will Carry On

Rin Tin Tin is dead, but the name of the dog star goes on. Rin Tin Tin, Junior, has been in training for several months under watchful eye of Lee Duncan, owner, as understudy to the German police dog beloved of patrons, young and old, in the days of the silent picture.

Rin Tin Tin died of old age—he was 14—at the home of Mr. Duncan in Hollywood and he was buried there, with players who had co-starred with him among those who paid their respects.

Nat Levine, head of Mascot Pictures, had signed with Mr. Duncan for a return of the veteran German police dog in talking pictures. The first was to have been "Pride of the Legion."

Rin Tin Tin won his name, and fortune for his owner, in a large number of pictures and as a Warner Brothers attraction. His first picture for Warner was "Tracked in the Snow Country" and his first starring vehicle was "Frozen River."

DEMAND FOR ADMISSIONS ABOVE DIME LIKELY FROM 5 COMPANIES

Two Are Definitely Committed by Contract Provisions to Enforce Insistence on Theatre Charge of Over Ten Cents

Doubt Higher Admission Requirements Will Be Enforced Without Regard to Local Conditions; To Aid First Runs

There is a definite likelihood that at least five of nine large distributors will insist this season upon theatres in many situations maintaining admissions in excess of ten cents, but only two are definitely committed by contract provisions to enforce this policy nationally.

Fox and Paramount have written a 15-cent minimum admission requirement into their contracts, while RKO Radio, Warner-F N and MGM are committed to a policy of more careful study of minimum admissions than heretofore. The Radio and Warner-F N contracts, however, retain the ten-cent minimum admission provision, with the qualification that it shall be maintained "unless a greater minimum admission charge is specified elsewhere in the contract."

The MGM contract specifies no minimum admission requirement, but space is provided for the listing of admission schedules, and the exhibitor must account to the distributor on the basis of the admission rates recorded in the contract. MGM licenses on a percentage basis almost exclusively. Further, a reduction of the scheduled admissions subjects the exhibitor to protection and availability penalties.

Advance Run Earnings Hit

The effect of the price cutting wave in the subsequent run field the past year, distribution executives say, was to reduce to a serious extent the earnings of advance run theatres maintaining higher admissions.

Clauses specifying minimum admissions were first written into licensing agreements at the insistence of exhibitors and to protect theatres in the lower admission brackets from non-theatrical competition.

On the basis of statements made by distribution executives who were interviewed, there appears to be little basis for belief that the higher admission requirements will be invoked uniformly on a national scale. The impression was given that contractual remedies will be resorted to only in localities and instances where price cutting of last season took place on a scale large enough to impair exhibition standards and distribution revenues. Local market conditions also are a factor. It was pointed out by one film executive that a 15-cent minimum admission in Chicago is economically cheaper than a ten-cent minimum in many sections of the South.

Could Be Invoked

The contracts of Columbia and United Artists are also worded in such a manner that a minimum admission in excess of ten cents could be invoked wherever deemed advisable by the distributor, inasmuch as they specify that a ten-cent minimum shall prevail "unless a higher minimum is specified elsewhere in the contract."

The legality of the minimum admission clause never has been defined and there appears to be some doubt in the minds of several attorneys for distributors as to whether a clause specifically fixing a minimum admission can be enforced. The legal point involved is the prohibiting by the Clayton anti-trust act of the fixing of a resale price "of goods, wares and merchandise" by their distributors. There is a question, however, never defined by a proper court of law, whether copyrighted motion pictures are to be construed as "goods, wares or merchandise." Copyright licenses are, in fact, excluded throughout the Clayton act's references to the fixing of a re-sale price.

A recent decision of the supreme court of Kansas in a United Artists' contract case held against the distributor, citing as one of the reasons for the "illegality" of the contract the clause specifying the ten cent admission, which was construed to be in violation of the prohibitions against the fixing of a re-sale price. The state court, however, it is pointed out, is without jurisdiction in the matter of copyright.

Summary of Policies

Following is a summary of the indicated policies on minimum admissions which will be pursued by the large distributors.

Fox Film Corp.: Edmund C. Grainger, assistant sales manager, said that a 15-cent minimum provision had been written into the company's contract.

Paramount: George Schaefer, general sales manager, made the following statement: "We are convinced that we can protect the quality of our product only by an assured film rental from first run theatres. This vital revenue cannot be assured if the pictures played by a theatre charging 60 cents admission are played right afterward for a ten-cent admission."

RKO Radio: Ned Depinet, general sales manager, refused to comment on the company policy. Paragraph 13 of the Radio contract reads:

"The exhibitor warrants and agrees that during the period each of the pictures shall be exhibited in the theatre the exhibitor will charge for admission to the theatre an actual admission fee which shall not be less than ten cents, unless a greater minimum admission charge is herein elsewhere specified, for each exhibition and that such pictures shall not be exhibited unless such admission fee is charged." Space is provided in another part of the contract for the listing of admission prices.

World Wide (Tiffany): Joseph Goldberg, general sales manager, said the company would not attempt to increase admission requirements beyond the ten-cent minimum.

United Artists: Al Lichtman, vice president in charge of distribution, said the company would not adopt any uniform practice. The company's new contracts are not yet available.

Universal: L. J. Schlaifer, general sales manager, said the different situations existing in different localities made it appear to be inadvisable to adopt one policy to cover them all.

MGM: Felix Feist, general sales manager, made available a copy of the company's contract.

The admission provisions of the contract require the listing of afternoon and evening admissions for both children and adults, and include the following agreements: "that a main consideration for the grant to exhibitor of the run and/or protection and/or availability herein provided for is that the respective admission prices prevailing at said theatre are as set forth above; and that if such admission prices at said theatre shall be hereafter reduced distributor shall have the right to change or modify the run, availability and/or protection herein provided for." In addition, the exhibitor further "agrees that if the license fee of any photoplay is to be computed either in whole or in part upon a participating basis, exhibitor shall account to distributor on the basis of the respective admission prices set forth above, provided that any of the prices of admission are greater than the amounts set forth above exhibitor shall account to distributor on the basis of such larger amounts." Violation of the agreement automatically gives the distributor the right to terminate the contract and to collect as damages the amount due the distributor as license fees from the unplayed portion of the contract.

Mr. Feist intimated that the full provisions would not be invoked without regard for existing local conditions.

Warner-F N: Sales executives declined to comment.

The company's contract provides space for the listing of detailed admission information beneath the phrase: "Exhibitor further agrees that the following minimum admissions shall be charged:". In addition, Paragraph 14 of the company's contract provides that: "the exhibitor warrants and agrees that during the period each of the photoplays herein provided for shall be exhibited in said theatre the exhibitor will charge for admission an actual fee which shall not be less than ten cents, unless a greater minimum admission charge is herein elsewhere specified, for each exhibition and that such photoplays shall not be exhibited unless such admission fee is charged."

Columbia: Charles Rosenzweig, general sales manager, declined to state the company's policy.

Paragraph 14 of the company's contract provides that: "The exhibitor warrants and agrees that during the period each of the photoplays herein provided for shall be exhibited in said theatre the exhibitor will charge an actual admission fee which shall not be less than ten cents, unless a greater minimum admission charge is herein elsewhere specified, for each exhibition and that such photoplays shall not be exhibited unless such admission fee is charged. If during any such period, less than said sum of ten cents or such other minimum charge is charged for admission to said theatre the license of the photoplay then being exhibited and/or all the other photoplays embraced hereunder and then not yet delivered to the exhibitor shall at the option of the distributor forthwith terminate without prejudice to and in addition to any other rights and remedies the distributor may have hereunder or at law or in equity."

Space is provided in the fore part of the Columbia contract for the recording of admission prices.

CINEMA UNIVERSITY PLAN UP TO BRITONS

Exhibitors' One Objection to Stoll-Marchant Project for Educationals Is Financing with Sunday Show "Hush Money"

by BERNARD CHARMAN
of London correspondent staff

Britain suddenly is becoming all educationally minded. There has broken in the trade and lay press the story of a new "cinema university," proposed to be established in the metropolis. Back of the plan are Sir Oswald Stoll, famous showman and chief of Stoll Films, and Sir James Marchant, who has long been known to nurse the idea of a "people's cinema," and associated with them is the famous Zeiss optical concern.

According to plans already drawn by Sir Giles Gilbert Scott, front-rank British architect, the building will be constructed around a planetarium, which it is confidently figured will prove as big a magnet to Londoners as its famous prototypes at Chicago, Stockholm and elsewhere. Radiating from this will be a series of self-contained theatres, each with its own screen and projection gear, where educational films covering such subjects as science, history, travel, literature and hygiene will be provided. A film library is another item.

Stoll Subjects as Nucleus

As a nucleus it is understood that the "university" will have the use of film subjects produced by Stoll at the Cricklewood studio, worked up in educational style. The trade has not yet had time to declare itself on the project, but as usual is keeping a wary eye open so that it can leap in at the psychological moment. The promoters have obtained option on a site in the heart of the West End, and their advance announcements suggest that they are all set to go.

At the same time a letter appeared in the Times, above the signature of H. Bruce Woolfe, managing director of British Instructional Films, which set out to refute the suggestion that the trade is opposed to the proposal to establish a national film institute, the main constructive suggestion in the report recently issued by the Commission on Cultural and Educational Films. Himself a member of the Commission, Bruce Woolfe said: "I have been regularly present at the meetings of the Commission and its committees, and I believe that nothing but good can come from the close association of educators and representatives of the trade. . . . So far from interfering with the proper business of the industry, so far from being what has been described as a 'beneficent despot,' I believe that the institute would be a very helpful servant both of the public and of the trade; that it would bring into the cinema a new public which has hitherto held aloof, and that it would supply the trade with valuable information as to what is being done throughout the film-producing countries."

Without going into the question of how far Mr. Woolfe can be considered speaking for the trade (the chief activity of his company centers 'round the production of films of a semi-educational, though avowedly popular, type), it must be allowed that the trade will at least agree in part with the statements he has made. The trade is frankly not antagonistic to the suggestion, even if it is no more than tolerant; it is the proposal to finance the project out of the hush-money milched from theatres opening on Sunday that is responsible for any resentment voiced. One of the trade's mouthpieces put it prettily when it said, "The trade objects to a film institute being born with a silver spoon in its mouth—when it is our spoon."

One or two of the brighter spirits realize that this procedure does at least insure that a certain proportion of the hush-money will find its way back into the trade, if only indirectly, while others, scared at the low ebb that pictures have just now reached, will give their support simply because it indicates an opportunity to attack on a fresh salient. Anyway, the Commission is going steadily ahead with its work, confident that it will obtain the cooperation of leaders of the industry on both sides, and is taking steps to bring some of the big shots into its ranks. Whether the trade likes it or not, there is going to be a film institute.

Roxy Reopening With Old Policy

The Roxy theatre in New York reopens Saturday with the former policy reinstated, following announcement by Fox Film Corporation that it has entered into a contract for its operation with Harry G. Kosch, receiver, with the consent of Nicholas Roberts, chairman of the bondholders' protective committee, and the trustees of the first mortgage under an order of United States district court.

Fox's "The First Year" is the opening attraction. Product other than from Fox also will be exhibited.

Spyros Skouras has been named executive head of the Roxy. Frank Cambria, managing director, has named Clark Robinson as art director, David Ross musical director, and Russell Markert director of the Roxyettes. There will be an orchestra of 70, chorus of 40, ballet of 24 and 32 Roxyettes.

A. P. Waxman is director of advertising and publicity. Bert Ennis has settled his contract with the receivers.

Leonard Mitchell Dies

Leonard Mitchell, head of a sound effects library bearing his name, died on Tuesday in New York from a clot of the heart. He had been suffering from indigestion.

Mr. Mitchell, one time member of the reportorial staff of the Exhibitors Daily Review, was 39 years old. Among recent pictures for which he arranged sound effects were "Explorers of the World," "Bring 'Em Back Alive" and several releases for Ideal Pictures. His wife survives him.

Allied of Ontario Elects Gordon Filman President

At the first meeting of the executives of Allied Exhibitors of Ontario following the second annual meeting of the association, in Toronto, the new directors added two more representative exhibitors to their number, these being Gordon Miller, Regent theatre, Peterboro, and Manuel Gebirtig, Bluebell theatre, Toronto.

The following officers were then elected by the directors for 1932-33: President, Gordon Filman of Moorehead and Filman, London, Ont.; first vice-president, Fred Guest, Delta theatre, Hamilton; second vice-president, M. Gebirtig, Bluebell theatre, Toronto; secretary, Harry Alexander, Park theatre, Toronto; treasurer, W. S. Brady, Madison theatre, Toronto; assistant treasurer, H. B. Wells, Toronto. Oscar R. Hanson was retained as general manager.

Amusement Tax Threatened

Attempts to saddle an amusement tax on the theatres in Kansas will be made in the next session convening in December. The trend is indicated in the nomination of F. J. Oyler for Democratic state senator from the fourteenth senatorial district. One of his campaign planks was a declaration in favor of an income tax, a limited sales tax and a tax on amusements.

Harry Cohn in New York

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

Someone has started a rumor about the imminence of standardization of the 2,000-foot reel. For the sake of accuracy, the facts are these: The technical section of the Academy of Arts and Sciences has had the matter under consideration for more than a year and though the 2,000 reel will undoubtedly become standard at some time in the future, there is not the slightest chance of its adoption for quite a while. The industry does not favor the scrapping of any existing equipment for the present because of the initial outlay, even though an estimated saving of $500,000 a year through standardization on reels is possible. It would take many months before anything approaching a standard can be reached, as the question involves theatre practice, union politics, studio and exchange standards, equipment costs, mechanical requirements of projectors, exchange cutting and handling facilities, etc.

A thought for tomorrow from Herschel Stuart, RKO theatre executive: "Good or bad executives are like good or bad eggs . . . and can be soft, medium or hard-boiled, depending upon how long you keep them on the fire."

Hal Hall, cameraman and editor of "The American Cinematographer," says he missed seeing an excellent motion picture the other day because of the suggestive advertising used by the theatre. Some day, he said, he hopes to see a full-page advertisement in the newspapers headed something like this: "If You Want to See the Cleanest and Sweetest and Most Entertaining Picture in Years, Go to the, etc." . . . And why not?

Lou Guimond, director of advertising and publicity for Pat Powers, is wearing a saintly halo these days and his publicity material to the press is being influenced accordingly, as evidenced by the following communication in which Mr. Guimond strives for the height of something or other in truthfulness:

Dear James:

Thank you for not using the enclosed (still) pictures. Don't bother to call me up and tell me they're lousy. I know it.

This is also to remind you that you are to get in your wheel chair and come down to 630 Ninth Avenue at 2:30 P. M., Thursday, to witness one of the greatest, most tremendous, thrilling, marvelous mystery stories ever screened. Try and not be more than 15 minutes late and if you are that late, all our tea and cookies will be gone anyway. You know, we English serve tea at every screening. If you don't like these pictures, you might let me know, and we will send you some that are worse.

Superimposed captions in English clarify the plot development of Amkino's new Russian importation, "The House of Death." But the translations at times are so literal that they add an unintended comic touch. For example, as the hero sinks to the floor in a fatal heart attack, he breathes this: "I seem to be greatly agitated," and again, "I believe I am going to have a seizure."

ON July 14, Harry Huffman took over the local operation, in association with RKO, of the Orpheum theatre in Denver. RKO entered into an arrangement whereby the Orpheum and Huffman's other houses, the Aladdin, Rialto and Tabor, were pooled. The Orpheum, under RKO management, had lost from $4,000 to $6,000 weekly. At the end of Mr. Huffman's first week of operation, he cut the loss in half. At the end of the second week the house showed a profit. In the third week, the theatre was on its way to a house record.

In addition to operating three theatres in the city, Mr. Huffman personally manages the Orpheum. He didn't want a house manager. He wanted to greet his patrons himself, at the "spill" and at other times. He makes up his master ads, works out his exploitation and publicity and follows it through personally. Because he is so well known in his city, he often talks from the stage concerning some particularly meritorious forthcoming attraction. And they believe him.

The blackout is focused by and from the RKO home office. This "shining example" of individuality was officially made known by the company last Saturday.

Ye all know that when a man bites a dog it's news. Frequently, national distributors are successful in getting two or three simultaneous playdates on Broadway, due to booking connections plus the fact that many companies control one or more socalled "show windows" on the main street. Last week, however, Columbia Pictures—which never owned a theatre any place—accomplished the coup de theatre when four Broadway playhouses booked as many Columbia pictures. RKO took "American Madness" for its Mayfair; Warners booked "Hollywood Speaks" into the Winter Garden; Paramount saw "War Correspondent," liked it and spotted the Holt-Graves feature into its ace Broadway run, and "The Blonde Captive" headed the show at Loew's State.

World Wide, too, is to be commended for obtaining the only Capitol booking in 18 months outside of Metro, which owns the house. "Last Mile" has been bought by the theatre for showing late this month.

FEW landlubbers know it, but it is possible to call the doctor from the middle of the ocean in case of need—possible to do it in a hurry and get an answer almost at once and not even have to pay the doctor—thanks to David Sarnoff, president of RCA, which controls some three or four motion picture subsidiaries.

According to the New Yorker, a special service, organized for the benefit of seamen on American ships without doctors, takes care of it and hundreds of calls a year go out over the sea and are answered, often saving lives. The United States Public Health Service, the Radiomarine Corporation and Western Union work together on it. It's purely humanitarian.

The plan works simply. Suppose a fireman on some small freighter 200 miles out of New York is badly scalded, or, as once happened, a sailor takes 20 tablets of aspirin to help him out of a hangover and then doesn't come out of the aspirin. The ship's master addresses the newest Radiomarine station, say New York: "WNY Medico." Messages so addressed have priority over anything but SOS calls, are relayed from ship to ship if necessary, and get immediate attention. If a Public Health Service field station is nearby, it is called on the telephone; if it is some distance away, Western Union relays the message without charge. The Public Health doctors have a consultation and then wireless instructions for treatment.

The plan was authored in 1921 by Captain Robert Huntington in New York and worked on a shoestring on a single home-made radio station until Mr. Sarnoff heard of it and arranged the present setup.

The driver said that he was the musician's son.

BOX OFFICE CHAMPIONS for JULY

Reverting to a normal number of productions (following the necessity of listing 11 pictures as "champions" for June), the July box office leaders settle rather definitely in the lighter vein. Perhaps this becomes a midsummer month. At any rate, totally absent among the July "champions" are the heavy urges, the profound social documents, the deep searchings into the human mind, which tended to characterize the oversized June list. Instead, July distributes first honors among the exotic savageries of RKO Radio's "Bring 'Em Back Alive," and the classic civilities of "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm," by Fox. This dual sharing of honors, indeed, proceeds through the month's list, the result being that the six pictures in the higher brackets represent only three rankings. In the second place, according to the nation's key box offices, are "What Price Hollywood," RKO Radio farce, and the Warner Brothers pugilistic melodrama, "Winner Take All." In the next position are "Million Dollar Legs" and "Make Me a Star"—both from Paramount and both constructed frankly to add to the sum total of laughter in the nation.

MOVE TO PREVENT OVERSEATING BY LAW SURPRISES NEW ZEALAND

Fox Asks Wider Protection Over K. C. Suburbans

Extended protection demands by Fox Midwest Circuit over independent neighborhood houses in Kansas City is seen by independents in that territory as an answer to their proposed zoning plan covering the new season. Recently the Independent Theatre Owners of Kansas City submitted a uniform zoning plan to take the place of the uniform zoning schedule which has been in effect there for two years. The independents' schedule cuts first run protection in the case of houses charging less than 50 cents top. Protection is thus reduced by from seven to 14 days, depending on the first run admission price.

First run theatres charging less than 35 cents, such as the Publix-Dubinsky Liberty, which charges 25 cents, would have prior run only over first subsequent runs, with no protection stipulated.

Subsequents where the admission is more than 20 cents would have pictures available seven days ahead of houses charging five cents less. For each five-cent drop in price charged by subsequents below 20 cents, immediate prior runs would get 14 days protection.

Regarding double bills, the independents propose that one picture be played in regular date of availability, while the other must reach the availability date for theatres charging 10 cents, with the exception that when a dual bill runs first run, then both pictures can be shown in the regular spot.

The Fox Midwest schedule seeks to restrict double bills by a clause providing double protection. Thus, protection of 126 days given first runs over certain houses classed as fourth runs, would be extended to 252 days, or 36 weeks, in event these fourth runs play a double bill.

An analysis of the two proposed schedules discloses they are greatly at variance. The Fox plan extends protection over subsequents, including some Fox houses, and gives Fox houses preferential protection over independents. The present system of basing availability on admission price is discarded.

The independents' plan, on the other hand, would apply protection uniformly to all houses, whether circuit or independent, and places all theatres on an equal basis. Certain features of the existing uniform zoning plan are incorporated in the independents' schedule.

Minister of Industries Given Power to Refuse Licenses in Places Where Existing Theatres Are Considered Sufficient

by CLIFF HOLT, Sydney
Sydney Correspondent

Revolutionary changes in the regulations governing the licensing of theatres in New Zealand have caused surprise, and some concern, not only in that country, but in Australia as well. Under the revised regulations, the minister of industries and commerce is vested with power to refuse licenses for new theatres where it is considered that the requirements of the residents of the various localities are fulfilled by the existing theatres.

The conditions, in detail, are as follows:

1. Any locality having within it one or more theatres providing adequately for normal requirements, having regard to the quality of film exhibited, theatre accommodation, prices charged, and other relevant considerations.

2. Any locality where, in view of conditions existing in the industry and the limited number of films of reasonable exhibition value obtainable in the market, the opening of any additional cinema would cause undue hardship to licensed exhibitors.

3. Any locality where the erection of an additional show would be likely to result in unreasonable economic waste.

The conditions, as they stand, are really no excuse for alarm. The first protects the country exhibitor, who is doing his job well, against an opposition that would probably turn his slender profits into a loss for both; the second is undoubtedly aimed at distributors who set up their own theatres, merely as an outlet for the product they are unable to sell on merit; and the third is a protection against the investor who believes that you have only to get into the motion picture business to make a fortune. There is, in truth, but one danger. In the first condition appears the clause, "having regard to the quality of film exhibited." Is the minister of industries and commerce, or anyone else for that matter, competent to judge the entertainment quality of a picture?

A Newsreel Feat

By reason of a record in laboratory work, 86 suburban theatres, six important country theatres, and four city theatres were enabled to show the Fox Movietone News pictures of Phar Lap's victory at Agua Caliente on the same day the American prints arrived in Sydney. It was triumph for efficiency, and a compliment to this company's manpower.

As can easily be imagined, Australia was intensely interested in the film record of their champion's last race, and there is no gainsaying the fact that among American newsreel items, the Phar Lap feature constituted the biggest drawcard ever known. Besides Fox's print, Universal and Paramount also landed their own shots.

Warner Places "Life Begins" on Roadshow Basis

Warner Brothers' "Life Begins" has been temporarily withdrawn from the general release schedule because of the roadshowing of the picture at the Hollywood theatre, New York, on a two-a-day basis. The opening matinee performance, August 25, will be attended by editors, writers and critics. Guests at the evening performance will be municipal and social leaders. The first public performance will be the August 26 matinee.

Complete absence of ballyhoo and exploitation stunts is decreed for the campaign for the opening run, which is being handled entirely by S. Charles Einfeld, in charge of Warner advertising and publicity, and his staff. For the week prior to the opening, only the title and date are being announced; no descriptive copy of any kind is being used in the ads and very little, if any, art work in the display advertising. The title itself is being relied upon to sell the production.

Featured in "Life Begins" are Loretta Young, Eric Linden, Aline MacMahon, Frank McHugh, and an all-star cast.

Jack Warner Appoints Four to 'Roosevelt for President' Group

Jack L. Warner, vice-president in charge of production at Warner studios, who recently was appointed chairman of the Motion Picture Division's "Roosevelt for President" organization, has named Winfield Sheehan, Jesse L. Lasky, Henry McRae and Merian C. Cooper to the division's committee on permanent organization.

Warner executives who have joined Jack Warner in the industry's "Roosevelt for President" campaign include Benjamin Warner, Major Nathan Levinson, Lou Halper, William Dover, George Thomas, Al Green, Hal Wallis, Ray Griffith, Darryl Zanuck, Lucien Hubbard and William Guthrie.

Maurice Blache Organizes California Newsreel

Maurice Blache of the Blache Film Laboratories has organized the California Talking Reporter Newsreel, appearing once a week with four or five news stories, 500 feet in all, based solely on the San Francisco territory. Tieups with local newspapers are to be arranged. George Lyng, head cameraman, formerly with Pathe, has been with International Newsreel for 10 years.

Mr. Blache has been in newsreel work since 1907, when he was with the Gaumont Company in Paris. For the last 12 years he has been Kinogram and Pathe News cameraman at San Francisco.

New Music Rights Charter in Work

Negotiations for the right to use American music in talking pictures produced and distributed by Electrical Research Products' producer-licensees are being carried on with John G. Paine, agent and trustee for a large group of American publishers, according to a statement issued on Tuesday by Donald S. Pratt, manager of Erpi's Music Rights Department. The launching of negotiations was reported in the issue of August 6.

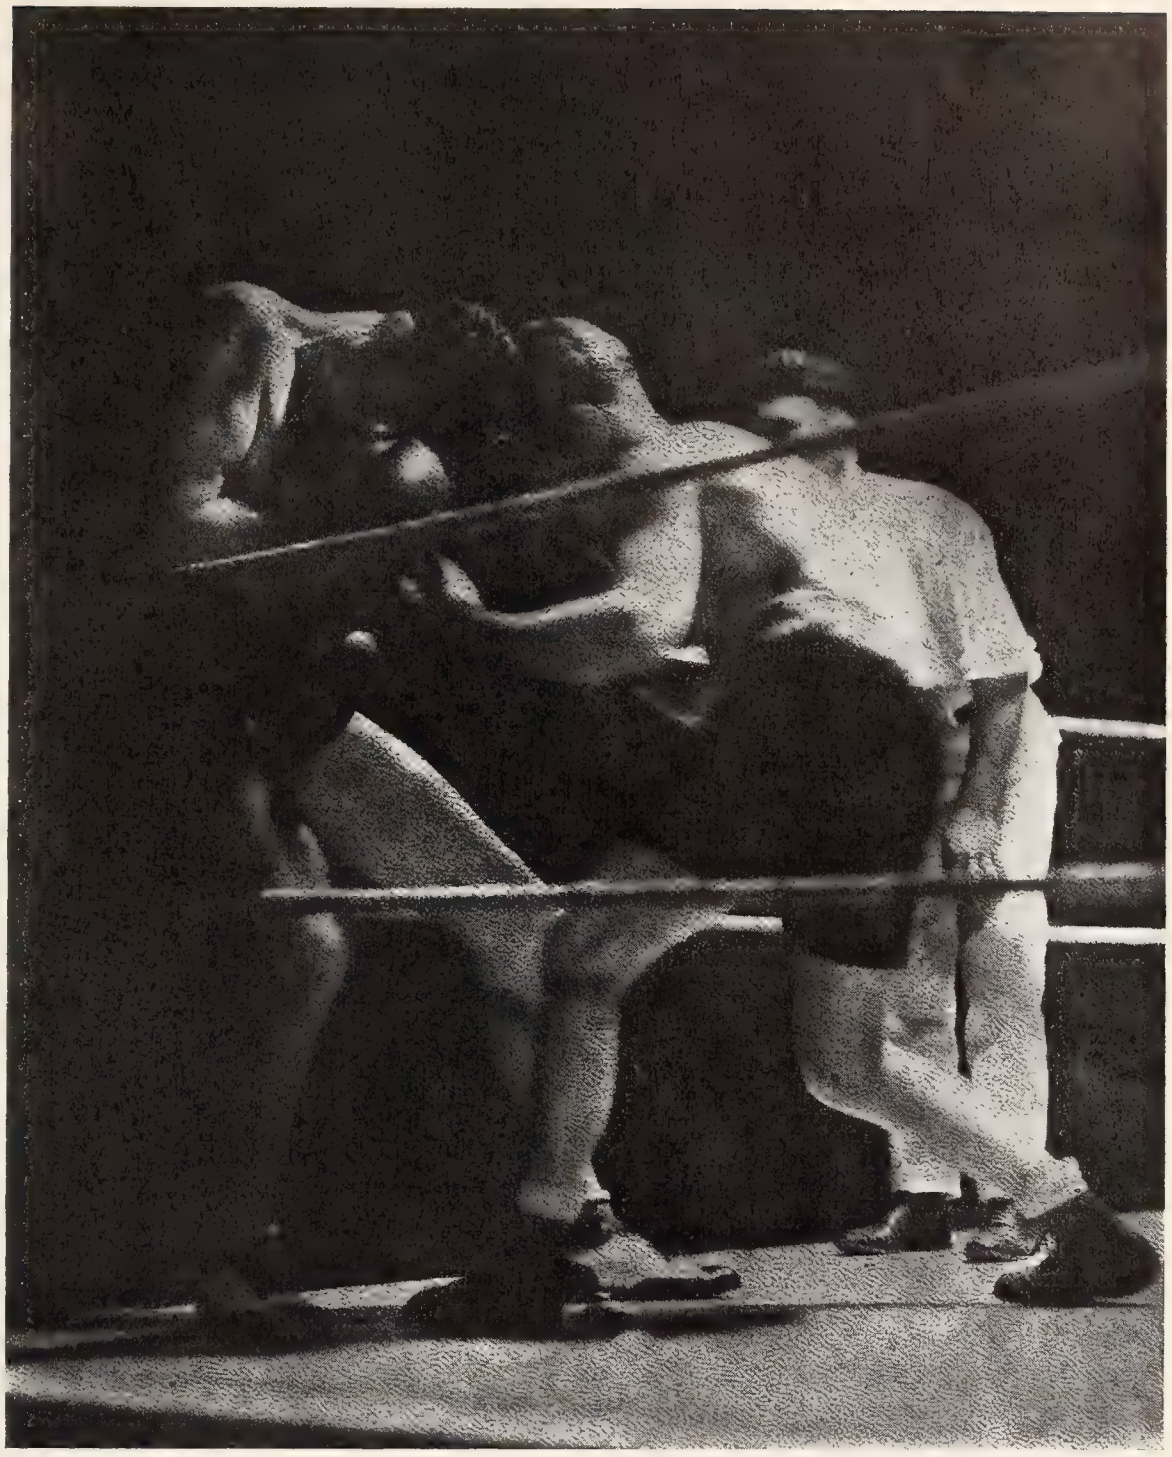
Negotiations are also being carried on with English and Australian publishers, Mr. Pratt said. These are being conducted between Erpi's English and Australian music rights representatives and Charles James Dixey and Sidney William Edwards, who, respectively, act in capacities similar to that of Mr. Paine in this country.

Erpi's contracts with continental European publishers are individual ones and renewal negotiations are being conducted by Erpi's Paris office.

Over 400 catalogs of music are involved in the negotiations, 150 being American.

Erpi's Music Rights Department, Mr. Pratt said, is a nonprofit organization maintained for the convenience of its licensees. He declared that substantial economies in overhead costs are effected by the centralized handling of the music rights situation as each producer would otherwise be obliged to organize and maintain its own music rights department.

Turrill, 20 Years In Industry, Dies



Howard Fitch Turrill, veteran of motion picture production of the days of the old Mutual Film Company, died last Friday in New York following a heart attack suffered while he was riding in a subway train. He was a member of the investigation department of Radio Corporation of America at the time of his death and was 58 years old.

Mr. Turrill joined the production staff of Mutual Film Company in 1912 when that company was writing one of the earlier chapters of the industry. Later he joined Paramount. He was for years in the production department of Famous Players-Lasky. Mr. Turrill was on the RCA staff for two years.

Mr. Turrill was born in New York, the eldest son of the late James Edward Turrill, an official of the Standard Oil Company. Turrill is a modification of the name Tyrell, historic in New England. Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Ida Simpson Turrill; two daughters, Janet Fitch Turrill and Mrs. Marian Turrill Stafford, of New York, and two brothers, Robert Turrill of Miami, Fla., and Charles Lamb Turrill of Prague.

Freeman at RKO Studio

Charles Freeman, formerly New York booking manager for RKO vaudeville, has undertaken his new duties as special contact man at the studio on the Coast. The aim is closer cooperation of vaudeville and pictures, acts to be constructed upon picture themes.

COPY EXTRAORDINARY—The material on page 8 of this issue of Motion Picture Herald had no more than been put together, presenting its argument for a fuller recognition of the capacities of the camera as an instrument of motion picture selling, than arrived a striking exemplification of application in the most unusual product announcement of Majestic Pictures for the 1932-33 season.

The picture above is reproduced from the Majestic announcement. This brochure is the work of Charles Reed Jones, who is a writer of fiction and other types of copy quite remote from his advertising and exploitation activity. This picture is from a specially posed photograph to represent a pictorial phase of "The Comeback," listed in the array of Majestic product.

This brochure is spectacularly interesting because of its sharply pointed simplicity and a vividness of showmanship achieved with a dignity of treatment that confers distinction on the product. It is well calculated to contribute to the now rapidly improving status of the independent sector of motion picture production and marketing. The entire Majestic program is represented by black and white photographic reproductions entailing the use of the camera as the instrument of illustration. Chaste typography and printing of high quality on a paper stock chosen for its fitness for the job are contributing elements.

TAX ON DISCS DRAGS OUT SPECTER OF THEATRE SHUTDOWN IN MEXICO

Industry Breathed Again After Modifying of Quota Law, But Now Comes New Import Duty of Three Dollars for Each Disc

by JAMES LOCKHART
Mexico City Correspondent

The specter of Mexico finding herself virtually destitute of motion picture entertainment is stalking this land again. The same spook was abroad down here last summer when the national legislature approved a law which in substance meant an increase of 1,000 per cent. in import duties on all "talkie" films and discs which are in languages other than Spanish. The rise was from 7.50 pesos (about $3) to 75 pesos (some $30) per kilo (2.2046 lbs.) on such product. The big idea was to protect Mexico's motion picture production industry, which was then, and still is, very much in its infancy. Mexico City newspapers then printed harrowing tales about the prospective effects of the new duties, to the effect that with the exception of a few small houses that might be able to stagger along by exhibiting old-time silents, the Republic would be deprived of picture diversion; the general shutdown of theatres would throw about 50,000 persons out of work and cost the federal government between 4,000,000 and 5,000,000 pesos a year in the form of lost revenues from cinema taxes, and so on. Some exhibitors predicted all this would happen within six weeks.

However, all those terrible things didn't come to pass. A committee of film and disc importers and exhibitors waited upon President Pascual Ortiz Rubio and urged him to do something that would give them a break. He did. He signed a decree suspending the law until April 21 last, in order to allow plenty of time for a complete study of the situation. When April 21 rolled around, the law went into effect, but with some modifications, chief of which was the clause that the $30 per kilo levy would be charged against only those importers who exceeded the quotas which they must register with the ministry of finance. This quota thing placed the importers into two groups, A and B. The A group were those who imported not more than 120,000 meters of film a year and the B group those whose annual importations were between 120,000 and 200,000 meters. While levies continued plenty high, the modifications were generally acceptable to importers, distributors and exhibitors.

Specter Out of Closet Again

Now the specter has come out of the closet again. Its promenade was provoked this time by a decree issued by President Ortiz Rubio providing that on and after August 1 the import duty on non-Spanish dialogue or musical "talkie" discs be fixed at ten pesos (about $3) the disc. It is explained that this measure fixes that rate per piece, regardless of its size or weight. Mexico City newspapers assert that August 20 will witness a general shutdown of picture theatres throughout the country, and declare that distributors have advised exhibitors they have involved the 30 days notice of contract cancellations clause in supply agreements. Distributors aver that such is not the case, and that before such action is taken it must be approved by their headquarters in the United States. There is considerable rumpus, however, and it is the subject of a meaty editorial by the leading Mexico City newspaper, "El Universal." Under the caption "The Errors of Nationalism in Motion Pictures," the newspaper remarks, in part:

"Once again the Mexican public seems to be in imminent peril of being left without the entertainment it prefers, not only because of its quality but also because of its reasonable prices, the movies. It seems in fact that from August 20 on distributors will cancel contracts they have with exhibitors of the country. The reason why they have set that date for the cancellation of their obligations is a contract clause providing 30 days notice of cancellation. The distributors base their decision upon the impossibility in which they find themselves to operate under conditions created by the new import duty. The history of their fiscal troubles can be reviewed in this style:

Equilibrium Broken

"When importation duties were increased by a recent law, their business could be carried on with a very small margin of profit. This was possible because means were found for obeying the law and maintaining at the same time operating costs. This was done by discarding photoelectric sound pictures and using only those of phonographic records. This unstable equilibrium has, however, just been broken by the creation of a new tax of 10 pesos for each of these discs. Such a thing is easily understandable. Three copies of each picture are imported, and with each of them eight sets of discs, in order to guarantee the efficiency of the projection and to make the sonority last as long as possible. A nine-reel picture which pays ten pesos per kilo as film duties and another ten pesos for each disc, costs in taxes 1,416 pesos (about $708, at par of two pesos per dollar), which added to the 3,700 pesos of cost, at 3.5 American cents per foot, give a total of 5,116 pesos, without taking into consideration such other expenses as freight, packing, office maintenance, etc.

"It is clear that these outlays can be retrieved by volume production and exhibition, the distributors contend. But it is well known that in the movies, as well as in any other art or industry, masterpieces are not abundant. Instead, in the general case of standard pictures, which are in the majority, expenses are not retrieved. As a consequence of this, the distributors operate with losses, and are therefore compelled to suspend their activities, unless there is a favorable change of conditions in the business. Fiscal measures against imported pictures are not only of a financial inspiration, that is to say, it is not only to increase the Government's income, a thing that is never attempted by the creation of prohibitive taxes, that they have been decreed. The reason for the increased levies is both social and economical. It is pretended on one side to foment the national movie production industry, mother of 200 pictures that nobody has ever seen, according to optimistic data emanating from municipal sources. On the other hand, it is to make a demonstration of wild nationalism, demanded by certain intense patriots who have become alarmed about the fact that several million pesos leave the country every year as payment for the pictures we import.

Leading Newspaper Blames Financial Policy, Attempt to Nurse Weakling Home Industry, Plea to Nationalism

Risk of Destroying Exhibition

"These two elements form the protectionist policy to which we will owe very soon the ruin of the exhibiting industry, the aggravation of the difficulties of the graphic industry, half smothered now by the monopoly of newsprint paper, and a considerable increase in the unemployed.

"So that our economic nationalism doesn't make blunders it is well that it learns certain elementary things, for instance, the impossibility of keeping a balance of accounts by perpetually being the creditor. Only a mercantilism of the rural school can suggest the wish that we receive in international commerce more than we deliver. From that mercantilism the movie nationalism draws its arguments. It gets alarmed because, as a result of the lack of our artistic, technical and economical capacities to produce even tolerable national pictures, we have to buy them abroad.

Economic Absurdity

"It would be uneconomical to endeavor to manufacture pictures similar to the foreign productions if that cost us a greater effort than to produce other goods which we could exchange for them. Imagine then, the economic absurdity that is demonstrated by our desire to produce here motion pictures of little if any quality at the cost of enormous sacrifices, instead of applying that energy to the production of other articles, with which, by exchange, we can obtain with less effort the excellent pictures that are made abroad.

"All these reasons induce us to think that the state had better revise its policy of cinematographic protectionism by means of which only unfavorable results can be obtained: because it will cause the death of the exhibiting industries with all the prejudices it entails, because it will deprive the public of the diversion it prefers, or, in the best of cases, it will increase the prices of such entertainment besides decreasing its quality, and because not even by it will they attain the establishment of a national cinematographic industry, for which infinite conditions are missing, among them a transcendental one—the lack of a market capable of supporting it."

Copyright Bureau Checking Coast Exhibitor Violations

The Copyright Protection Bureau has assigned Harold Groves, division manager of the bureau from New York, to full charge of an investigation of all theatres in California, in an effort to check on lost playing time and stop leakage of revenue. Prosecution of exhibitors may result from the intensive investigation.

The bureau is attempting to check the amount of playing time and rental receipts that are lost through exhibitors "holding over," "bicycling," and "switching" pictures without authority or the payment of rental called for under the circumstances. Loeb, Walker and Loeb, Los Angeles attorneys, have been retained to prosecute the cases against exhibitors.

Six prominent directors have enrolled in the directors' branch of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences on the Coast. The new members are Howard Hawks, Eddie Buzzell, William Wyler, James Whale, Edgar Selwyn.

Warners Offers Greta Garbo Role In Kreuger Film

Press material which came on Monday from the publicity department of Warner Brothers said:

"Greta Garbo may appear on the screen next in a story based on the life of Ivar Kreuger, late Swedish match king, whose name was once romantically linked with that of the famous actress.

"An offer to this effect, providing that scenes in the picture could be made on the Kreuger summer estate near Stockholm, will be made the actress by Warner Bros. The picture is already named 'The Match King.'

"If Miss Garbo accepts this unusual offer she will play on the screen the role of a mysterious actress who figured in the life of an international financier, not unlike the role she is popularly supposed to have played in real life.

"Reports have persisted, although she denies them, that Miss Garbo intends to buy the Kreuger summer estate and establish her own producing studios there. The Warner Bros. offer would not, in any way, interfere with such plans, since that company is willing—even anxious—to make sequences of 'The Match King' in which she appears on the Kreuger home grounds.

"Warren William, already announced for the Kreuger role in the picture, could be sent to Sweden on short notice if Miss Garbo is willing to consider the Warner Bros. offer. While no figures have been given out, it is understood that the actress has been offered enough money for the one picture to pay for the estate she wants to buy. The recent failure of a Beverly Hills bank in which the actress is known to have had a sizeable deposit has brought hope that Miss Garbo will consider the proposal.

"'The Match King' will be an adaptation of a popular novel by Einar Thorvaldson, which closely parallels the life and remarkable career of Ivar Kreuger, whose suicide some months ago astonished the financial world. At the time of Kreuger's death there were many reports in circulation that the great Garbo had figured romantically in the match king's plans for the future, and it was claimed by many that much of the carefully saved Garbo fortune had been lost in the collapse of the match king's affairs.

"These rumors were never verified and Miss Garbo did not change her plans nor fail to follow her announced intention of retirement from the American film capital. The news that she would purchase the Kreuger summer estate from the receivers handling his affairs was not released until Miss Garbo had sailed from New York. At that time it was stated with some show of authority that the actress, in association with various European stage managers and directors, would use the Kreuger estate as a studio for the production of pictures. This led at once to the Warner Bros. offer, since 'The Match King' was the property of that company and the production heads had been at a loss for a name big enough to cast in the role which, it was admitted, Miss Garbo would fit so naturally.

"As a matter of fact, Miss Garbo could probably name her own figure for the picture, since Warner Bros. intend to make it one of the important productions of the year."

Allied Pictures Moves

Allied Pictures Corporation has moved headquarters to Allied Building, Pathe Studios, Culver City, Cal.

LEW CANTOR TO BRING PLAYS TO HOLLYWOOD

Stock Company Will Present 100 Plays for Film Producers to Look Over, as Short Cut to Broadway Hits

A new wholesale market for story material will soon be opened in Hollywood by Lew Cantor, Broadway play producer, who will place before motion picture producers a "show-case" for legitimate productions which have not been sold for pictures. Mr. Cantor, producer of "Many a Slip," in which Sylvia Sidney scored a success; "Courage," "Mendel, Inc.," "Soldiers and Women," and other plays, has arrived in Hollywood with a portfolio of some 100 plays selected from the properties of the Shuberts, John Golden, Theatre Guild, George Tyler, Lawrence Weber and the William A. Brady interests.

Cantor will produce these plays in Hollywood with a stock company composed of dramatic actors and perhaps a guest star occasionally recruited from pictures. Plays will be changed weekly, the idea being to afford production executives and studio chiefs an opportunity to see Broadway hits enacted to better enable them to pass on their suitability for pictures. By using the guest star system it is hoped to establish the suitability of parts for the same player in pictures. Also, considerable time is expected to be saved in presenting dramatic or comedy pieces of the stage right in Hollywood.

Many of the plays were negotiated for by picture companies while they were running on Broadway, but for one reason or another, deals were not closed. In several cases, bids of producers did not meet the demands of the stage people.

The first show to be produced will be the Theatre Guild's "Camel Through the Needle's Eye," followed by "That's Gratitude," "Topaze," "Bird in the Hand," "On the Spot," "Philip Goes Forth" and "Maggie, the Magnificent."

Usually, screen producers are made to depend on "scouts" or on personal visits to Broadway in order to view stage possibilities for the screen at first hand. Sometimes, the home offices made recommendations. Mr. Cantor proposes to establish a short cut by bringing Broadway to Hollywood.

Edward Griffith Suggested for Post of Congressman

Hollywood friends of Edward H. Griffith, Radio Pictures director, have suggested that his name be proposed as a candidate for a seat in Congress representing the studio city. Several open political meetings have been held in Hollywood during the past month at which a large number of prominent members of the industry were present.

Universal Managers in New York

H. M. Herbel, manager of Universal's Chicago exchange, George Levine, Milwaukee manager, and Manager Morris Joseph of New Haven, are in New York conferring with I. J. Schlaifer, general sales manager.

Supply Dealers Reelect Robin

Delegates to the annual convention of the Independent Supply Dealers' Association, assembled early this week at Chicago, reelected J. E. Robin of Palisades, N. J., president, and L. G. Dolliver, San Francisco, vice-president. Henry C. Dusman, Baltimore, was elected secretary-treasurer. In his annual address before the convention, Mr. Robin expressed optimism, citing general business improvement which he found in a tour of the country and which he believes will soon make itself felt in increased theatre buying power with regards equipment and parts.

A larger display of theatre equipment and accessories than at last year's convention was evident. Among exhibiting firms were: Wenzel Co., Chicago; Operadio Equipment Co., St. Charles, Ill.; Ward Leonard Co., Mt. Vernon, N. Y.; Herman A. DeVry, Inc., Chicago; Motion Picture Machine Co., Milwaukee; Van Cleef Bros., Chicago; Da-Lite Screen Co., Inc., Chicago; Brenkert Light Projection Co., Detroit; Sterling Electric & Mfg. Co., Los Angeles; Radiart Corporation, Cleveland; City Sales Service Corp., Chicago; Stafford-Johnson Co., Ionia, Mich.; Globe Ticket Company, Philadelphia, Pa.; Cinema Sound Equipment Co., Chicago; General Register Corp., The Automatic Ticket Register Co., New York and Chicago; Oliver Mfg. Co., Cleveland, Ohio; National Carbon Co., Cleveland, Ohio; Ideal Seating Co., Grand Rapids, Mich.; Carbon Products, New York City; Strong Electric Corp., Toledo, Ohio; Imperial Electric Mfg. Co., Los Angeles, Calif.; The Continental Electric Mfg. Co., Chicago; General Seating Co., Chicago; The Robin Generator Co., Imperial Electric Co., Akron, Ohio; Square D Co., Detroit, Mich.; Columbia Printing Co., Chicago; Duo Vac Radio Tube Corp., Brooklyn, N. Y.; Duo Fire Guard, Chicago; Holmes Projector Co., Chicago; Essannay Electric & Mfg. Co., Chicago; Ultraphone Mfg. Co., Chicago.

Dealers at the meeting, in addition to the officers, were: J. F. Dusman of J. F. Dusman, Baltimore, Md.; J. J. Pear of Amusement Supply Co., New York; A. F. Morrone, Superior Motion Picture Supply Co., Pittsburgh, Pa.; E. E. Oliver & John R. Cox, Oliver Theatre Supply Co., Cleveland, Ohio; L. G. Dolliver, Western Theatrical Equipment Co., San Francisco, Cal.; H. W. Graham, Graham Brothers Theatre Equipment, Denver, Col.; C. White, Quality Theatre Supply Company, Omaha, Neb.; L. L. Foster, Capitol Theatre Supply Co., Boston, Mass.; J. Guercio & Wm. Barthel, Chicago; R. Colvin, Exhibitors Supply Company, St. Louis, Mo.; Ray Smith, The Ray Smith Company, Milwaukee, Wis.; George MacArthur, MacArthur Theatre Equipment Co., Detroit, Mich.; A. E. Thiele, Des Moines Theatre Supply Co., Des Moines, Iowa; J. E. Robin, New York.

MUSIC NOTE OF THE PAST

It Seems That Pathe Prepared Cue Sheets for "Il Trovatore," a 1910 Innovation Before Sound

Turning through the not so dusty files in the front hall and background of Motion Picture Herald the other day, a bound volume of The Moving Picture World for December of 1910, some twenty-two years ago, presented a charming article of that pre-sound, pre-feature day, on the subject of "Music and The Picture". One may fancy that it will be read by the showmen of a sound conscious era with a special appreciation of the fact that the art of picture presentation has arrived somewhere.—THE EDITOR.

Pathe, of New York, have taken a step in furthering the association of suitable music with the moving picture which we desire to applaud. One of their releases, shortly to be in the hands of the exhibitor, is the story of Trovatore. This is an Italian subject, worked out and acted in Italy by the Pathe-Italian company. It deals with the familiar themes of love, hatred, revenge and the like. It has all the glamour, movement, mystery and enthralling interest of Italian melodrama. Of course, as the educated reader of this paper knows, the story of Trovatore was set to music by Verdi and forms one of the most popular operas in the repertory of the New York Metropolitan Opera House. To emphasize the popularity of Trovatore, we may say that the music is very familiar to the general public. It long ago achieved the glory of being placed on the street organ.

Now, when this release comes out, the exhibitor will have an opportunity of suiting the action of the play to the music, or rather suiting the operatic music of Verdi to the action of the play, as shown in the film. Pathe engaged the services of a competent man to prepare the music of the opera for use when the film is projected. So it comes about that, for something like fifty cents, the exhibitor can procure the music of Trovatore, especially arranged for simultaneous use with the film. All that will be required will be to place the music in the hands of the pianist, who will take his cues from the subtitles on the film. Thus: suppose we reach the legend of the Count recognizing his long lost brother, then that would be the cue for the pianist, who would play the music under that caption. Plainly and simply it amounts to this, that for the first time accompanying music for a feature film has been provided by Pathe. We hope that the exchanges and the exhibitors will take advantage of this offer, not merely because we want to see Pathe's experiment a success, but also because, as we have over and over again urged, we want to see the picture on the screen accompanied by suitable music from the orchestra—whether that orchestra simply consists of a piano or a number of pieces.

It is no use lamenting the past, but we wish this sort of thing had been carried out before on an extensive scale, because then we should have been farther along the line of progress in the popularity of the picture than we are at present. Several men interested in the selling of sheet music have spoken to us on the subject of the provision of suitable music for the picture. It is unquestionable that there is much to be done in this respect and money to be made thereby. The absurdity of accompanying the presentation of a picture on the screen with unsuitable music has been dwelt upon so often in these pages that, though the evil is great, we have not the heart to repeat our displeasure. On the contrary we try to help matters along by devoting a page each week to "Music for the Picture," and we gladly welcome the stimulus to much needed improvement in this little evidence of Pathe enterprise.

There should be a large sale for the Trovatore music. The exhibitor in advertising the film should draw special attention to the fact that the music of the opera accompanies it. By such means he will stimulate the interest of the public in this particular picture, and in the picture generally. If it were generally known that appropriate music always accompanied the picture on the screen, the interest of the public in the picture would be increased. As has been pointed out in these pages and elsewhere, there seem to be signs that the interest of the public in the picture is inclined to wane, and it therefore behooves all concerned to use every legitimate endeavor to retain that interest. If every exhibitor throughout the country saw to it that suitable music accompanied the pictures, there would be something done towards refuting the allegations of the enemies of the picture, that the picture has seen its best days.

Knapp Repeats in Golf; Wins Quigley Trophy

John Knapp, owner of the Rialto theatre in Hollywood, repeated his victory of last year in the annual film golf tournament on the Coast and won the Martin Quigley Trophy presented by the editor-in-chief and publisher of Quigley Publications. Mr. Knapp made a low gross of 77. Second place went to Mal Halling, manager of Atlas Pictures.

George Davis, Theatrical and Motion Picture Producer, Dies

Funeral services were held on Sunday at the Free Synagogue in New York for George Henry Davis, 71, who died at the Hotel Alden where he lived with his wife and two daughters. Born in San Francisco, Mr. Davis was long associated with the Belasco theatrical enterprises and headed Banner Productions and Quality Pictures, independent companies.

Otterson Returns from Europe

John Otterson, president of Erpi, returned to New York this week on the Majestic from a European trip. He said that business abroad will improve as rapidly as American producers can solve the problem of foreign language in pictures.

Rising Farm Price Cheering Film Men

Exhibitors and exchange men of Kansas City alike feel encouraged over latest reports that crops, livestock and farm products in the hands of the farmers have increased tremendously in value since the current increases in commodity prices began.

While the farmer is still far from prosperous, he is beginning to smile with rising prices and bountiful crops, which in some districts represent the best harvest in years. That means that the farmer will have more money to spend in the towns, and in the theatres.

The Federal Reserve bank at Kansas City estimates the increase in value of farm commodities in the tenth federal reserve district as 400 million dollars. This is a highly conservative estimate, according to George H. Hamilton, governor of the bank, who says many of the correspondent banks placed the increases at twice that amount.

The tenth Federal Reserve district includes western Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska, Colorado, Wyoming, Oklahoma, and northern New Mexico.

RKO's Five Madison Houses Going to Madcine Corp.

RKO's five houses in Madison, Wis., will be taken over September 1 by Madcine Corporation, under the supervision of H. J. Fitzgerald, general manager of Fox-Midwesco theatres. Madcine Corporation is owned jointly by RKO and Fox-Midwesco and has operated the Strand and Parkway theatres at Madison, both formerly operated by Fox.

After the transfer, the city's two deluxe houses, the Capitol and Orpheum, in addition to the Parkway, Strand and Garrick, will be controlled by Madcine. At present the Capitol and Orpheum are the only two RKO houses operating at Madison, but the Strand, it is understood, will open September 1. John Schornberg is expected to continue as manager of the Madcine properties.

It is understood that slump in business at the local RKO houses and desire to trade for properties elsewhere prompted the transfer.

Standard Film of Midwest Holds Annual Convention

Standard Film Service, with exchanges in Cleveland, Cincinnati and Detroit, held its annual convention in Cleveland last Saturday to Monday. Present were: Nat Lefton, president; J. S. Jossey, district manager for Monogram; S. P. Gorrel, Cleveland manager; L. P. Hudson, Cincinnati manager; Lew Lefton, Pittsburgh manager, and George Kirby, R. J. Burns, Cincinnati; Frank Belles, Harry Haiman, Rudy Novich and Milton Lefky, Cleveland.

Fleischer Granted Injunction

Judge Coleman, in federal court, New York, has granted a preliminary injunction to the Max Fleischer studios against unlicensed manufacturers of dolls imitating the cartoon figure, Betty Boop, according to an announcement from Paramount, which releases the cartoon series.

Youngclaus Ruling Distorted: Myers

Attempts are being made to create a false impression of the meaning of the Youngclaus decision restraining the protection agreement in the Omaha territory, says Abram F. Myers, chairman and general counsel of Allied States Association.

"The decision merely holds that the exchanges, chain theatres and subsidized exhibitor leaders may not combine and conspire to impose protection on independent theatres not participating or acquiescing in the proceedings," Mr. Myers said.

"It puts an end to the activities of exhibitor leaders who profess to represent the independent theatres, but who respond to the crack of the producers' whip in return for salaries, chain theatre dues and favors in connection with the operation of their own theatres.

"Exhibitor leaders whose plans to make themselves solid with the powers that be at the expense of helpless and uninformed independents were frustrated by the Youngclaus decision now claim that the way has been left open for the chains, acting individually, to negotiate for unlimited protection, free from the restraining influence of these leaders.

"We venture to suggest that before the distributors undertake to negotiate individually with the chains the protection which must in the nature of the case be more or less uniform, they had better withdraw from the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, the several film boards of trade and all other agencies through which they have been accustomed to act in concert in imposing protection on the exhibitors.

"As for us, we have never seen eight horses run a dead heat in a square race, and if they were harnessed together, we would know there was something phoney.

"Counsel for the producers sententiously announces that there will be no appeal from Judge Munger's decision 'because this case is not of sufficient importance.'

"The fact is that those in charge of the big companies did not dare risk the public attention which would result from carrying this case, with its damaging and damning findings, to the higher courts."

Of proposed exclusive-run showings Mr. Myers declared:

"There has been mentioned the possibility that a certain chain of theatres, some of which are operated in conjunction with one of the largest producers, may succeed in persuading such producer and others to sell it exclusive runs in competitive situations.

"We think the producers might well ponder the petition in equity recently filed by the Government in New Orleans against the United Theatres, et al."

Fox Missouri Convention Dates Changed to Aug. 23-24

Dates for the first divisional convention of Fox Midwest theatres at Excelsior Springs, Mo., have been changed from August 17 and 18 to August 23 and 24, according to L. J. McCarthy, assistant to Elmer C. Rhoden, division manager at Kansas City, now in New York on product deals. Fox managers at Kansas City are hopeful Rhoden will be able to induce Spyros Skouras to address the convention.

Constance Bennett Sailing

Constance Bennett will sail for Europe next month, according to advices from the West Coast, and may be away from the United States for a year, having recently purchased a home in the South of France.

OUT OF THE DOLDRUMS

Meehan Tells of Seven Previews in the Week and Not One "Palooka" Among Them All

by LEO MEEHAN
Hollywood Staff Correspondent

With production speeding up, the new fall product being greeted enthusiastically at previews, studio payrolls building up day by day, Hollywood is coming out of the doldrums with a whoop. You can see more broad smiles on the Boulevard these days than have been in evidence for months.

Here's a list of those given preview showings the past week. There's not a palooka in the lot. At least two or three should rank high in the entire season's product. "Once in a Lifetime," Universal; "Tiger Shark," Warner Bros.; "Love Me Tonight," Paramount; "Night Mayor," Columbia; "Okay America," Universal; "Passport to Hell," Fox; "The Crooked Circle," World Wide. If audience reactions, and my own (and those of the Missus, who trails along with me to these ultra-first night showings) are worth counting, then we think motion pictures are very much on the up-and-up.

Hilarious, Farcical Satire

So let's report on Universal first, being as how the Laemmle organization presented two of their big numbers this week. "Once in a Lifetime" is a hilarious, farcical satire on this village of Hollywood, and the way pictures are, or are supposed to be, made. Probably you recall the stage play was a big success. Junior Laemmle and his staff have made it quite as sparkling entertainment. It should rank high in the group of pictures about Hollywood scheduled for this season. The other from Universal is "Okay America." This is the one they tried to get Walter Winchell, New York columnist, to do. His teeth weren't straight, or something; anyhow, he went back to columning before they ever got started. Lew Ayres went in, and how that boy comes out! William Anthony McGuire, who knows his Broadway, cooked up a yarn that drags in the radio, the newspapers, the Lindbergh case, the White House and most everything else that has been on the front page these past few months. Lots of fast action, laughs, meller-drammer, and Ayres at the best he's been for a long time. Junior and Uncle Carl have a right to the broad smiles they're wearing.

And speaking of Broadway and Winchell and newspaper headlines, Columbia has one called "Night Mayor," which is a thinly disguised though muchly fictionized portrait of Hizzoner James J. Walker, pet aversion of Mr. Seabury. Lee Tracy plays it to perfection. Next time Lee goes to Gotham, Mayor Jimmy either will have him thrown in irons, or greet him officially on the courthouse steps. Packed with laughs, the story relates in high-powered details what a tough job it is to be boss of a town like New York. Tracy is going like a house afire these days, dashing from one studio contract to another, and delivering at all of them. Columbia promised stories this year that would be as up-to-the-minute as this morning's headlines. This is one of them.

While the rage for wild animal pictures is at its height, Warner Brothers sought to do something different. So they've corraled a few schools of wild fish, turned them loose on Edward G. Robinson, and called the photoplay "Tiger Shark." They sent a troupe down off the coast of Lower California, which Mack Sennett, John Barrymore, Leo Meehan and all other experienced deep sea fishermen know to be the world's most perfect fishing grounds. Robinson plays the part of a Portuguese fisherman, making a living by capturing the gamest of all fishes, the tuna. You may only know it by the slice, in cans from San Pedro, California. If you've never seen one of these babies bend a hickory rod double, you're in for one of the thrills of your life when you see the picture. But these fishing boats also attract the great "heavies" of the deep, too; and there's where the tiger sharks come in —schools of them. They provide melodrama in this one that will cause you to try to push out the back of the seat in front of you. Robinson's portrait of the naive, lovable fisherman is equal to the best from this distinguished actor. And the setting is so rugged and novel it is like a fine travel picture and a powerful drama all boiled down into one entertainment.

Plenty of Melodrama

"A Passport to Hell" is another one of those carrying the naughty word in celluloid since Mr. Hays let Paramount use "Merrily We Go to Hell." We got a press invitation from the Fox studio to see the picture which read: "A Passport to Hell With Elissa Landi." Well, Elissa does go in that direction in the picture, all right enough. It's pretty sombre stuff, with tomtoms beating in the background, the tropical heat of Africa, jungle mystery, spies. There's plenty of melodrama and emotional intensity.

Turning to much lighter things, there is the inimitable Chevalier and his pretty picture consort, Jeanette McDonald, in another one of those delightful Lubitschy Paramount comedies with music, "Love Me Tonight." It is lavish, one of those million-dollar affairs, eye-filling, tuneful, very, very romantic. It has a flock of funny men, headed by Charlie Ruggles and Charlie Butterworth, and is a grand cure for the blues, acidosis or what have you. Paramount certainly does things with the musical productions.

World Wide cuts loose with one of the real novelties of the season in "The Crooked Circle." It is designed to give the horse-laugh to the shock pictures, the terror stuff. It has all the usual elements, weird characters, hordes of criminals, trick doors, eerie lighting, etc. And it proceeds in a most unusual and astonishing manner to kid them all to death. Here's a comedy with originality and imagination. One minute you shriek with horror, the next with laughter.

O. K. America

(Universal)

Comedy Drama

There's plenty in this well put together, nicely acted story of today to intrigue the curiosity of all types of theatre-goers. Radio broadcasting has made the title already a household word and this story of a Walter Winchell type columnist has been brought to the screen in a novel manner. It differs radically from "Is My Face Red" in following a similar idea.

Lew Ayres is the broadcasting columnist who gets to know everything and prints all he knows regardless of whether the editor or paper owner likes it and regardless of what effect it will have on the individuals mentioned. The first part of the picture is given over to the hectic manner in which he gathers his spicy items. Then it switches to a gangster kidnaping. One of Lew's news sources gives him a tip on who has the girl. Lew seeks out the gangsters and tells them he is going to print the news, but that if they want to save themselves a lot of trouble as well as the girl's father and mother a lot of heartaches, they will let him act as their go-between. He gets the money from Secretary Drake, but the gang doublecrosses him because the "Big Fellow" has some chestnuts he wants pulled out of the fire and plans to use the girl as a tool. The story reaches all the way up to the president of the United States, whom Lew interviews in company with Drake and his wife. Coming back to the "Big Boss" he reports the deal is made until he knows that the girl has been delivered to the police. Then he tells the "Big Boss" that he has doublecrossed him. He kills him and later that night is bumped off himself by a couple of gunmen while he is making a nationwide broadcast.

Primarily it is a topical story—today's headlines, characters and events—with the hysteria that followed the Lindbergh kidnaping being worked into the story in a way that eliminates any thought that it might be objectionable. There are personalities to sell, with Lew Ayres, as the cocky columnist, caring for nothing or no one, sticking out head and shoulders above everyone else. At the same time that cast does convincingly fine work.

Go after business on this one with lines that suggest novelty, plus a peak behind the curtains on what makes the wheels go 'round in gangster activities. But don't stress the gangster element too strongly. Concentrate on a personality that out-Winchells Walter Winchell, a man who has always played the game along lines that he thinks square and a fellow who when he sees his doom has the courage to take it without a whimper.

There is room for all sorts of exploitation and ballyhoo, with tieups with newspapers and radio stations readily available. You shouldn't have any difficulty lining up the support of both, inasmuch as the picture serves to show how both can be of great public service. If you go in for special lobbies, tieup with your local radio station to duplicate a broadcasting booth in your foyer. Or if you don't want to make it that elaborate, use a loudspeaker system broadcasting direct from your projection rooms. Get your patrons interested in this one in advance and spend a little extra money ballyhooing it.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Love Me Tonight

(Paramount)

Musical Comedy

This thoroughly enjoyable musical comedy, bright and full of life, expertly set to tuneful rhythm and convincingly portrayed by a suitable cast, should be a credit to the box office. A preview audience composed of 100 motion picture critics from New York and out-of-town newspapers arose and applauded when Maurice Chevalier and Jeanette MacDonald completed "Love Me Tonight" on the screen of the Criterion theatre on Broadway. In those names you have the material to place before your community. They spell romance and Chevalier's women admirers will not be disappointed.

True, it is sophisticated entertainment, but ultra-smartness was moderated pleasantly by the deft and highly commendable direction of Rouben Mamoulian.

The story in itself is inconsequential. Maurice is a Parisian tailor, a very nice, but very poor young man. Circumstances take him to the palace of a great baron and there he finds it advantageous to pass himself off as a nobleman. He is a tremendous success socially. Jeanette MacDonald, of the Baron's family, falls in love with him and when she finds out that Maurice is, after all, only a tailor—well, she still loves him.

From the first shot the picture maintains sparkling and sometimes spicy wit. The action—it seems each step and word—is impressively synchronized with music written by Richard Rodger and Lorenz Hart, and the settings of operatic grandeur are splendid in their massiveness. Occasional bits of dialogue, while not vulgar, might raise an eyebrow or two, but not so with the action.

Unquestionably splendid entertainment for practically all classes of adult audiences, except perhaps in those localities where a sophisticated operetta with Continental flavor does not strike an appreciative response. The support is especially worthwhile, likewise the photography.—Cunningham, New York.

Produced and distributed by Paramount Publix. Directed by Rouben Mamoulian. Screen play by Samuel Hoffenstein, Waldemar Young and George Marion, Jr. Based on a stage play by Leopold Marchand and Paul Arment. Music by Richard Rodgers and Lorenz Hart. Photographed by Victor Milner. Release date, Aug. 26, 1932. Running time (may be reduced), 104 minutes.

The Crooked Circle

Comedy and Thrills

Here is a comedy thrill picture that ought to prove better than average audience pleaser. Taking the old formula of "terror" pictures—a haunted house, a mysterious gang of criminals, weird characters, all kinds of trick doors, graveyards and strange goings on—the producers have loaded it up with a lot of foolish comedy supplied by James Gleason and Zasu Pitts that should alternately give your audiences the creeps and then send them into spasms of laughter.

As far as the story is concerned, any attempt to give it a logical description would be just as funny as the picture itself. It's so cleverly and smartly mixed up, with surprising developments and unanticipated events, that the element of suspense is maintained at high pitch.

The start is a little slow, creating the impression that another spine-tingling mystery picture—full of melodrama—is under way. But when the locale is moved to the haunted house and James Gleason as a dumb motor cop and Zasu Pitts go to work, then the fun begins.

It's the kind of fun that kept a preview audience (that didn't know it was going to see a preview) sitting in tense suspense, then roaring with laughter, then breaking into the picture time after time with bursts of applause.

Because "The Crooked Circle" is such a clever mixture of squeamy mystery and downright farcical comedy, you should have no difficulty in selling it. The title is catchy and can be worked into all sorts of gags that will convey the nutty idea of the picture. Names are there a-plenty and, although Ben Lyon is billed as the headliner, he plays second fiddle to Gleason and Pitts. Yet they are the only ones who play "straight" all the way through. As far as the others are concerned, the story alternately puts them on both sides of the fence—right down to the final climax, which is a surprise that will confound all the amateur sleuths in your audience who know just how the picture is going to turn out before it is half over. They won't analyze this one—a thought which suggests a good idea for your interest-creating campaign. Defy them to figure it out.

"The Crooked Circle" can be shown to any type of audience any time. The kids should eat it up and it might be a good idea to have as many of them in the house as you can get at each performance to launch the enthusiasm. But the grownups, who are looking for something new and a little different, will find plenty to thrill them and plenty to make them laugh. Smart showmen, who are looking for something unique to offer their patrons, will get behind this one with a real campaign.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

After Divorce

(MGM)

Comedy-Drama

Although the underlying theme of this picture is neither new nor novel, it is full of human interest and should prove to be more than popular in those theatres that cater to family patronage. Undoubtedly the women folk will find it highly interesting, inasmuch as there is plenty in it that will bring everything from subdued smiles to hearty laughter and more than once it will cause a lump to rise in the throat.

Because it is a story of boy life, every effort should be made to awaken the interest of your juvenile patrons. With Jackie Cooper playing the leading role, as the big draw, the youngsters should become enthusiastic, and there is enough real punch in the story to make it attractive to the menfolk.

For the type of the story it really is, the title appears to be a little too lurid. There is nothing sophisticated about "After Divorce." Therefore, it would seem wise to play down the title and concentrate attention on the cast personalities, backing these up with heart-interest catchlines.

The story concerns a boy (Jackie Cooper), the son of Lewis Stone, who is divorced from Lois Wilson. Next to his father Jackie adores his older brother, Maurice Murphy, more than anyone in the world. His mother is married to Conrad Nagel. Nagel wants to love the boy, but he doesn't understand him. Every boyish escapade calls for a reprimand and finally a beating. Resentment towards his stepfather surges in Jackie's heart. Finally after a number of scenes—the comedy of kids, the drama of mother love and the tragedy of a misunderstanding stepfather—Jackie runs away, hoping to go to his real father. Searching for him on the river, his older brother meets with an accident. Jackie finds his father, tells Stone his story and Stone decides to take him away from it all. News is brought to him about his other boy. He goes to him. A blood transfusion is necessary. Nagel's blood is better than his. The real stepfather then comes out to Jackie. Because he has saved his brother's life he is the little boy's hero. Stone notes it and sails away, leaving his boy happy in his newly found associations.

If you disregard the title (which is subject to change) you have plenty to sell the average audience. Your patrons know what to expect from Lewis Stone and Conrad Nagel. Jackie Cooper is more of the real boy that real boys know and understand than he has been in any of his other pictures, even "The Champ." The other juveniles in the picture make it easy to build a campaign that will attract the kids. But the youngsters do not make up your entire patronage. Sell the mothers, grandmothers, aunts, big sisters on the heart-interest, with particular attention devoted to the angle that they will find much in "After Divorce" that will awaken their sympathies. You will be doing the male contingent of your patrons a favor, particularly the dads who don't understand their youngsters, by telling them that here is a picture that will open their eyes and make them see those mischievous, sometimes trying rascals in an entirely different light. Go after this in the right way, keying your audience to expect something different in the line of family stories, and you should do much better than average business.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Hell's Highway

(RKO Radio)

Drama

Stark drama is the keynote of this newest RKO Radio production. It is a realistic story of men condemned to the chain gang in a convict labor camp, of the terrible conditions under which they exist, the cruelties, the hates and fears engendered in the hearts of men condemned to such punishment. There is little comedy other than the ribald jests of rebellious and dangerous men. Romance is present only by inference until the closing sequences.

Because of the subject with which it deals there is nothing dainty about "Hell's Highway." It's bitter drama of bitter men, but despite its harshness it should prove to be a sensational picture. During the past few months a number of newspapers have been devoting much space to conditions in chain-gang prison camps, stories can be expected to have whetted the public appetite to see in picture form what those conditions are supposed to be. In addition, there is the public interest in almost any news story about a big jail break.

The story, which rings in all the stuff that has been featured in headlines, concerns Richard Dix, a dangerous convict, whom the guards fear for his boldness, and whom his fellow prisoners admire for his reckless courage. A break is scheduled. Dix is going along with the others when he hears a voice which he recognizes as that of his younger brother. That voice causes him to desert those who are escaping. A guard murders his wife at the same time the escape is on. People believe the convicts responsible for the killing. They are rounded up and lynched.

Back in the camp later another break is planned. Dix tries to keep his brother from going—knowing that if he is not killed he will be recaptured. But the boy is let out of the cage in which Dix has locked him. Then follows the wild chase, the countryside again up in arms and the militia called out. Johnny meets Dix after all the other convicts have been killed or recaptured. A rifle shot wounds him. Dix realizes the hopelessness of trying to go on and carries the boy back to the convict camp. The warden of the prison tells him that while Johnny can expect clemency, he will be hanged. Dix makes a dash for freedom but is mown down by machine gun bullets.

Inasmuch as "Hell's Highway" is a straight-from-the-shoulder entertainment, no half way measures should be adapted in selling it to your patrons. You will best intrigue their curiosity if you come right out and tell them that this is livid drama, drama of dangerous men who think only of mutiny and murder if that will open the way to freedom to them. Back that up with lines that will impress them that here is realism that will stir their imaginations, and whether they believe the story or not as an exposure, they cannot help but be impressed by its dynamic and dramatic power.

The picture is far too strong to use as a children's feature and it is suggested that you try to substitute something else if you have it booked on a day that a youngster's matinee is scheduled. It should be sold with straight advertising in all the forms you customarily use, and although it is possible to work in some striking exploitation and ballyhoo along the chain-gang idea, the writer thinks that such showmanship would kill off patron interest rather than increase it. While you may conclude that it is strictly a men's picture, there is some heart-interest in it that may hold the interest of women, and while it undoubtedly is a little strong for the more weak-nerved of the feminine sex, there is enough drama to grip their attention.

Given the backing of a truth-telling campaign, with the name of Dix, who is really great in the picture, featured in all advertising, you can count strongly on "Hell's Highway."—McCarthy, Hollywood.

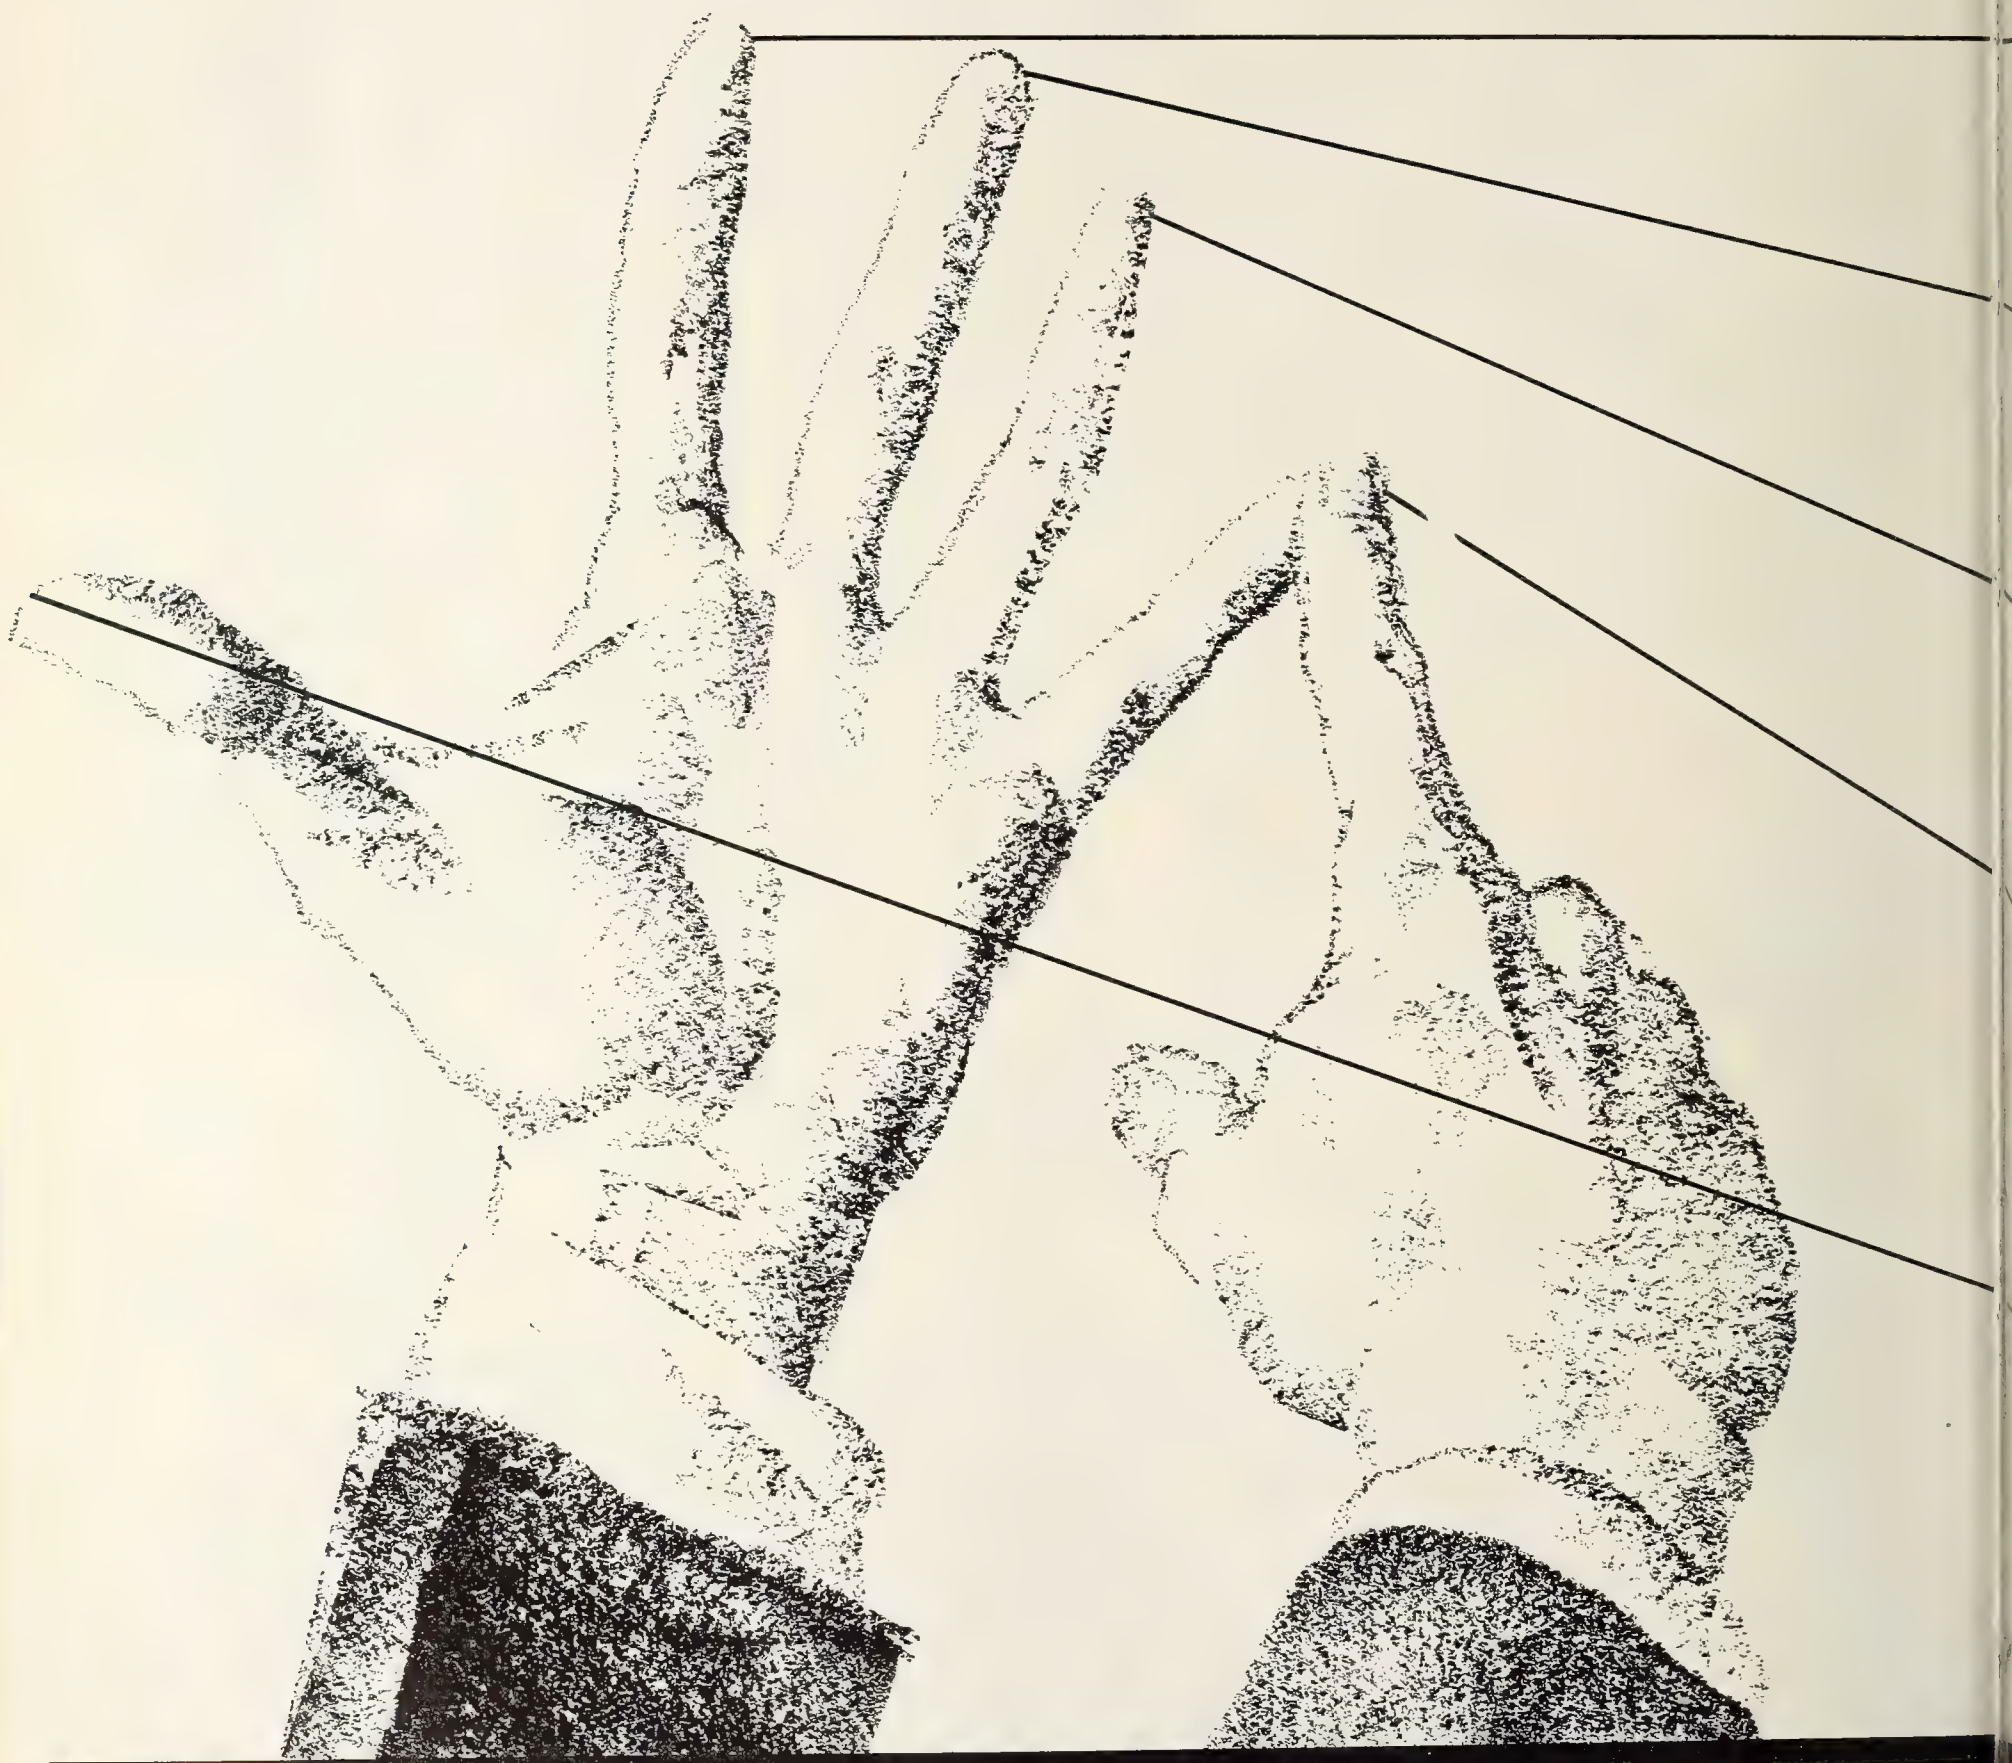
Hollywood Speaks

(Columbia)

Drama



Represent this as Hollywood behind the scenes for perhaps the best results in the selling campaign. It pictures the rise of a girl from nowhere to near-stardom on the strength of publicity in the hands of a smart Hollywood newspaper man. It traces her escapes from the attentions of unscrupulous studio figures, and her surrender of all possibility of a starring career to save the man who gave her the big chance through the power of his pen—and his studio connections.

Pat O'Brien, facile tongued and fast moving, is the best star name for the marquee. Genevieve Tobin, as the almost-star, is the only other name which can mean much to the prospective patrons.

The title offers good exploitation possibilities. Play up the angle of the inside of Hollywood—Hollywood itself speaking from behind the scenes. Be careful what you do promise,

1 STAR. The recent M. P. Herald "Money Making Star" Poll showed him high among the First Ten. And you get him in the excitement of a presidential year. What a break!

2 STORY. By Homer Croy who wrote "They Had To See Paris." A tale of plain people who found headaches in wealth and happiness when they went broke. Plenty of rich humor.

3 SUPPORT. Dorothy Jordan, Irene Rich, Matty Kemp—all swell marquee-dressing. Irene Rich shared in some of Rogers' best. The other two are perfect for young love.

4 DIALOGUE. By Edmund Burke who did such great work in "Bad Girl." He makes this sparkle, too.

5 DIRECTION. David Butler, who made "A Connecticut Yankee" one of Rogers' biggest hits.

DOWN TO EARTH THIS YEAR

however, for there are no notable studio personalities in the picture, even in bit flashes, except one of Jack Holt. The picture is not startling in theme; it rather turns the spotlight on a version of Hollywood, and, as such, should have strength, particularly for the motion picture fan who is always thirsty for knowledge of the making of pictures. Short sequences give some little indication of the technique of the motion picture, the microphone and camera at work.

Several of the characters are spotted in highly unsympathetic roles. They provide the pitfalls for the girl who, when success is in sight, forgets O'Brien and what he did for her, and is completely taken in by dinners and dances and parties. The villain of the piece is Lucien Prival, who, as the brilliant but erratic director, attempts to star Miss Tobin, but for reasons particularly his own. Prival's wife kills herself as a result of his conduct, and scandal surrounds Miss Tobin. O'Brien saves her, but an incriminating letter in the possession of Ralf Harolde brings up a possibility of blackmail. In a fight between Harolde and O'Brien Harolde is accidentally killed. To save O'Brien, Miss Tobin tells her story—and thereby ruins her career.

That brief resume of the story should offer to the exhibitor the suggestion for numerous selling angles. It would be well to bear in mind that the picture is in no way unusual, as regards performance, story or development, but does present the back-stage angle which may well be made the backbone of effective selling. This has no interest for the juvenile.—Aaronson, New York.

Football and Murder

In this picture, you really have two pictures. The first is all football. The second is an exciting murder mystery. Because it will be generally released just at the time that football hysteria is at its height, it looks like a box office natural from that standpoint. But the murder mystery is a story full of excitement right down to the final sequences. There's plenty of the good old fashioned melodrama all the way through, but through Charles Ruggles' broadcasting of the football game and his subsequent mixing up in the crime investigation there is enough comedy to bring forth a lot of laughs.

The picture starts with a trainload of old grads on the way to the football game between State and University, with a stirring musical background of college songs. On the train are a pair of gangsters who represent that fear that gamblers will get a stranglehold on the greatest of all American amateur sports. The gangsters are determined that their team must win. The "big shot" has a brother (Phillips Holmes) playing quarterback on the State team. Through him, he hopes to put States' star player (Johnny Mack Brown) out of the game. After several highly dramatic scenes, the kid "agrees" to go through with the plot. Just as Brown gets away to a clear field for a touchdown, he collapses and dies.

The story then shifts from a sport classic to a murder mystery. Seventy thousand witnesses saw the boy drop. The detective calls in the coroner who proves murder. Now the job is to seize the guilty party. Holmes knows that he is not guilty but he thinks that his brother knows. He runs away and thus draws suspicion on himself. He is arrested in his brother's apartment. Then comes the third degree, with all the players, coaches and attendants on both teams questioned. The detective has some queer ideas and insists upon the game being played over—exactly as it happened on the charts. Holmes is substituted for Brown. Everything is done the same, even to the rubdown. He gets away and collapses. In the meantime, his brother has arrived at the field. He sees his brother collapse. He sees the doctor who did the rubbing down try to escape in the excitement. He chases him to the clubhouse. There he forces a confession that the doctor used nitro-glycerin for a liniment. Both are killed as the doctor drops the explosive and wrecks the room, and then Holmes tells the whole story.

This picture is something quite new in the detailing of college sport stories. You have all the hullabaloo of football to shout about, at a time when interest in football will be at fever pitch. That will get the sport lovers. Then you have the mystery story to talk about, an element that can be used to entice those who might not be so hot about another football picture. There's drama, romance, comedy—all of it exciting. The picture won't have any difficulty clicking with the younger generation, nor should it prove anything but pleasing to the more mature, because of its novel construction.

It's a natural for tie-ups with schools and colleges. And you have that angle which proves that gamblers never can get control of this college sport as long as school loyalty lives. The title is a pip for all sorts of exploitation gags and the cast is more than satisfactory. Johnny Mack Brown is an All-American in his own right, but other players in this picture are all from one of the Los Angeles colleges, boys who will probably be making a name for themselves next fall while the picture is being played.

It can be played on any day. Probably it will be the first of a cycle of football pictures to be released, which will give it an advantage that means box office money to smart showmen.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

War Correspondent

(Columbia)

Drama

Plenty of action, a large portion of melodrama and a bit of real old "hokum" should give the exhibitor something lively and entertaining to sell in this film. The campaign should crackle and be lively enough to bring them in. Promise fast moving entertainment, with wild flying, Chinese bandits and all the trimmings in a Chinese setting.

The title is good for exploitation purposes. It is in the nature of a takeoff on the war correspondent in the recent Chinese trouble, but it is handled from a different angle, with the action centering about the correspondent with a great reputation but a yellow streak, and the he-man type who had been his pal in former days but is at the moment storming the skies as the ace of the Chinese national army. The complication comes over the ace's woman, who is seized and falls in love with the correspondent. He plots his revenge, but succumbs to the bond of the white man and saves the two, when she is captured by the Chinese rebel leader, Fang, who offers as sinister a characterization as could be desired.

The cast names are money in the box office. The Jack Holt and Ralph Graves combination should be a winner for the exhibitor. Holt is the "Chinese" ace; Graves the cowardly correspondent whose swelled head is taken down by Holt and who finds himself in his love for the girl, played satisfactorily by Lila Lee.

Play up Holt and Graves as a combination for all you are worth. Your patrons will be satisfactorily entertained. Holt will supply the thrills when the girl and Graves escape from the pursuing bandits in a car, with Holt in his plane shooting down the pursuers in one-two-three order. Play on the Chinese setting, the flying, the pace of the picture, at the same time emphasizing the angle of the girl between the two men. One she loves, but he is a coward. The other she thought she loved, and he holds their fate in the hollow of his hand. Holt gives one of his tough, hard-boiled performances. Graves does well with a difficult and often unsympathetic role.

Sell this in lively fashion, without promising superlatives of any sort, and the audience should be well entertained. The youngsters should enjoy it as much as the adults.—Aaronson, New York.

Laughs

When Clark and McCullough lose their jobs as street sweepers—a job in which they hilariously illustrate all the ways to handle the broom and shovel as well as how to get off the streets on which there are a lot of horses—they crash into high society via an automobile accident. There they play hob with all the guests, particularly the butler. The main comedy gag, in addition to their own ad libbing, is tearing up clothes. This one seems to run a little long and there are a few draggy spots, but the slapstick fun and smart dialogue should keep the laughs coming. The picture is suitable for running with a feature that is short on average running time. Suitable for adults and children. Running time, 22 minutes.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Around the World in Eight Minutes

(Vitaphone)

A Few Laughs

A nonsensical but occasionally amusing short, in which the two comedians show the unwilling producer the reel they took on a "trip around the world." There are a few laughs here and there when the two show their pictures, which include a group of stock newsreel shots indiscriminately thrown together to the accompaniment of their fairly amusing dialogue and antics in the projection room. A fair subject.—Running time, 8 minutes.

Scrappy Minds the Baby

(Columbia)

Amusing

Amusing and lively, especially for the youngsters, is this number of the Scrappy cartoon series, in which the animated lad attempts to mind the baby, but finds the job very much too big for him. The goldfish have a good time at the behest of the artist and it is all rather amusing.—Running time, 7 minutes.

JENKINS' COLYUM

Crawfordsville, Ind.

Dear Herald:

Crawfordsville, like Marietta, Ohio, has many things to be proud of. It's a town of 10,500 people, the most of whom are home owners, and it has many beautiful homes that would be a credit to some of our larger cities. It is here that Wabash College is located and there is a large printing establishment that employs around 500 people.

This was the home of General Lew Wallace, who, in 1873, wrote "The Fair God," and in 1893 "The Prince of India," and in 1880 the immortal "Ben Hur." General Wallace was born in Brookville, Ind., in 1827, and passed away in Crawfordsville in 1905.

Crawfordsville has two theatres. One, a small second-run house, is operated by a couple of ladies, and the Strand theatre, a Publix house, managed by Carroll Coffel. Mr. Coffel recently played "The Redheaded Woman," with Jean Harlow and Chester Morris, and he staged a redheaded girl beauty contest with twelve contestants. Each girl was selected and sponsored by some one of the merchants and the contest is said to have caused more comment in the Strand theatre than any other stunt ever pulled off.

K. E. Simmons, who lives here in Crawfordsville, is an oldtime showman, having worked in the business from bill poster and projectionist to manager.

We also met John Dittemore, who of evenings operates for a theatre in Lafayette, and attends Purdue University daytimes. If John can hold down both of these jobs, and we don't doubt but what he can, he's a busy boy.

Wherever we go we find exhibitors very much wrought up over producers' plans for exclusive runs and classifying of their pictures with the understanding that class A pictures will be shown only in class A houses and never in second-run houses. If this plan is intended as an exclusive proposition it undoubtedly will mean an attempt to force the public into these exclusive run houses at an advanced admission price.

The day of forcing the public to do anything has passed. They say you can lead a horse to water but you can't make him drink, and that old nag has now become so stubborn that it is even hard to lead him. The public can be coaxed but they won't be driven. As we see it, and unless we lack the common sense of a bullfrog, this business has been built up to what it is today on the revenue derived from second-runs. This classification idea is a pretty high-hatted notion and the producers will find that they can't make the horse drink, for he won't be thirsty. The first thing to do is to create a thirst. They can't feed the public ipecac and the exhibitors aspirin very long at a time without causing nausea.

The exhibitors wherever we have gone are agreed upon one of two things—either the classification plan will work to the advantage of the producer or it will work their finish, and if it works to their advantage then it will be the finish of the independent and second-run houses. We are betting our last nickel that it won't work, and if it does, we will agree to throw in our wife's Mexican poodle. Who wants to take the bet?

To ignore the independent exhibitor is to tear down the foundation upon which this business has been built. Over five thousand of them have been eliminated within the last three years.

The theory that the customer is always wrong is what has held this business back. To turn down a $20.00 contract for a picture because they couldn't get $21.50 is one of the things that common sense can't account for. Films lying on the shelves never produce any revenue.

We heard a film salesman tell an exhibitor the other day that his service would cost him more this year than it did last. His company lost the revenue from that theatre when they might just as well have had it.

And another thing, as Andy Gump says. T. I. Sollers, of the Lyric theatre, at Covington, Ind., tells us that he played "The Covered Wagon" for four days in his town of 2,000 for $2,280 gross business. Why not a few more "Covered Wagons?" "The Old Nest" put Samuel Goldwyn on his feet and made the exhibitors a lot of money. "Over the Hill" was a Godsend to the exhibitors and William Fox. Why not a few more "Old Nests" and "Over the Hills?" "The Four Horsemen" was a mopup everywhere. Will we have any more "Four Horsemen?" The trend of the producing mind seems to be toward "sexy" and sophisticated drama. Why not forget about New York for a while and make pictures for the United States? Mr. Sollers says that if they will give him six "Covered Wagons" a year they can keep all the rest of their product, that will be all he will want.

Well, that's that, and now you can tell us we are crazy and we will look at you and smile. But if you tell us that we are a "yes man" you'd better ring for the ambulance before you say it, for you will need it.

Mr. J. P. Kratz operates the Lyric theatre at Monticello, Ill. He also owns and operates three of Illinois' best farms. He says that so far the farms have been able to hold the Lyric up. He is also a stockholder and director in one of the banks and we presume he would take on additional duties if the sun didn't set only twice a year. The days are entirely too short for Mr. Kratz, but in spite of that he finds time to read the HERALD from kivver to kivver. That's why he is so well posted on picture matters.

No, there won't be any poetry this time.

Omaha Owner Suing on Restraint of Trade Charge

Victor Newton, Omaha, has brought suit in federal court at Omaha for $13,000 against seven distributors and the Omaha Film Board of Trade, charging restraint of trade affecting his theatre in Pacific Junction, Iowa.

In May Mr. Newton and Thomas Leddy received a judgment of $2,000 in five years of litigation, and the court at that time ordered payment by the defendants of triple damages, or $6,000, in accordance with the anti-trust law relative to damages. If Mr. Newton should win the present suit, he possibly would receive $39,000.

THEATRE RECEIPTS

The total of theatre receipts from 101 theatres in 20 key cities of the United States and Canada were recorded at a total of $1,306,232 for the calendar week ended August 13, 1932. The figure was $22,255 lower than that for the previous calendar week, ended August 6, when the same number of theatres in the 20 cities reported an aggregate gross of $1,328,487. Eight new "lows" were registered in the more recent week, and there were no new highs. In the preceding week there was one new "high" and seven new "lows" were reached.

Baby Stars Offer Riot of Laughter

"THE PIE-COVERED WAGON"

Educational

Producer ..... Jack Hays
Direction ..... Charles Lamont
Story ..... Jack Hays
Photography ..... Dwight Warren
Cast ..... The Baby Stars

A lot of babies, barely out of the cradle, romp across the screen in "The Pie-Covered Wagon" in a manner that supplies a howl in every foot of film. They hold up their didies with one hand, and deliver their lines in such an adult fashion that it will tickle the risibilities of any picture-goer, no matter what age.

To say that they are a scream is putting it mildly. They are a complete panic with no reservations. And there isn't a showman in any part of the country who will hesitate a moment to spot this short on his program once he takes a peek at it.

It burlesques the "covered wagon" formula used in feature pictures. A gang of kid pioneers are attacked by another gang of kid Indians, with the pioneers routing their assailants in a custard-pie offensive. There even is a love story, the heroine being rescued from the Indians by her hero. Jack Hays deserves a prize of some sort for originating the idea, as do Charles Lamont, for direction, and Dwight Warren for photography.

Educational Exchange In Europe Considered

Proposed establishment of a separate system of exchanges for Educational in Europe is to be discussed at conferences in New York between E. W. Hammons, president, and Joe Brandt, president of World Wide. Mr. Brandt was to arrive from Hollywood Wednesday. Mr. Hammons returned last week from Europe.

Ideal Films has handled Educational product in England, and the World Wide pictures, many of them made in England, have been distributed by the respective British companies. Tiffany has been handled by Arthur Lee.

Minister Defeats Van Hyning

E. Van Hyning, president of the M. P. T. O. of Kansas and Missouri, was defeated for the Republican nomination for state representative from Kansas City in the state primaries. A local minister was the victor. Van Hyning's opposition played up his appeal for Sunday shows.

Lefcourt Starts New Films Unit With Jack Trop

Remington Pictures Corporation was launched this week to produce and distribute motion pictures on the independent market. Financed by A. E. Lefcourt, New York builder, who is president, Remington is now arranging its production program and is negotiating for rights to pictures and stories. Production will be in Hollywood, where Louis Schneider, of the former Meyer and Schneider independent New York circuit, is now completing filming details and a production staff.

J. D. Trop, for many years in the independent distribution field, is associated with Mr. Lefcourt as vice-president and general sales manager. Sam Friedman, formerly with Manhattan Playhouses, is also financially and actively interested in the new company.

New Consolidated Plant Is Opened

Officers and directors of Consolidated Film Industries this week formally dedicated "Consolidated Park," new $2,000,000 film printing laboratories located on Main Street in Fort Lee, N. J. Practically all Eastern laboratory activities of the company will be concentrated at the new plant, which has an annual release-print capacity of 1,000,000,000 feet and a large research laboratory to test materials, according to Consolidated.

Allied activities such as the making of titles, stills, lobby displays and other accessories are also housed in Consolidated Park.

Arnow to Succeed LeMaire As Warner Casting Director

Maxwell Arnow, Warner eastern talent scout, who arrived on the Coast this week for conferences with Jack L. Warner, vice-president in charge of production, has been appointed casting director at the studio, effective August 19. Mr. Arnow succeeds Rufus Le Maire.

Though Mr. Le Maire has not as yet concluded a deal for his future connection, he says he has "several irons in the fire." It is considered probable that he will go to Paramount as associate producer as the result of a deal now pending with Sam Katz, Paramount production chief, now in New York.

RKO Theatre Executives On Trip to Coast

Several executives of RKO Theatres are making a trip to the West Coast, including Harold B. FIRST THE EMBLEM OF FAITH THEN THE MARK OF DEATH

By all means, exhibitors, think up some way of overcoming your patrons' prejudice against going to see foreign pictures and give them a treat with the latest English Sherlock Holmes picture to reach these shores, "The Sign of Four." It is one of the more logical of the Holmes adventure tales, it has a love interest and, wonder of wonders, she's a beautiful blonde who looks a lot like Constance Bennett. It has pace, suspense and excitement, thanks to the director, Graham Cutts, and its production supervisor, a Hollywood product, Rowland V. Lee. The photography by Robert Martin and Robert de Grasse has caught the eerie atmosphere to perfection. The recording is far better than has come to be expected and the English accent has been reduced to a minimum so that the lines are perfectly understandable to American ears. And the acting in every role is swell with more especial tribute due to Arthur Wontner as the immortal Sherlock Holmes and Graham Soutten as the vindictive Jonathan Small. In fact, of all the interpretations we have seen of the famous Holmes character, it is to Wontner we'd give the laurels. He is to us the living incarnation of Conan Doyle's favorite brain-child and he gives a grand performance. This is good, clean, entertainment all the way through, and what's even better, it's entertainment for the whole family. Get behind this one and give it the break it deserves and your customers will be plenty satisfied. And word of mouth advertising will help you.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

CHARLES E. "CHICK" LEWIS
Chairman and Editor

An International Association of Showmen Meeting in MOTION PICTURE HERALD
Every Week—for Mutual Benefit and Progress

CONDUCTED BY AN EXHIBITOR FOR EXHIBITORS

THOSE "BUNK" MEETINGS!

IT HAS LONG BEEN the practice of many circuits to hold regional meetings so as to bring together large groups of house managers. Fundamentally this is a great idea and has no end of possibilities for both the circuit and the men themselves.

But, unfortunately, they have turned these fine, friendly meetings into nothing less than an anvil chorus where the house managers listen to a lot of applesauce about what a great outfit they are working for and what the future holds for them and how the company is spending umpty-umph millions on productions that will stand the customers out in the street for blocks and blocks.

And as soon as the formal meeting is over the men get together in groups and give vent to their honest opinions and feelings. The hammer falls fast and hard and generally the whole meeting takes on the aspect of a protest meeting, with the protests officially unspoken.

Many of the executives of the various circuits do not seem to realize that these house managers are having a terrible time making both ends meet at their present cut salaries and that every effort should be made to cheer these men up so that they will continue to do their best.

It is not exactly soothing to the spirits or feelings to hear about the many millions being spent on pictures, when cold, hard experience has taught these men that the money spent was not reflected at the box office. And they must swallow all of such stuff while mentally going nuts trying to figure out how they will be able to buy the kiddies the new clothes they need when school opens, or that new coat for the missus.

WHAT THIS BUSINESS NEEDS is more show women like Anna Bell Ward of Lexington, Ky. One portion of Miss Ward's recent letter to the Club is well worth quoting. Here it is:

". . . our public believes all the things we say about our theatres. Ours are two of the best kept houses to be found in the country. The depression may have reduced a few of our regular expenditures, but it has not made us stop the use of the paint brush nor have we cut down the size of mops and brooms or put the squeeze on soap and water."

How many theatres, laboring under the hokum that depression means cutting down on the cleaning force, etc., are permitting their houses to smell dusty and dirty? Quite a few, we can assure you. Yet, if your house is not healthy and immaculate, how can you expect the people of your community to patronize it?

Shaving the overhead is, we agree, a most important detail in theatre operation today, but don't let it go so far as to result in a dirty or ill-run house. That would be far more expensive than any saving you may think you have made.

A MOST WELCOME VISITOR to Club headquarters the other day was G. B. Odlum, a showman of long experience and well known throughout upper New York State and the middle west.

"G. B." has lived through many a depression and found from past experience that hard work is always the remedy until general conditions take an upward trend. And he is the type who practices what he preaches.

PERSONAL CONTACT WILL LEAD to more cooperative tieups than any other method of promotion. This will be attested to by an endless number of showmen who have long ago acquired that much necessary ability to make friends.

The successful showman of today and tomorrow is the man who is known, well liked and respected by the better people in his town and especially so among the merchants and newspaper men. He does not try to get the best of every bargain, but, rather, is content to give as well as take, with the result that he finds many new avenues open to his box office by reason of the fact that when he is consulted he can work out something advantageous to both the merchant and his theatre. Therefore his advice and counsel is often sought.

Theatre owners, circuit or independent, must realize that a good manager need not be tied down to his theatre all day long. He is far more valuable in the afternoon when engaged in circulating around the various places where he can make good contacts and promote ideas and results for his theatre than standing around like a stuffed dummy.

From many years' experience we are firm believers in managers being active in many other ways around the town besides running their theatres. Any circuit or theatre owner caring to enter into a debate on this subject may start it off any time they choose. We'll prove it to their own satisfaction or print a retraction of this statement. Fair enough?

"CHICK"

DICK KIRSCHBAUM'S LOBBY LAFFS!

It doesn't seem possible that anyone so dumb could exist these days, but it's true—only too true—advises Leo Young, of the Isis Theatre, Lynchburg, Va. So our renowned cartoonist, Dick Kirschbaum, took Leo's idea and made the accompanying cartoon out of it. Seems to us that he has sketched a mighty good likeness of one of those old pests who habitually haunt the box office.

GRIFFIN IS ANOTHER SHOWMAN WHO FAVORS THE BALLYHOO STYLE

One of our more recently elected members, W. M. Griffin, manager of the Gem Theare, Cairo, Ill., like many another Round Tabler these days, favors the ballyhoo method as one of the best to attract patronage.

Aside from support given the picture by Cagney and Blondell fans when he played "Crowd Roars," a little old red-painted Ford racing car, equipped with a siren borrowed from the Chief of Police and bereft of a muffler, caused a mild sensation as it roared and screamed its way through Cairo and surroundings towns. The siren could be heard six blocks away and every person on the streets and a lot more in store and house windows, were all set to read the banner when the car passed. On the evening of opening day the car was placed in front of the theatre where it was observed by hundreds of people who made their usual Saturday night Pilgrimage to town.

Griffin also arranged a tie-up with a local Jantzen bathing suit dealer, whose store is on the principal shopping street, to feature Joan Blondell in the "Formal Bathing Suit," not forgetting by any means to remind passers-by that she was also featured in "Crowd Roars" at the Gem.

The above, coupled with extra teaser advertising in the newspapers and distribution of 2,000 teaser cards and 100 window cards, plus extra displays in the theatre lobby, put the show over despite the hottest weather of the season. Griffin also strongly recommends the 40 x 60 black and white enlargement put out by the distributors.

The auto bally described above was also used by the Gem Theatre Company to exploit the same picture when it played their theatre at Anna, a town 38 miles north of Cairo. It happened that a large parade was held in the town three days prior to picture opening in dedication of a new highway and the little red racer rated third position behind the car that carried the Governor of the State of Illinois. Ten thousand people from the surrounding countryside witnessed the two-mile long parade and knew that "Crowd Roars" was in town. We have a couple of snap shots of the bally at hand but both are too faint for clear reproduction.

We believe that Griffin may be considered more or less a fixture, at least as far as his own plans at the present are concerned, in Cairo. He migrated there from a small Missouri theatre and has been at the helm of the Gem since it was completed three years ago. His house has everything in the way of modern equipment—a fine sound system, washed air cooling, theatrephone for the hard of hearing and whatnot. Grif' is 26 years of age and celebrated the fourth anniversary of his marriage only a few weeks ago. We predict he'll celebrate many more anniversaries in honor of both home and show business, and we trust he will continue to keep his Club informed of how matters are going on in his theatre.

BILL BERGMANN MADE A CALL ON COHN OVER IN SOUTH OMAHA, NEB.

We hear through Round Tabler Bill Bergmann that fellow member, A. H. Cohn, manager of the Roseland and Tivoli Theatres, South Omaha, Neb., is deeply regretful of the fact that he hasn't contributed to this department for the past several weeks. Bill called around to see him a short time ago and his alibi is that every bit of his spare time has been given to business. When we tell you that Cohn, in addition to looking after two houses, books and handles exploitation for eight or ten other Nebraska Theatre houses, we know his brother showmen will understand the situation.

However, Bergmann has an observing eye and we are indebted to him for a bit of information on the way Cohn is handling the China Night stunt, which, he states, has been far more effective than the old way of handing out one piece of the set every time the patron attended a show. Cohn had some tickets printed and these are given to patrons on Friday nights. When 15 of them are collected the patron becomes entitled to a complete 19-piece set of China. A time limit notice is, of course, carried on the bottom of the ticket.

We note also that Cohn got out some special heralds a short time ago for foreign patronage. One on "Symphony of Six Million" carried both English and Yiddish copy. Another, in Italian, catered to that portion of the population.

It seems reasonable that a lady patron would far rather collect tickets entitling her to a full set of China than to pick up a piece now and then. At any rate, Nebraska Theatres are using this Beverage Set stunt in all of their houses and we understand business has been doubled, and even tripled, on Friday nights through use of it. Thanks to Bergmann for the information, and we hope that Cohn will some day find time to drop this department a few lines.

WALTMON REMINDS US THAT PROGRAM ADS CUT EXPENSE

A reminder that advertising on the last page of the theatre program can be made the means of cutting down the budget these days is sent the Club by Burgess Waltmon, manager of the Orpheum Theatre, Fulton, Ky.

Samples of his program at hand show that four small ads solicited from a drug store, a grocer, an ice cream concern and a restaurant, take care of all expense connected with putting out the program. All of which will be interesting to members who are on the lookout for a means of shaving down expenses, and we are obliged to Waltmon for bringing this to our attention. We will look forward to receiving other tips from him just as often as he can find the spare time to write.

ATTRACTIVE AD WAS FEATURE OF CAMPAIGN MADE BY L. METZGER

A very attractive newspaper ad showing a film star in flimsy costume and copy along the lines that "Cleopatra in all her glory had nothing on Molly Louvain," was the main feature of the exploitation campaign that put over "The Strange Love of Molly Louvain" at the new Spreckels Theatre in San Diego, Cal.

Other features of the campaign, which was handled by Lou Metzger, included a newspaper tie-up in which free theatre passes were given to people who recognized a girl who paraded the main streets of the town dressed as "Molly Louvain." The newspaper ran the details of the stunt for several days prior to the picture's opening. In addition to the above, Metzger arranged for a knock-out farmer ballyhoo which consisted of having a farmer and his wife walking up and down the streets, carrying a couple of suitcases which read, "We came all the way in from the country to hear about 'The Strange Love of Molly Louvain.'" This stunt created no end of talk, but Lou didn't stop there. He tied up with Western Union for the free delivery of 1,000 telegrams to office buildings. 10,000 mash notes were sent to the sailors in town, the notes being signed by Molly Louvain. The "No Children Admitted" idea, which was used throughout the ads, also worked wonders. To top off this swell campaign, Lou arranged for a preview for every beauty parlor operator in San Diego. He says every customer they had went away sold on the entertainment value of the picture.

TOM PHELAN STILL GRABBING SPACE IN LOCAL NEWSPAPERS

Proof of the ability of Thomas Phelan, manager of the Paramount Theatre, Long Branch, N. J., to secure gratis space appeared a short time ago in a local newspaper on occasion of the launching of Paramount-Publix's campaign to find an unknown player to take the part of the "Panther Woman" in "Island of Lost Souls."

A four-column head, photo layout and caption graced the top of the page, along with a large two-column entry blank and story setting forth a description of the nation-wide contest. A very nice spread and much to the credit of this enterprising Round Tabler down in Jersey. Let the Club know how your end of the contest progresses, Tom, and, in the meantime, keep up the good work.

CARNIVAL ANGLE IN SERIAL EFFECTIVELY USED BY M. H. NICOL

While the title of the serial, "Shadow of the Eagle," does not suggest the carnival angle to the picture, M. H. Nicol, manager of the Palace Theatre, Waterloo, Iowa, used that slant to put the attraction across.

The accompanying photos show the two clowns in make-up with musical instruments they played at every principal street intersection in the business section of the city. They drew the attention of thousands of people and only cost the theatre $3 for the entire day. One of the photos shows the signs carried on backs to advertise the serial.

Nicol calls attention to the fact that he has been a member of the Club for over a year and apologizes for not sending in more material for the benefit of his fellow Round Tablers, stating that he really feels indebted to this department for publishing many constructive slants on showmanship and promising that he will send other material from time to time in the future. That's the proper spirit, Nick, and we'll be on the lookout for your contributions. Accept our thanks for the one mentioned above.

SUSSMAN INVITED 300 BLIND PEOPLE TO "SEE" PICTURE

The unique idea of inviting over 300 blind people to "see" "Symphony of Six Million" was put in effect a short time ago by Ludwig Sussman, enterprising exhibitor in charge of the Adelphi Theatre, Chicago, Ill.

How blind people extracted entertainment from a picture will naturally have to be explained. Prior to the show a synopsis of the picture was read to the assembled guests. From this they got the plot of the picture and were prepared for the dialogue when seated in the theatre. Some preferred not to learn of the plot beforehand, wanting to figure out the picture from what they heard.

Such a lot of favorable publicity resulted from the above move that Sussman has adopted the policy of giving free seats to the blind every Tuesday. Thirty seats in the house are also equipped with ear phones for deaf people and frequently there are not enough of these seats to meet the demand.

KEEPING UP WITH THE TIMES!

By GUY JONES

This time cartoonist Jones gives a well meaning manager a sort of a razzing for employing the well known "no-bull" gag, but it appears as though this martyr to the cause of showmanship really did pick out a gentleman cow, or else the town wits pulled a fast one and changed animals on him while he wasn't looking.

NIAGARA INFLUENCE STIRS ROSENTHAL TO AGGRESSIVE TACTICS

The following campaign will indicate that other things have been falling besides the Falls up at Niagara, N. Y., where the renowned Morris Rosenthal, always a showman, so adroitly manages the Strand Theatre.

For one thing, admission prices to his house fell over night from 50 cents to 35 cents for the summer season, due to some masterminding on the part of Morris, and according to some tear sheets at hand this act caused a bit of consternation among neighborhood opposition. The main reason for putting the price change in effect was that tax and a 15½ discount on Canadian cash had to be shaved from the fifty cent charge. The chief cause of annoyance to the opposition was that the change went into effect right on the heels of their own reduction from 50 cents to 40 cents, which left the Strand in the lead by five cents worth.

Smash ads in the newspaper announced the change of prices and the entire front was circussed with the same copy, two sign artists working all night to break the announcement the following morning. Surrounding towns within a radius of 22 miles were covered with a heavily bannered sound truck, and a crew of 20 boys and 4 men covered the town ward by ward with hand bills. All towns around Niagara and in adjacent Canadian territory were billed with one-sheets and window cards, and a street banner was erected on the main stem. To top off all this a local Follies, consisting of 80 kiddies, was put on as an added attraction. Working in conjunction with the school, Rosenthal secured cooperation for the distribution of 10,000 hand bills and cards.

We also have a bit of information at hand on what this member of our Club did to exploit "Blonde Captive" and "Red Headed Woman." For the former he circussed the town and built the biggest flash front that his community had ever seen made for a picture. In addition to a street bally he staged a parade of blonde bathing beauties on opening night and consequently broke the house record for many a moon. Extra advertising space was used and a number of stores tied in for the use of windows. The accompanying photo will convey a fair idea of the way the front was fixed up.

A mammoth cutout head of Jean Harlow featured the front made for "Red Headed Woman" and we have Morris' word for it that this made a real flash. Tie-ups for the display of stills included a dairy concern, book and hosiery stores, department stores and beauty parlors. His regular tie-ups with restaurants and hotels for imprint of theatre copy on menus was also in effect on this picture.

It looks as though Round Tabler Rosenthal was in full stride on his Niagara job and more power to him, say we. What it takes to put life in a theatre this showman has plenty; hence, we'll be on the lookout for some highly flattering reports on box office reports from the Strand. We are reliably informed that these have already shown a marked increase since he took over the helm.

A WILD AND WOOLY STUNT PUT ACROSS BY Z. W. SCHNEIDER

Out in Sunnyside, Wash., where the West IS West and Z. W. Schneider manages the Liberty Theatre for Inland Theatres, it apparently takes a wild and wooly stunt to wake up the natives. It is described as a "simple little bally that helped put over 'Rider of Death Valley.' Simple, yes; and rather effective, we should say!

This is the way it's done: take three cowpunchers, dressed in full regalia, and have them chase a fourth down the main street of your town and into the theatre, all the while whooping and shooting blanks at one another. As they enter the house the trio chase the "bad man" down the aisle and wind up by going out the rear exit door. Schneider states that to an unsuspecting public all this is quite in the nature of a real thrill, and makes patrons theatre conscious as well. Additional atmosphere was supplied by fashioning an old-style hitching rail in front of the theatre, to which the cowpunchers tied their horses. This also acted as an attention-getter.

We don't doubt for one moment that Schneider secured results with the stunt described above. As to its general adaptability, we'll leave the matter to his brother Round Tablers and let them fit the stunt to their communities. Here and there it might prove a strain on weak hearts. In any event, however, we thank this member for shooting the tip along and we'll hope to hear more concerning his show-selling activities out in Sunnyside.

BILL LEVEY ON WAY TO EUROPEAN PORTS VIA BERMUDA ISLES

The Club is in receipt of a few words from Bill Levey, late of Port Washington, Long Island,, N. Y., and one of those ultra-fortunate folk en route for Europe via Bermuda. He is taking a well earned vacation.

While in Bermuda, Bill, from force of habit, wandered right into the theatre district and made himself acquainted with the managers of the several theatres. Since he talked Round Table to all of them, we'll be on the lookout for their applications in due time.

But what is more to the point right now is the theatre page of a Bermuda newspaper we have at hand. Like everything else down in that country the copy is conservative. However, all in all the paper gives amusements a very good break. Only one of the ads, that of the Mechanics Hall Theatre with "Under Eighteen" carried any display mats.

At the time this is written Bill Levey is probably off the Azores or passing through the Straits of Gibraltar on his way to Sunny It' or some other Mediterranean port. Here's hoping he has a fine trip and that when he returns to this land the Club may again claim him as one of its most consistent contributors of live and interesting yarns on the art of selling shows.

BRYAN ATTRACTED MANY NEW PATRONS TO CARNIVAL WEEK

Carnival Week, with eight days of unusual activities, was staged recently by Bunny Bryan, manager of the Belmont Theatre, a Publix-Balaban & Katz house in Chicago, Ill., and was instrumental in bringing many new patrons to the house. Bryan was ably assisted by G. Romine, assistant manager; Chief Usher Mandy, and the entire staff.

A mammoth kiddies party opened the Week on Saturday, offering free candy, ice cream and pop to the youngsters and featuring pie-eating and other contests. An unusually strong and lengthy show was staged on Sunday. Monday night a Beautyrest mattress, auto radio and a rowing machine were awarded in the usual fashion to patrons, and on Tuesday $50 in gold was given away on the stage.

Stage Wedding

A stage wedding featured the Wednesday night show, when ceremonies were performed that united a couple selected by popular vote. Fifteen local merchants tied-in with this event and the local paper went so far as to state that it "was one of the most realistic and solemn events we have ever witnessed."

On Thursdays more give-aways, including a living room suite, several pieces of aluminum ware, an auto radio and a console radio, were awarded the patrons. One of the large department stores staged a bathing suit and sports attire revue on Friday night, during which session 35 minor give-aways were made. The Revue was publicized in 50,000 circulars paid for and distributed by the store, and on the store's bulletin boards. Nearly two hundred employees of the store attended the show. Carnival Week closed with another big kiddie party on Saturday, featured by the promotion of a 65-piece Girls Harmonica Band on stage for the occasion.

While no records were broken on grosses for the week, because of general conditions, Bryan states that the stunt did result in a general increase in box office receipts, and was the means of attracting a whole lot of new customers to the theatre at a time when the selling of the new cooling plant was particularly desirable.

Efficient Staff

Every member of the staff was a given a definite assignment and the amount of cooperation obtained in the theatre's neighborhood speaks for their efficiency. Twenty-five excellent windows were secured, and clippings at hand testify to the generous amount of story space and free display given the event by the local newspaper. The wardrobe and other gifts for the couple married on stage were all promoted, as were all awards given away during the Week.

Bryan feels that one of the biggest things accomplished by staging an event of this sort was the fact that it put himself and entire organization on their toes at a season of the year when some are inclined to accept the situation as one that cannot be helped out to any marked degree. Good work, Bunny, and we're passing your idea along to the other fellows in this showman's outfit. Let us hear from you again just as often as you can spare the time to send along a few lines. All your old friends over in New Jersey will be glad to hear that you are plugging along in the same old manner.

HARRIS HAS REVIVED OLD TRADING STAMPS GAG TO BOOST TRADE

Remember the old trading stamp gag, such as Sperry & Hutchinson (Green Trading) stamps, that used to be so popular in bygone days? Well, according to a notation made on the back of a circular by Milt Harris, advertising manager for the Fox-St. Louis Theatre, St. Louis, Mo., that old dyed-in-the-wool premium has been revived and is going great guns.

St. Louis merchants are giving the stamps with all purchases and all one has to do to gain admission to the Fox-St. Louis is to fill an eight-page folder and present it to the theatre box office. Harris is keenly enthusiastic about this gag.

BILL WEISS EXCITED PATRONS WITH LOOK AT OLD BEER BARRELS

Just old fashioned beer barrels, Club members—were effectively used by Bill Weiss, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Passaic, N. J., to exploit "Wet Parade."

A week prior to playdate fifteen of the barrels were displayed in the lobby, along with signs that created a lot of amusing comment. A miniature bar was obtained and displayed outside the theatre. Empty bottles, sawdust in front of the rail and signs on the bar helped carry out the atmosphere. Enlargements and stills were made by a local photographer, gratis, for display in lobby and outside.

Tell us more, Bill, will you?

Step up your receipts—speed up your profits —flash these new trailers across your screen, and watch the audience pack your theatre night after night! These are the trailers exhibitors themselves asked for—trailers that don't stop at entertainment. They SELL!

STOWELL'S COSTLESS CARNIVAL!

A WIDE range of activities, noteworthy for no-cost angles and value as excellent attractions, featured the campaign made during Publix Carnival Week by Harry C. Stowell, manager of the Paramount Theatre, Middletown, N. Y. Each night some novel and interesting musical stunt or tie-up materially helped box office receipts.

Monday night a male singing organization was promoted to render a pleasing ten minute program at both evening performances. On Tuesday Stowell, who at one time was musical conductor at the Bardavon Theatre, Poughkeepsie, and assistant manager Lehmann, a former vaudeville actor, gave a ten minute program of violin, vocal duets and solos. John Lawrence assisted at the organ. Needless to state, no expense voucher was put in for this one. This performance was billed as "Surprise Night."

The accompanying photo illustrates the stunt used for one performance on Wednesday night and was the result of a tie-up made with a local dress shop. Ten local girls promenaded in beach wear and bathing suits and the best looking one was presented with an all-expense tour to New York City and return. The entire revue was promoted without any cost to the theatre.

Local Attraction

On Thursday and Friday, during two performances, matinee and night, the attraction consisted of twenty pupils from a local dancing academy. These juveniles all came from prominent local families and appeared once at the matinee and once in the evening. Again, this attraction was promoted at no cost whatsoever to the theatre. On Saturday, matinee only, every child attending the theatre was presented with a giant lollipop.

One week prior to Carnival Week an arrangement was made with a local department store for a novel and no-cost foyer display. With the use of trellis work and artificial flowers craftsmen from the store transformed the foyer into a flower garden, using this setting for a display of lawn and porch furniture. In return for foyer space the store gave away a $15 porch glider and donated 40 inches of free newspaper space. While on the subject of free newspaper space, let us state that Stowell personally promoted 104 inches in the only daily publication in the city. He and assistant manager Lehmann acted as M.C.'s, and two organists were also promoted to furnish musical accompaniments.

Digressing from Carnival Week for the time, let us touch upon a tie-up and give-away Stowell made the following week. He tied-in with the Middletown Independent Retail Grocers Association for the give-away of 20 baskets of groceries valued at approximately $8 each. One of the baskets was given away every night except Saturday during the month of July. In return for the giveaways and space in the foyer for display of wares the Association paid for a quarter page ad in the newspaper once a week over a four-week period. It also footed the bill for an extra give-away on Thursday night of an all-expense tour to New York City and return. This trip was good for two and included hotel accommodations in a leading hotel, sight seeing trips and tickets to the New York Paramount Theatre.

Deserves Credit

Stowell certainly put over a corking campaign for his Carnival Week and we're sure it will be of interest to other members of this Club. When it comes to promoting this Round Tabler is there with both feet. His tie-up with the grocers was also a business getter and one that can be handled in most any city. By this time he undoubtedly has a few more tricks up his sleeve and we'll look forward to hearing about them.

THINGS HAVE BEEN HAPPENING TO LEE UP IN BATH, N. Y.

The latest news of interest to this department from Bath, N. Y., where H. C. Lee manages the Babcock Theatre, is the arrival of a nine pound Miss Lee and additional duties in show business for her father in Corning, N. Y. However, everything is running along smoothly and, to quote Mr. Lee, "the Daughter Is A Knockout."

But to get back to the subject of theatres and what Lee has been doing in addition to selling shows at the Babcock. Things were tough over in Corning and the Central New York Theatres Company (Skouras) changed managers, installing Walter Savage. Lee has been putting in an average of three days per week for several weeks in Corning to get business running on an even keel and we hear the results of his labors are becoming manifest. He and Savage have also opened up the Palace, a smaller house in Corning, and are counting on working up a share of the trade for that house.

Business in Bath continues at about the same pace—only a little under last year's figures. Lee keeps on plugging his attractions each week with programs and heralds, and lately started a popularity contest through a tie-up with the newspaper. He's also using a two-for-one idea in towns outside of Bath which is bringing in people he never saw before. Gas stations in the out-of-town places are giving people a ticket with each dollar's purchase that is good for one admission when presented with a regular admission.

Lee is certainly in line for congratulations from his fellow Round Tablers, both on account of his recent distinction as the father of a brand new baby daughter and the fact that he was sent to a distant city to act in a supervisory capacity. It's really a sort of a promotion and we hope he is justly rewarded for his fine efforts. In the meantime, we'll await further information from this Club member.

CAREFULLY PLANNED CAMPAIGN BROUGHT RESULTS TO BOUCHER

Third Anniversary Week was put over to excellent results a short time ago by Frank Boucher, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Winchester, Va., by working out a carefully planned campaign.

Effort included the planting of special newspaper stories in advance, followed by stories on new product; the distribution of special Anniversary programs; placing of bumper cards on several hundred autos in and around Winchester; the promotion of a huge birthday cake for display in lobby, with gag to guess weight; tie-up with Lifebuoy soap people for give-away to persons who solved gag in local window displays in drug stores, along with distribution of throwaways by merchant; a tie-up with ice cream concern for give-away of ice cream to all children attending a special Anniversary Children's Party; use of special lobby cards and signs well in advance to advertise event, and the promotion of a full page cooperative ad, which was practically paid for by merchants.

We note also that Boucher put across a corking campaign recently on "Blonde Captive," consisting of an especially decorated front which closely followed the one made for the Metropolitan Theatre, Washington, D. C.; distribution from stores and theatre of a bookmark used in connection with a guest ticket gag, and a deal with a bank for giveaway of 500 packages of souvenir cards put out on picture by exchange. (See press sheet.)

As usual, Boucher came through with a campaign that insured wide coverage for his Third Anniversary special and we've listed the above in order that some of his fellow Club members may be reminded of the several stunts when planning one of their own Anniversary Weeks.

New Detroit House Opens

Detroit's newest motion picture theatre, the Carlton, recently opened. Phillip Gorelick, of Regal Pictures Exchange, is owner, but the house will be operated under lease to John Igna. The Carlton seats 900. It marks the second theatre built in the city during the past two seasons.

HOLLYWOOD PREMIERE USED BY WRIGHT FOR OPENING CAGNEY FILM

All the complicated trimmings of a regular "Hollywood Premiere" were used for the opening of "Crowd Roars" by Dick Wright, manager of the Strand Theatre, Akron, Ohio—flashy front, powerful spots and everything.

On the afternoon prior to opening the entire front of the house was barricaded with 6x10-foot boards announcing time of opening, etc., with special 3-sheet surrounded with thirty stills from the picture. The special front had a background of orange and yellow checkerboard effect with illustrations of Cagney and Blondell. Eight by ten stills surrounded the poster illustrations.

The two large heads mounted on each top corner of the building were approximately nine feet square and the sign cloth banner running across the front was forty-five feet long. Five large power lamps were borrowed from the General Electric Company of Cleveland and were laced on the marquee so as to focus on the building. Two hundred and seventy-five pennants were strung from the marquee to the top of the building, the strong light from the spots and the colors of pennants blending in a very effective flash.

Ten days before opening two racing cars were placed in the foyer under spot lights with appropriate copy on the picture. There days prior to opening one of the cars was placed on the sidewalk in front of the box-office with a large, special three-sheet. The car was on display daily from opening to closing with an attendant to answer questions, attracting attention of thousands of people who passed the theatre.

Other efforts included a forty-five minute musical program by the University of Akron Band in front of theatre; the taking of pictures of the crowd by movie cameras mounted on a flat bottom truck; tire covers announcing attraction carried by all Yellow Cabs day before opening; the placing of window streamers on all city street cars; the distribution in office buildings, stores and other spots of 10,000 attractive heralds; a display of winners of the last ten Indianapolis races through courtesy of the Firestone Rubber Company; wearing of white overalls by ushers to lend atmosphere; the running of a trailer two weeks in advance, and a newspaper campaign consisting of teaser ads, art and advance stories and large display ads in all local papers.

NEWSPAPER AD CONSTRUCTION!

By EDDIE HITCHCOCK

Following up our recent promise for a continuation of the type of material started in June by Ken Long, we take pleasure in announcing that with next week's issue the Club pages will feature an entirely new series on Ad Construction and Exchange Mats.

Eddie Hitchcock, a showman with a national reputation and many years' experience in newspaper advertising work, will handle the new series and also contribute important and interesting articles dealing with newspaper typography, make-up, composing room information, and many other valuable slants pertaining to this phase of showmanship.

All ads suggested by Eddie will be drawn by him personally and so laid out as to give you plenty of room for injecting your own ideas into each ad. A good showman will always try to make his newspaper advertising distinctive.

In offering this series we are following out our intention to make newspaper advertising an important feature of the Club pages. This medium of show-selling is by far the most important in the great majority of theatres and, if for no other reason, warrants the close attention of every genuine showman. "CHICK"

BEVEL'S LOBBY SHOWMANSHIP!

SOME of the fellows who are constantly groaning about the cost of fancy lobby displays will be interested to learn that the fine display pictured here was constructed for less than a two-dollar bill. The photo does not in any sense do justice to his work, but it's all we have at hand and will have to serve as evidence that L. W. Bevel, manager of the Princess Theatre, Harriman, Tenn., knows a thing or two about making good looking atmospheric displays at very small cost, which is quite a feather in his cap and proof that it can be done.

All the cards were promoted for passes and the jungle stuff was gathered from the good old Tennessee woods. Note the alligators in front and the zebra in the background. These were made from compoboard and painted in natural colors. Also observe the monkeys hanging in the foreground. The best of the animals do not show in the photo as they were behind the box office and along the wall of the lobby.

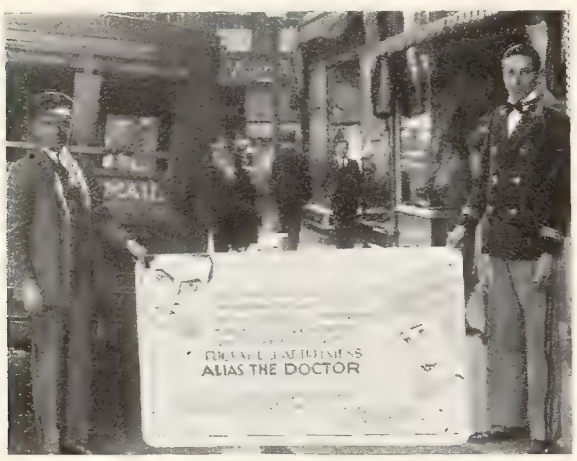
In addition to the lobby display Bevel also had 10, 12 and 14-foot banners entirely around the marquee and another 30-foot banner strung across the street. Four towns were covered with a miniature newspaper called the "Princess News" which carried all information concerning the picture, playdates, etc.

Besides making attractive lobby displays Bevel and his staff are turning out some poster work which we'd like to show to his fellow Round Table members. So if he'll send along some sharp photos next time, we'll do our best to reproduce evidence of what he and his gang are doing in that end of the game. Poster art is rapidly becoming a regular feature of this department.



PETTINGILL USING VARIETY OF STUNTS AT THE WARNER-LYNN

Although H. Pettingill, manager of the Warner Theatre, Lynn, Mass., admits to membership in this Club and the fact that he has been a constant reader of this department of the HERALD for a long time, this is the first time we've been privileged to acquaint his friends and fellow Round Tablers with some of the stunts he has been using to put across his shows.

For one thing he found the Giant Post Card gag a good one to land story and photos in the local newspapers when a card measuring 5 feet long by 3 feet wide was sent to the Mayor. The card pictured in the accompanying photo required 128 two-cent stamps and special handling by post office men to get it to its destination. The message informed the Mayor that the Warner Theatre took pleasure in extending an invitation to the Mayor and his party to attend a Sunday showing of the current attraction.

He also effected a profitable tie-up with a beauty shop which stood the entire expense of distributing 5,000 heralds and a good sized newspaper ad to announce that either a finger wave or a manicure could be obtained by lady patrons free of charge at the Warner Theatre during the showings of "Lady With a Past." Equipment was installed at the theatre by the beauty shop proprietor for the occasion.

The gag of printing a hand written message backwards in an ad, so that it was necessary to resort to a mirror in order to read it, also proved a good attention-getter. The top portion of the ad carried an uncaptioned photo of the star in the current attraction and the head, "Please Pardon This Ad. . . . We're Excited! Here's something we'd like to shout about from the house-tops—We'd like to print it in red ink. Read the message revealed below. Hold before mirror." The message described the highlights of the picture and was set slantingly in the ad with plenty of white space top and bottom.

Knowing that a street car stunt went over well in Cleveland on "Cohens and Kellys in Hollywood," and timing his move with an announcement by the local street railway regarding a new weekly ticket policy, Pettingill arranged to have two men impersonate Cohen and Kelly and spend the six days prior to picture opening in one end of the car. Furniture was provided by a local dealer and meals were served the men by a neighborhood restaurant. Both street car company and local newspaper entered into the deal in a wholehearted manner on account of the publicity afforded each through advertising of the ned tickets and distribution of the papers to the men each day. As a diversion Cohen and Kelly began a "rummy" tournament, in which a number of the passengers joined from time to time during the six day stunt.

All of which is a pretty good start-off for a man who is making his debut as a contributor to this department, and it's to be hoped that he'll keep up the good work. He has other stunts to tell about and we'll pass them along next time we get a line on the activities of this member.

SCHOOL ACTIVITIES!

Once again we are stressing the importance of working out plans that will tie in advantageously with the reopening of schools next month.

Many worth-while slants have been cited on these pages in the last few issues. If you passed them up as being too far ahead of time, just remember that there remains only a few weeks between the time you read this third warning and the opening of the schools.

We urgently suggest that you arrange some cooperative tie-ups that should benefit both your theatre and the school authorities. You will find it well worth the trouble.

HARRY HARRIS USING TRICK COLOR SCHEME ON TEASER ONE-SHEETS

We've had several occasions to mention the show-selling activities of Harry B. Harris, general manager of the Exchange Kinema, Lincoln, England, and have touched from time to time on his consistent use of teaser one-sheets.

The Kinema is one of five first run theatres in Lincoln and in order to make his billing distinctive, Harris has resorted to the red and black idea on white background. We've described these before, but this sample we have at hand, instead of the usual variety of red and black copy, was longitudinally made up half-red, half-black. and the result was an eye-catching bill. The same idea was carried right through to the 48-sheets.

The color scheme used by Harris certainly set his billing apart from his competition and we have his word for it that it has helped him get his advertising across. With the thought in mind that some one in this country might want to try out the same idea, he's passing it along. We would gladly reproduce one of his posters except for the fact that red and black would blend as one color and, therefore, would not show to advantage.

However, any material from Great Britain is always received with open arms in this country. Send us plenty more, Harry.

TAKE YOUR PICK OF GAGS KATZ USED TO A NEW ATTRACTION

Twenty-one separate items marked the exploitation campaign handled by Ben Katz, Warner publicity man in Milwaukee, when "Jewel Robbery" played the Warner Theatre in that city. Look over the stunts that brought home the bacon in Milwaukee and see if there are any you can adapt to your own needs.

A seven-day advance newspaper ad campaign; a plant of special art and stories in all papers; a radio tie-up which announced opening of picture; the showing of a special copy trailer in all Warner neighborhood houses; the display of 25 lettered stills in downtown stores; construction of an elaborate front that caused favorable comment; displays of special cards in all downtown jewelry stores; insertion of 2,000 heralds in laundry packages; insertion in packages of 5,000 cards by baking company; the distribution of 10,000 heralds (stuffed) in newspapers by newsboys; a tie-up with 48 Walgreen Drug stores for a special "Francis-Powell Sundae"; a newspaper ad tie-up secured with several beauty parlors through courtesy of passes to show; free ads in professional and neighborhood publications; tie-up with all downtown hotels and restaurants to carry copy of picture on menus; copy of picture imprinted in fight tickets of local club; copy on 3,000 fight programs; distribution of 5,000 heralds at baseball sand lots as result of tie-up with athletic club, and a display of a banner advertising picture at fight club several nights in advance and during run of picture.

Katz also arranged to have all downtown stores placarded the night before opening with the following copy: "Closed Tonight—On Account of Jewel Robbery—With William Powell—Kay Francis—Opening Tomorrow—Warner."

Many of the above stunts used by Katz can be adapted to any number of pictures and we're obliged to him for sending them along. The above-mentioned picture gave the Warner one of the most satisfactory grosses in a long time and undoubtedly much credit for this was due to the wide-coverage engineered by this showman.

COLLINS USED RED HEADED GIRL GAG TO SELL PICTURE

We hear that Ramon Collins, manager of the Avalon Theatre, Montgomery, West Va., used a stunt on "Red Headed Woman" which materially aided the box office during the showings of that picture.

He widely publicized his offer to give free admission to the male escort of every red headed woman who paid her way into the theatre, and we have Collins' word for it that some of the girls even dyed their hair for the occasion. (Now, Ramon!) Newspaper stories, routine advertising and a few lobby cards rounded out an effective but very inexpensive campaign.

Ramon's stunt was a variation of the usual method of giving passes to all blondes, red heads, etc., and he advises us that his town fell for it like a ton of brick. He particularly recommends this exploitation for small communities, but we see no reason why it cannot be applied to any neighborhood where there isn't evidence of an over-abundance of red headed ladies. By the way, Ray, we missed your call when you came to town. How about an explanation?

CLEARY CONSTRUCTED ATTRACTIVE DISPLAY FOR SUMMER BUSINESS

Out of the ordinary in many respects, a strikingly unique lobby display designed for use during the summer months by Tom Cleary, manager of the Princess Theatre, Montreal, Canada, created much favorable comment from patrons and was the means of attracting others through word of mouth advertising. We are indebted to C. E. Duffey, another Consolidated executive, for the accompanying photo and description of this display.

The rock-garden idea was followed out inside the lattice-work enclosure that was placed directly in the centre of the lobby and approach to the inner foyer. Moss and flowers covered the collection of vari-shaped stones and a small electric motor, concealed under the rocks, kept a stream of water from a tank placed in the front circulating over the rocks and down to a movable water wheel in the center of the garden. The little house with the gable was the home of a brood of live ducks, which were a continual source of amusement as they fed or waddled around the tank. The floral designs were promoted from a leading florist in the city.

Certainly a neat piece of work and one that Tom Cleary could gaze at with justifiable pride of accomplishment. It must have furnished a pleasing variation during the hot weather weeks and we're sure that his many fellow Club members will profit by his suggestion.

IDENTITY STUNT WAS GOOD SELLING STUNT USED BY J. FELDMAN

An identity stunt put over with the assistance of a local newspaper turned out to be a corking method of exploiting "Winner Take All" for Joe Feldman, Warner publicity man, in Albany, N. Y.

With the knowledge that Albany boasts a host of fight fans, Feldman arranged with a leading newspaper to invite readers to identify a series of old time fight pictures. One picture was plugged on the sporting page every day for a week and contestants for guest tickets were asked to supply the following information on each photo: (1) Who the fighters were; (2) Where and when the battle took place; (3) Who won and in what round. Thousands of replies were received and the editor of the paper declared that the stunt was one of the best circulation builders he had used in a long while. The sports editor plugged the stunt with editorial comment on both contest and picture.

Box office receipts at the Strand Theatre were well above average on this picture and credit is given Feldman's stunt for a share of the increase. It looks like a good gag to use and one that other Round Tablers ought to take advantage of when playing this picture. Cite the Albany case when taking the matter up with your local editor and it will help sell the idea.

WATCH YOUR STEP!

Managers who contemplate any form of contest, prize competitions or schemes of any kind in connection with which the mails are to be used are advised to ascertain whether such matter is admissible to the mails in view of the fact that the postal laws prohibit the mailing of matter relating to schemes or enterprises for the award of prizes or distribution of money or property by lot or chance, drawings, guessing contests, lucky number contests, etc., and should submit to their local postmaster details and full particulars of such schemes in order to avoid violation of the lottery laws.

TWO STUNTS STOOD OUT IN CAMPAIGN MADE BY CALDWELL

In the campaign made on "White Zombie" by Wally Caldwell, manager of Loew's Theatre, Toledo, Ohio, two of his stunts, a photographer tie-up and a drawing contest, stood out as excellent bets for that picture. The balance of the campaign was typical of Caldwell's usual efforts to secure wide coverage in a large city at minimum cost.

His "mysterious photographer" stunt was put over through a tie-up with a leading Toledo newspaper and proved particularly adaptable to the picture. Details are lacking but we guess that it was handled in the usual way—with a photographer taking shots of people unaware of the precedure and later publishing them in the paper with offer of a guest ticket to picture if they would call at newspaper office. It was started four days in advance, with 4-column art on page one of the second section.

His drawing stunt was built around the star, Bela Lugosi, and was also tied-up with another leading newspaper. Hundreds of replies were received by the stunt editor for the paper and broke all time records.

Other work included the placarding of 26 parking lots, garages and parking zones with "Park Here" half-sheets; the distribution of 5,000 9x12 heralds in selected residential neighborhoods; stuffing of 1,000 heralds in customer's packages at a large market; wrapping of 500 heralds in laundry bundles; the pinning of several hundred heralds to packages in dry cleaner's establishment; the posting of 15 special one-sheets in selected empty stores; posting of 200 heralds at prominent corners, and the usual comprehensive newspapers ad and story campaign.

There isn't any need for further comment from this end as the above campaign of Caldwell's speaks for itself. He has his own pet methods of putting a picture over and it's safe to state that the town knows what's playing at Loew's when Wally completes his work.

YOVIN HAS ANTIQUE STATION WAGON THAT MAKES A GOOD BALLY

An old-time station wagon is being successfully used from time to time for a bally by J. A. Yovin, manager of the Liberty Theatre, Tacony, Pa., and one of our more recently elected Club members. He picked the old bus up for a song and with a nag to pull it along the streets it attracts a lot of attention. Yovin must have "trouped" in his day, for he refers to the old vehicle as the kind that used to meet the one-nighters at Southern railroad stations.

J. A. Yovin

Lest some of our members have forgotten the fact that a Kiddies' Dog Show has strong potentialities as a trade reviver among the youngsters, we'll remind them that Yovin held one a short time ago to the great delight of both kids and grownups. It was handled in the usual manner, with a committee of judges on hand to pick the winner from audience applause. A silver loving cup was presented to the owner of the "best dog."

That small picture at the top is none other than Manager Yovin himself, standing at the side of his station wagon. Now that he is one of us, we hope he will continue to send in as much information as possible on what's going on down at the Liberty.

ANOTHER EXAMPLE OF LOW COST DISPLAYS MADE BY RANDFORCE

Here is another example of the inexpensive but effective displays made by members of the Randforce Theatre Circuit over in Brooklyn, N. Y., this one from Edward Stoffer and his staff at the Marcy Theatre.

The toy air-airplanes were borrowed from a toy dealer and the entire cost of the display amounted to only 65 cents. After being used in the lobby it was placed out front during the engagement of "Hell Divers."

We've mentioned before that practically everything in the way of displays used on the Randforce Circuit is fashioned in the theatre workshops and it is our humble opinion that the boys are rendering mighty good accounts of themselves. We shall hope to publish other evidence of their work in the future.

Dunn Wins Award

Irving Dunn, manager of the Grand Opera House, a Stanley-Warner house in Wilmington, Del., recently won the award for the Philadelphia district in the Managers' Popularity contest. His ushers plugged the event with sale of a large number of tickets.

DICK WRIGHT MADE PROFITABLE TIE-UP WITH A DRUM CORPS

A tie-up with the American Legion for appearance of the local drum corps at the theatre was a feature of the campaign made on "Doomed Battalion" by Dick Wright, manager of the Strand Theatre, Akron, Ohio. The accompanying photo shows the corps lined up before the house on a Friday evening, where they performed while the good old customers filed past the box office.

Another feature of the campaign was the building of a special front. If it were possible to give readers a close-up of the title sign underneath the marquee, the light-studded letters could be seen. This type of sign is becoming increasingly popular with present-day managers and it is a comparatively simple matter to cut the necessary holes in the compo-board for the lamp sockets. The balance of the front consisted of cutouts mounted on the front and side wings with stills. Eleven streamers of brightly colored pennants were strung from the marquee to the top of the building, and red, white and blue banners under the marquee, and the flashy hanger put out by Universal.

Other efforts included the mailing out of letters to a selected list of Italian and German people in Akron and vicinity; the placing of 5,000 auto hangers; the distribution of 20,000 heralds through the medium of "Liberty" home deliveries and Akron papers; window streamers on local street cars, and fourteen excellent window displays.

Wright generally puts across a corking campaign and the above is no exception. We can guess that the drum corps did its stuff in return for a few passes and their presence certainly added to the occasion. We will await with interest an account of the work done on "Winner Take All" and in the meantime wish him continued success. So you saw your old friend Duke Hickey, Dick? Give him our best regards if you run across him again and tell him to make a report to headquarters.

UNIQUE FRONT AND BALLY!

AN attention-getting front and unique ballyhoo featured the campaign made on "Congorilla" by Clem Murphy, managing director of the Branford Theatre, Newark, N. J., and his assistants, Walter Leach and Joseph Alicks.

You can see for yourselves from the accompanying illustration that the front is one which would attract attention, but the real kick came from the little figure carrying a long spear and standing at the right hand side of the entrance. The diminutive chappie is a genuine midget and the story goes that prior to this assignment he was a guest of the city on the charge of panhandling. After pulling many strings, Murphy and the boys secured his release and put him to work as a bally at the rate of fifty cents per day. Not a bad piece of work, what!

All the trimmings in front of the house, on marquee and inside the lobby, were "received on the right hand cuff," so Al Zimbalist, Warner publicity man, informs us; which is another feather for the caps of the Branford management. Special heralds were printed for the occasion and quarter and half page ads were taken in the leading newspapers. Excellent publicity breaks were obtained as the result of Zimbalist's end of the campaign.

Thanks to Zimbalist for sending in the above information and we have his word for it that he has arranged with Manager Larry Conley and his assistant, Mickey Kippel, of the Stanley Theatre, Newark, to shoot along complete details of an outstanding campaign made on "Bring 'Em Back Alive." We'll tell you more about this one in a forthcoming issue.

We feel certain that with so many animal and "native" pictures coming along you will want some up-to-the-minute dope on this kind of material.

HARD TIMES A MYTH BELIEVES MACRIS; —GET OUT AND SELL

Results obtained from some extra advertising to step-up summer trade has convinced Orestes Macris, manager of the Temple Theatre, Wellsville, N. Y., that this so-called depression is more or less of a myth.

It all came about with the booking of a vaudeville act over July 4th, 5th and 6th. He covered the surrounding towns with several thousand heralds, used 100 3-sheets, 200 1-sheets, 300 cards and four 24-sheets. On top of that the local newspaper came through with some corking publicity. He also tied-up with a local jeweler for the gift of a cocktail shaker to the best-judged pair of dancers in an old-time barn dance frolic.

According to Orestes, it rained cats and dogs on the Fourth and only moderate trade resulted. However, it cleared by night and the house was jammed for one show and half-full for the second, breaking all box-office records during the management's regime in Wellsville. On Tuesday, July 5th, he had one full house and a few stragglers for the second show, but on Wednesday, the night of the Barn Dance, the house was packed for both shows and receipts again broke the record made on the Fourth. About 250 people had to be turned away from the doors. The winning pair of dancers also consented to repeat their dance for those attending the second show.

So as Macris points out, folk up in his neck of the woods are all het up again about attending shows in spite of the much advertised depression and are breaking open the tin boxes in order to shake out the price for entertainment that appeals to them. Since he did the extra advertising he has had a 25 per cent increase in business, which ought to be proof that people can be brought back to the box office again even if they have strayed away. His recipe, he states, is to give them what they want and "make it sound big." Considering the size of his community and the scattered, outlying rural districts, he did make a splurge, and the attendent results entirely measured up to fullest expectations.

CLUB INCREASING EVERY WEEK!

CLAUDE D. BURROWS manages the Empress Theatre, a Publix house in Kearney, Nebraska, and we're taking this opportunity to acknowledge his application for membership in this ever-increasing organization. We're glad to have you with us, Claude, and hope you will become a regular contributor to this department. Let us remind you that the Club is greatly indebted to a host of men on your circuit for the many valuable suggestions they have passed along. May we depend upon you to do likewise?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

HARRY B. HARRIS advises this department that his application for membership in the Round Table Club was never written on this page, despite the fact that he has belonged to this organization for a full year, and we're hastening to make the correction. We're sure most of his brother Clubmen are familiar with Harris' history in showbusiness by this time, but just to make sure we'll add that he holds down the job of general manager of the Exchange Kinema, Lincoln, England. We've published his contributions to this department from time to time and hope to receive many more in the future.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

HARVEY FLEISCHMAN is a member of that go-getting crew of showmen that carry on over in Brooklyn, N. Y., for Louis Frisch and Sam Rinzler, heads of the Randforce Circuit, and he has charge of the Embassy Theatre, Fulton and Richmond Streets. Some time ago we mentioned that Fleischman was one of the Randforce managers who had been turning out corking displays at practically no cost to theatre. Now that he's a member of this organization we hope he'll come through with many other suggestions for us to pass along to his fellow theatre managers.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

STANLEY BROWN is the city manager for Publix theatres in Omaha, Neb., and he makes his headquarters at the Paramount Theatre. We are also in receipt of his application for membership in our Club and want him to know that we're mighty glad to have him with us. Many Round Tablers will recall that he won a major award not long ago in the "Fireman Save My Child" contest sponsored by Warner-First National, so that will convey to all that his membership will be a decided asset to this organization. We hope he'll find the necessary time to contribute some good show-selling campaigns.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

R. C. MENCHES hails from Akron, Ohio, where he manages the Liberty Theatre. Now that he has added his name to the large number of Ohio showmen in this organization we'll expect still more news from his city. What was that last stunt you used to good effect at the box office, R. C. Wrap it up for the mail some day in the near future and shoot it in to Club headquarters.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

WILLIAM T. LANGDON is the manager of the Palace Theatre, a Publix-Great States house in Danville, Ill. We've often had occasion to mention that this department is greatly indebted to all the Publix men for their many valuable contributions and we feel sure that Langdon will also do his share to keep these pages alive with interesting accounts of what he is doing to sell shows in his town. Just as soon as he can find the time, we know he'll pass some information along.

JOHN J. KEHOE manages the Lyric Theatre, Athol, Mass., and also acts as musical director. We also have John's name on the dotted line and we're happy to broadcast that fact. His fellow members will be interested to know what is going on in showbusiness over in Athol and we hope that he will find the time to send along a lot of interesting news to Club headquarters, even though the holding down of a dual role in a theatre is enough to keep any one man up to his neck with work.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

H. H. NORTON is in charge of the Central Theatre out at Star City, Arkansas. He has found this department interesting in the past and now wants to help the good work along by becoming an active member. That's the proper spirit, Norton, and we want you to know that we're mighty glad to record that you are now a Round Tabler. Keep the Club posted on what methods you're using to bring Star City patrons to the box office.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

FRANK O'ROURKE has charge of the Rex Theatre, a house operated by the Rex Amusement Company in Portland, Ore. He is another new member of the Club and a cordial welcome is also extended this showman. Many a good tip on showmanship has come out of his city and now that he is in our midst we'll be on the lookout for more. Shoot along some of your ideas, Frank, and we'll see that the rest of the fellows are tipped off.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

P. W. BARRETT is the manager of the Strand Theatre, a Publix house at Parkersburg, West Va., and we're taking this opportunity to acknowledge his application for membership. Okay, P. W., you're in this great army of showmen right now, and here's hoping that you, too, will do your share toward contributing a lot of good show-selling ideas to this department. There's many a Publix man in this outfit and all have been consistent contributors. That's a tip-off for Barrett.

State .....

FRED R. DU VON is the manager of the Beacon Theatre, Port Washington, L. I., N. Y., and his membership in this organization is sponsored by Showman Eddie Lewis, of the Glen Theatre, Glen Cove, N. Y. The Beacon Theatre has been well represented in the past through the efforts of former manager and Round Tabler Bill Levey, who at this writing is touring southern Europe on a well earned vacation. We will count upon DuVon to keep up the excellent work done for this department by his predecessor and will expect to hear from him soon.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

H. E. REHFIELD is another independent exhibitor to join our organization and he operates the Iowa Theatre, Bloomfield, Ill. We also acknowledge his application for Club membership and want him to know that we are only too glad to list his name on the ever-increasing roster. We hope he will become a regular contributor to this department, letting us know from time to time what's going on in showbusiness out his way, so we can pass the word along the line.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

A. F. FISET manages the Lido Theatre at Long Beach, that popular summer resort down on the south shore of Long Island, N. Y. He is another Islander in line for introduction to his several thousand fellow Round Tablers and we're glad to have the opportunity to introduce him. At this time of the year the season is in full swing down his way and we know there will be a lot of interesting notes for him to send in on methods of selling shows to the summer colonist. Let's hear from you, Fiset.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

NED CUSHMAN has the job of assisting Round Tabler Bill Adams with the management of the Colonial Theatre over in Brockton, Mass., and we have a note from Bill himself sponsoring this rising young disciple of Barnum. Ned succeeds Robert Nickerson, who was placed in charge of the State Theatre, Stoughton, Mass., following Paul Kunze's transfer to Plymouth. We're glad to list Cushman's name among the assistant manager members of this outfit and we're sure that with Bill's able tutoring, it will not be long before we will be able to announce that he's a full-fledged Round Tabler.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

W. F. HARRIS not only manages the Palace Theatre, Petersburg, and the Harris Theatre at Hopewell, Va., but is also interested in the operation of the Crewe Theatre, Crewe, Va. He is another independent exhibitor to join our organization and we're happy to have him with us. He's a seasoned showman, having started as an usher in the year 1907, and he's never been out of the game since that time. Many valuable suggestions should come from Harris and we'll certainly be on the lookout for them.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

E. L. DRAKE hails from down South in Jackson, Tenn., and it's also a pleasure to acknowledge his application for Club membership. He manages the Paramount Theatre which, as you've already guessed, is a Publix house. We've mentioned many times before that this organization is appreciative of contributions from the ranks of Publix men and it's always a real pleasure to list another as a Round Tabler. Practically every one of them is a live-wire showman and their suggestions are more than welcome. We hope Drake will furnish his share.

STAGE ATTRACTIONS
FOR PICTURE THEATRES

Acts Returning At San Antonio

Return of vaudeville and stage shows to San Antonio, Texas, has been made a certainty by an agreement reached by local theatres with the motion picture operators and stage hands unions. A contract signed with these unions provides for four operators to work in each theatre daily. Each house will also work one stage hand. For the past three months the theatres were operating on a non-union basis, also on a straight picture policy.

The Majestic theatre operated by RKO is planning to resume vaudeville August 19. Ted Lewis and his band have been tentatively booked for that work. Others to head Majestic vaudeville are Olsen and Johnson, the Weaver Brothers and Benny Meroff's Band.

Publix is planning to meet the RKO vaudeville competition with single acts. The idea of stage shows has been dropped and in their place a box office name is to appear on each bill. Artists sought are of an outstanding nature such as The Street Singer of radio fame, Sisters of the Skillet and Gene and Glenn. Ed Wynne, the perfect fool, is also among those under consideration by Publix.

Picture Songs Introduced

Songs of Jack Buchanan's "Magic Night," United Artists feature, were introduced Friday night on a Cities Service Program hookup. Major Edward Bowes used them Sunday morning in his Capitol theatre program, and "Gems from 'Magic Night'" will be on the D'Orsay program Saturday night.

Cherniavsky at RKO Albee

Joseph Cherniavsky and his orchestra will play the week of August 27 at the RKO Albee in Cincinnati, doubling with his Netherland-Plaza hotel engagements.

Offers Acts, Double Bills

The Capitol in San Francisco has established a program policy of five vaudeville acts, two feature films, with 25-cent top admission on week days and 30-cent top on Sundays. The house formerly played burlesque.

Finish Personal Appearances

Bette Davis and Warren William complete a series of personal appearances at eastern theatres this week at the Earle theatre, Philadelphia, after which they will return to the Warner Coast studio.

SONG AND DANCE

Bill Robinson (16)

New York Palace

In a miniature revue built around himself, Bill goes through his routine of tap, buck and wing, stair and the original Bill Robinson Stomp, proving that he still is America's foremost dance stylist. A pony chorus of twelve dusky girls offer several well rehearsed routines, followed by a hot piano solo by Robinson's accompanist. Later in the show Bill introduces Grace Edna, a white girl, and protege of his, who offers a tap routine that was extremely well done. Robinson is still a big name and a draw for any house.

Maxine Wingo and Rita Harris

Denver Orpheum

Two local girls of promise did the mistress of ceremony job to a turn. They introduced each act with a bit of song, rhyme or wisecrack, and then, before turning the stage over to the act, proved they knew some of the harder dance steps. This feature, introduced here by Harry Huffman, is proving very popular, and will be continued.

Gilda Gray

San Francisco Fox

One remembers Gilda Gray principally as a dancer, but when she sings one of those deserted-girl-in-a-cabaret laments she really gets more applause than for her dance number. She also acts well in a blackout or two. Her dance, with all the old-time wiggle and hip-tossing, is presented in a barbaric setting with the line girls flapping the distended lips of Ubangi women.

INSTRUMENTAL

Horace Heidt and His Californians

San Francisco Golden Gate

Horace Heidt is back to inaugurate Greater Show Season. Heidt and his boys win their audiences at the start and never permit admiration to grow cold. They play in ensemble, in groups and in solo work and change the mood and tempo with surprising quickness. Their numbers range from the classics to jazz and an outstanding hit is a novelty number all about the Queen, Jack and King, with huge playing cards flashed at the proper moments. This aggregation of first class musicians entertain their audiences from start to finish.

Lawrence Family (11)

Belfast Colonial

A band act, with a capable cast of musicians consisting of Mother, Father and nine children, who prove their versatility by playing from five to twenty-five instruments. The turn works forty minutes in 2, 3 and full stage settings and features a quartet of Swiss bell ringers, a quintet of trumpets, a xylophone trio, cowbell novelties, accordion solos, band numbers and song and dance teams. A good flash and novelty band act that registers strongly on applause, is decidedly different and one that is a box office draw.

Milwaukee Seeing Stage Acts Back

Indications are that the stage act is coming back into its own here. Fox-Midwesco is spotting stage attractions in its Palace, local first run, and inaugurated its new policy August 5 with Blackstone the magician and his company of 20. Mr. and Mrs. Martin Johnson are booked to appear in person with their Fox picture, "Congorilla," to follow Blackstone. Both attractions will make appearances at the circuit's houses through the state after their Milwaukee engagement.

Effective August 5, the Warner theatre here is presenting a series of stage shows weekly, featuring individual performers widely known in their field, in addition to the regular photoplay program. Koran, a mystic, inaugurated the new policy at the Warner.

"Rhapsody in Black," colored revue headed by Ethel Waters and an eighteen-piece orchestra, is scheduled to open at Fox's Wisconsin Friday.

It is also reported that RKO's Riverside, which discontinued its vaudeville last February and has been on straight picture fare, will soon augment its film programs with stage attractions as of old.

New Radio Service Unit

Dailey Paskman, pioneer radio director, has organized a new service unit following the sale of his station WGBS, now WINS, to William Randolph Hearst. The company, Dailey Paskman and Associates, will contact advertisers and agencies for stations throughout the United States and Canada, and will also handle radio personalities.

Campaign on "Crooner" Songs

A national campaign is being inaugurated by M. Witmark & Sons for "Three's a Crowd" and "Sweethearts forever," songs in First National's "Crooner" picture.

Wiedoft and Kreugar in Film

Rudy Wiedoft and Benny Kreugar, saxophonists, are to be seen with other radio stars in the fourth of Jerry Wald's Radio Newsreels, Vitaphone's "Rambling Round Radio Row."

Bernie Signs Air Contract

Ben Bernie, band leader, will be heard with his orchestra over a National Broadcasting Company (WEAF) network of 40 stations, every Tuesday evening for 52 weeks, beginning September 13.

ATTENTION EXHIBITORS BOOKING TALENT! This department aims to serve you in booking acts. We have on file the information on how to get in touch with any act reviewed. Write to Stage Attractions Department, Motion Picture Herald, 1790 Broadway, New York City.

STAGE ATTRACTIONS

REVIEWS OF ACTS FOR PICTURE THEATRES

COMEDY

Burns & Allen (4)
New York Paramount

In the first half of the act the action takes place at a cigar counter with Grace Allen as the salesgirl. Her "dumb" business transactions prove very funny. Burns then comes on to a nice hand. The rest of the act, a concoction of typical Burns questions and "Dumb Dora" answers, clicked with the audience.

Milt Douglas
San Francisco Golden Gate

Milt Douglas starts off like a house afire with red hot chatter, but is soon interrupted by a plant in a box. The two wax quite sarcastic and put over some typically American repartee. Most of it is really clever and the audience likes it.

Bert Walton
New Orleans State

Walton's wisecracking humor in the Walter Winchell manner seemed to click with the larger part of the audience. He works well, in a quick manner that takes.

Harry Hines
Baltimore Hippodrome

This act is a combination of comedy and encouragement for the people. Hines comes on as if to introduce another person and then enters as that person, to good laughs. He then does a monologue of jokes and other witticisms. He then sings "The Song of the Fool," with interpolations about conditions and optimistic lines about keeping going. This chap has a rare sense of humor and sells the audience without difficulty.

Johnny Burke
Milwaukee Wisconsin

Burke is a high voiced patter actor and pianist who holds the spot alone for several minutes, carrying on a monologue about the last war which is good for a number of laughs. His piano work is good and consists in offering "Wabash Blues" as played by pianists of varied nationalities.

ACROBATICS

The Five De Carlos
San Francisco Fox

These acrobats, garbed in outlandish outfits, prove the hit of the bill. They jump in and out of barrels while blindfolded, make merry on the springboard and do some amazing foot-to-shoulder balancing work. Comedy touches also help. No mistake about the class of this aggregation.

Arthur Petley (4)
New York Palace

In this tramboline act, Petley proves to be quite a comedian as well as an excellent aerial acrobat. Interspersed with daring flying work, Petley's comical antics, including an imitation of a jockey, prove laugh-getters. A clever routine of contortion acrobatics offered by Petley's not so slender woman assistant proves surprising and gets a gratifying reception. An excellent opener.

Damrosch Hour in Fifth Year

Walter Damrosch will launch his fifth consecutive season of the NBC Music Appreciation Hour, Friday, October 14.

NOVELTY

Willie, West and McGinty
Omaha Orpheum

This is a rip-roaring, laughing act. Its setting is the construction scene of the morning at the foot of a skyscraper. The cast and an assistant are the workmen and their many troubles in pounding fingers, falling under loads of material, getting a splash of mortar in the eye, brickbats in their faces, clothes lighted from matches used to light pipes, shocks from high tension power wires, dust on their open dinner buckets and so on—a storm of peculiar situations they combine in a few minutes. No particular talent seems necessary, not a word is said. Simple as it seems, the act appears to find a place in the sun, judging from the applause.

Cass, Mack and Owen
New York Palace

This trio, two boys and a girl, offer a routine of rough and tumble hokum, clever acrobatics, tap dancing and extremely funny bits by Miss Owen. A slow-motion acrobatic dance by Cass and Mack gains laughs throughout. This one is surefire.

Jack Roshier and Shaggs
Detroit Fox

Shaggs is a clever pomeranian, particularly at the business of going completely limp in the fashion of a dead dog. Rope skipping with his master good for a round of applause.

Pepito
New Orleans State

This beloved clown who has appeared frequently in New Orleans theatres makes his first visit in a unit with his material practically unchanged and the celebrated baby act still a marvel of pantomime. The trick ventriloquist act is still there for the laughs as is the egg act, but the musical finish burlesquing a concert star does not go over so well, the reason being apparently that it is too true to the work of some local concert artists to be funny.

Tommy McAuliffe
San Francisco Fox

This armless golfer displays uncanny skill and gets rounds of applause from golfers and non-golfers alike. With a club held only by neck and shoulder muscles he knocks golf balls in rapid succession into baskets, nets and wall pockets and ends by teeing off the ball perched on the forehead of a girl.

BILL ROBINSON'S REVUE
Personal Direction—MARTY FORKINS

Walter Walters (2)
New York Palace

Assisted by a beautiful blonde, Walters offers his standard ventriloquist act. Using as props a boy, girl and a baby dummy, Walters entertains the audience throughout his turn.

Conrad's Pigeons
Philadelphia Fox

Seldom does an animal act combine artistic beauty and real entertainment to such a degree as Conrad's pigeons. The white doves ride a miniature merry-go-round, loop the loop and obey instructions with amazing precision and ease. For the finale they sweep down to the stage on being released from the balcony.

PLAYLETS

George Jessel and Norma Talmadge
New York Paramount

Jessel is master of ceremonies for the bill and offers a few gags, stooges for Burns and Allen, imitates Eddie Cantor, sings 'You're My Everything," to Norma Talmadge, with whom he also appears in a sketch. His efforts were well received. Miss Talmadge also took several bows after her bit.—H. P.

DANCERS

Mildred Perle
New Orleans State

A captivating, lithe-dancing miss does two acrobatic novelties with an ease which is to her credit. The first is a sports number with Miss Perle impersonating a tennis star, the second the usual acrobatic flip worked so rapidly that the skirt of her dress hides her face.

3 Rhythm Boys
New York Paramount

This colored trio opens with a group tap dance following with individual tap routines which click. This flash dance act should go well anywhere.—H. P.

Tom, Dick and Harry
Detroit Fisher

This is a breezy dance trio, using challenge tap routines and slapstick acrobatics. One of the boys—incidentally the best of the three on his feet—is shorter than his partners and consequently gets most of the comedy knocking about.

Janice Walker
Milwaukee Wisconsin

Miss Walker is a solo dancer of no small ability. She has plenty of pep and personality, a presentation that pleases with vivacious vitality.

Fred Evans Ballet (12)
Detroit Michigan

The toe dancing, pirouettes, wings and group movements of this line in a garden moth ballet number are exceptionally graceful, and bring out more applause than is usually accorded a ballet number here.

Bert Faye
Detroit Michigan

Bert Faye dances and prances on three-foot shoes. Time was when this business was not uncommon, but here it seemed new and was well received.

STAGE ATTRACTIONS

REVIEWS OF STAGE ACTS

June Carr
Omaha Orpheum

June Carr's eccentric novelty dancing wins her favor. She enters singing "You've Got These and You've Got Those." Interchanging at first, she and her accompanist dance literally upon the piano. Her entree is from beneath its lid, a shawl draped over its side to hide her. Other songs are "I'm Keeping Company" and "I'm Building Castles in Spain." Her rustic, country kid number makes a great hit.

Stone-Vernon Foursome
Detroit Michigan

A daring girl, whirled and tossed all about the stage in adagio dancing, wins admiration. Her three men partners are clever and sure in their movements, but it is the girl who draws the enthusiasm.

The McKennas (2)
San Francisco Fox

These two, brother and sister, have a line that pleases the crowd, but which must call for a heavy investment in liniment. They knock each other around the stage, take some heavy falls and end with a burlesque adagio. They show real skill in concealing the fact that they are skilled.

Mordecai, Wells and Taylor
Detroit Fisher

These three colored lads have the speed and fervor of colored night club entertainment. They open doing tap and acrobatic capers around a beer bottle to the music of "Hitting the Bottle." This is followed by challenge steps in double, triple and staggered rhythm.

SINGERS

Baby Rose Marie
Omaha Orpheum

Baby Rose Marie wins popular approval easily, with "Sing a New Song," "Night Seems the Darkest Just Before Dawn" and "Some of These Days" among her selections. Her stage poise and her ability to clown with grace with the men in the orchestra pit seems to add to her popularity. Children flock to the theatre to see and hear the "Sweetheart of NBC."

June McCloy
New York Paramount

This personable blonde opens with a vocal of "Cabin in the Cotton," in a contralto voice that pleased. She follows with a hot rendition of "Keepin' Out of Mischief Now," earning a nice reception for her efforts.—H. P.

Peter Higgins
San Francisco Golden Gate

This young man, admired for his clear tenor voice over the radio, proves even more interesting in person. He has a splendid choice of songs.

Wynne Wayne
Detroit Michigan

This girl is the slender "deb" type of blues singer. Her opening number, "Devil and the Deep Blue Sea," drags somewhat, but anything following the hot incidental steps and gestures preceding her second offering, "Minnie the Moocha," would bring hearty acclaim.

Ada Brown
New York Palace

Ada Brown, in a "Mammy" outfit, opens with "I Can't Get Mississippi Off My Mind," "Please Don't Talk About Me When I'm Gone" and the negro spiritual 'Hallelujah" for the finale. Miss Brown possesses a charming personality and a fine voice and gets a nice reception.—H. P.

Les Everson
Milwaukee Wisconsin

This lad has a pleasing voice. He presents a number of wartime hits, among which is "My Buddy."

Gracie Barry
Denver Orpheum

Here's a girl who sings just like she looks—mighty lovely. Her voice is in keeping with her type, and with her black hair and dressed in white she's a pretty picture. She sings about "Putting the Sun Back in the Sky," "Too Many Tears," and finishes with "Was That the Human Thing to Do?"

Charlotte Murrie
Detroit Fisher

This young lady, who has a Hollywood history, made a favorable impression here as a blues singer. A smile reminiscent of Bette Davis helped to convey the spirit of her two numbers, "Wotta Life" and "River, Stay Way From My Door."

Flo Lewis at the Paramount

J. J. Parker, Portland (Ore.) Paramount Theatre, featured "Flo Lewis," internationally celebrated stage star, heading the snappy stage show, "Bombay." Scenic vesture, costumes and lighting were all carried out in exotic far-eastern effects.

Assisting the famous comedienne were the O'Connor family, the Gaylene Sisters, the Pasquali Brothers and the Bombay sun-kist beauties.

KSL Fulltime Columbia

Station KSL at Salt Lake City, Utah, will become a fulltime outlet of Columbia Broadcasting System September 1. A 50,000-watt transmitter will be on the air between September 15 and October 1.

MANY THANKS TO ALL CONCERNED

SPOTS & SHOTS ON BROADWAY

Here's a funny story going the rounds along the Main Stem. Dave Bernie, Ben Bernie's brother, was out on the golf links when Roxy and M. H. Aylesworth, also out chasing the elusive pellet, chanced into each other. Mistaking Dave for Ben, Roxy said, "Hello Ben, meet Mr. Aylesworth, president of NBC." "Very glad to meet you," said Mr. Aylesworth. "I'm glad that you'll be with us this year. If there is anything I can do for you let me know." "Thanks," answered Bernie, "there isn't anything for me personally, but I wish you would do something for my brother Dave. He's also got a great band."

In a prominent spot in the lobby of the Palace theatre hangs a large photo of Kate Smith, who at present is bracing—beg pardon—gracing the stage there. The caption under the picture reads EVERYTHING BIG BUT THE PRICE.

Folk down in Charleston, W. Va., hold their annual music festival during Ben Alley's vacation, which he spends "to hum."

There's this difference between your broadway and mine: Out your way the taxicabs try hard to pick up a pedestrian—here the taxis try hard to knock them down.

Despite rumors to the contrary, Phil Baker insists that his show will open this fall—in other words—accordion to Phil.

Add scandals; Borah Minnevitch and his beard were divorced last week. They parted the best of friends.

Cherry & June, those two kids from Dixie, who scored last week at the Palace, will root hard this fall for Tulane. Their brother, Fred, is a member of the Freshman squad.

Nat Bursiloff, radio orchestra leader, believes in starting at the top. He made his stage debut at the Palace, this week.

Arthur (Street Singer) Tracy proudly showed this scribe his new Marmon Sixteen sedan. Not bad for a youth who a year ago was unsuccessfully trying to get a break on WMCA, a local station.

Harry Richman was asked at the stage door for his autograph, which he gave, last week—but not before making sure that he wasn't signing a blank check.

HERMAN PINCUS.

Bing Crosby on Vacation

Bing Crosby is to do a vacation of trailing the swordfish when "The Big Broadcast" is completed for Paramount. It is estimated that he has appeared in 1100 theatre performances, 1250 consecutive broadcasts, besides making a number of records and playing in half a dozen short pictures.

STAGE ATTRACTIONS

ORGAN SOLOS

CLARENCE LEVERENZ (Kalamazoo State) recently presented an attractive solo titled "Out West," as a prologue to the feature picture. The descriptive medley comprised "Westward Ho," "Out Where the West Begins," "My Pony Boy," "Girl of the Golden West," "Indian Sun-Dance," "Indian Love Call," sand storm effects, banjos playing "O Susanna," concluding with "West of the Great Divide."

A modernistic organ design holds on the screen over which the various changes are announced, the final number being accompanied by a western scene. This is the first time the popular Leverenz has compiled a solo of this kind and the response was the most enthusiastic and decided in months.

BILL MEEDER (Richmond Hill Keiths) opened his organ program with a special arrangement of "Night Shall Be Filled With Music," which he played in concert style and followed up with a singing chorus. At the finish of this number Meeder orally explained that he would present a number of theme songs used in radio programs. Each of these he played in concert style and used various lighting effects. Radio themes used were: Paul Whiteman's Amos 'n Andy's, Waldorf-Astoria Hotel Organ signature (incidentally Meeder is guest artist on this program), WOR's "Moonbeams" and Mills Bros. Each of these was very well done and won hearty response. Meeder closed the program with a medley of "It Was So Beautiful," "Mardi Gras" and "Under a Shady Tree," for the audience to sing.

MERLE CLARK (Detroit Michigan), as guest organist, has a novel opening in "Lazy Day," calling for various responses, including stamping, clapping, singing and whistling. Other well received numbers are "Just Whistle and Blow Your Blues Away," "Lullaby of the Leaves" and "Another Cup of Coffee." Clark's final appearance is on the stage as background for a military finale of the stage show, playing Elgar's "Pomp and Circumstance."

EGON DOUGHERTY (New York Astoria Triboro) opened a recent solo with the playing of "Singing in the Rain," as smart effects were played on the screen. Going directly into the playing of "Banking on the Weather," "One Little Raindrop" and "Singing in the Rain," for the patrons to sing before he made his usual oral announcement, Dougherty told the audience of the "love" songs which they were to sing for the remainder of the program. These numbers were "Goodnight, My Love," "Silent Love," "Hideaway" and two choruses of cleverly worded tongue-twisters. The patrons are decidedly for Dougherty and this reviewer has yet to see him miss up in getting tremendous applause.

ARSENE SIEGEL (Detroit Fisher) uses a clever device for encouraging audience response to his solo, "Ups and Downs." On the stage is a large lighted thermometer, ostensibly actuated by the audience's singing. Timid voices on "Lawd, You Made the Night Too Long" leave the red bulb at about 40 degrees. "Just Whistle and Blow Your Blues Away" brings it up a notch. Alternation of boys and girls on "Paradise" raises the vocal temperature to about 70. The sure-finish number, "Somebody Loves You," carries the red bulb to the top where it explodes in a puff of white smoke.

UP AND DOWN THE ALLEY

GUS VAN opens at the Palace Saturday with a piano accompanist. . . . Gus, you no doubt know, is the surviving member of the famous team of Van and Schenck, but what you probably do not know is that Van has refused to use an accompanist since Joe Schenck's death, two years ago. . . . This may not appear to be particularly startling news, but there is a story in it—a story of a friendship and partnership that rarely sees its equal on Broadway or any other place. . . . For 21 years, prior to the death of Joe Schenck, the team of Van and Schenck was known as the best known harmony team in show business. . . . Gus carried on successfully alone, but he could not bear the thought of any one but Schenck appearing on the stage with him. . . . It is only because of insistent demands of his friends and manager that an accompanist would be of help in the act, that Gus is now utilizing one. . . . Incidentally, Gus is one of the busiest players in town. . . . In addition to his appearance at the Palace, he has a 26-week contract as M. C. on the El Toro Cigar radio program and is also besieged with film offers. . . .

Thousands of bathers at Manhattan Beach were all excited last week when a staff of Vitaphone camera and sound men took some shots at Oriental Pool. . . . The mobs crowded around the crew anxious to catch a glimpse of their radio favorites who were performing for one of Jerry Wald's Radio Newsreels. . . . Among the stars who "did their stuff" both for the camera and the beach throngs were Harold Lanin and His Band, Baby Rose Marie, Aunt Jemima and Johnny Marvin. . . .

Have you noticed that cute little English car Hannah Williams is driving around town? . . . It's a Hornet Swallow and was last year's birthday gift from her former husband, Roger Wolf Kahn. . . . By the way, Hannah has been offered a part in George White's latest edition of the "Scandals," and I for one am happy to see this little girl make a strong comeback. . . .

The Pine Brook Club up in Nichols, Conn., is getting the patronage of nearly all of the music business. . . . Jack Cohen, director for the last six years on many of the best radio programs, has been living up there all summer and always has someone well-known in the music business as his guest. . . . Lately George Piantadosi, Rocco Vocco, Roy Turk, Harry Engel, Donald Quinlin, Arthur Freed, Donald Novice, Jack Capp and Joe Meyer have been weekend guests. . . . And to hear them tell of it . . . it is another "Garden of Eden. . .

Sweet little Mitzie Mayfair, musical show favorite and one of the features in the last "Follies," who lately has been doing plenty well in her personal appearances in Paramount houses, is now in rehearsal for Schwab and DeSylvia's new "Humpty-Dumpty" show which opens on Broadway next month. . . . Mitzie will give a thrill to the supposedly blasé theatre-goers of this town. . . .

ED DAWSON

OVERTURES

FREDDY MACK (Brooklyn Fox), conductor of the Fox Orchestra, conceived and presented a most clever novelty overture this week, built around the popular tune "Cabin in the Cotton." The number was featured in a number of ways, instrumentally, vocally and in a "story" form that was the highlight. Mack, himself, after conducting throughout, read the "story" from a book, as the orchestra played appropriate music to fit each character and scene. The comedy injected into this part proved highly entertaining, as did the entire overture.

LOU FORBES (Detroit Michigan) has dropped some of the mannerisms that marked his opening performance here three or four weeks ago. Audience opinion seemed divided on his conducting technique, and Forbes is wisely aiming to please. From "The Chocolate Soldier" he offers "The Bulgarians," "Forgive, Forgive," "The Dance" and "My Hero," to well deserved applause. Following this he swings into that fiery emotional Spanish bit "Jalousie," for another flurry of hands. The program closes with "Crazy People," in which the drummer lends voice to balmy lines, and members of the orchestra depart from all conventional behavior.

JACK SPRIGG (Cincinnati Albee) offers one of the most unusual and highly appreciated overtures in a long time, and he named it "Warum Laechelst Du, Mona Lisa?" Following a brief explanatory announcement by Sprigg, the boys proceed to do their stuff. The platform is lowered and a beautiful framed painting of Mona Lisa is displayed hanging against a black velvet drop on the stage, while Kitty Burke, a local girl, sings an English chorus before a microphone on the stage. William Shaw, saxophone player, sings a part of the song in German from the pit. The entire musical score is excellent.

WALT ROESNER (San Francisco Fox) and the Fox concert orchestra, assisted by the vocal ensemble, offer "Romance in Romany," an arrangement of gypsy airs full of lovely melodies and delicious rhythms. Most of the music is by European composers, with special attention paid to the Hungarian dances of Brahms, but our own beloved Victor Herbert is represented by selections from the "Fortune Teller." The vocal ensemble appears on the stage in nomadic tableaux, an especially effective one representing a gypsy camp. The overture is especially well received.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1931, unless otherwise specified.

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 139.—(A) Give us your idea of what basic knowledge is necessary to an understanding of electrical action. (B) Just why is it essential that the projectionist have a good basic knowledge of electrical action; also what will certainly be the result if he has not such basic knowledge? (I shall ask nothing more this week, as a comprehensive reply to these questions will require considerable space.)

Answer to Question No. 131

Bluebook School Question No. 131 was: (A) Using a curved mirror of full diameter, with light source located 4.5 inches from its reflecting surface. Illustrate by diagram or by description, the path of a light ray from light source to mirror surface and back past the light source from (a) one inch from mirror center and (b) extreme outer diameter.

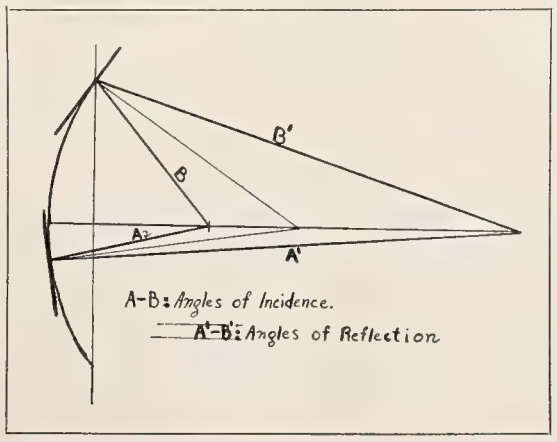
Most of the ones who regularly send correct answers did so this time, plus John Gimes, L. R. Tipton and J. Lawrence, William Docly, T. L. Mathews, and W. L. Brumer. I hesitated as between publishing the answers of Evans and Rau, S. G. Williams, John Wentworth, T. Van Vaulkenburg, Lester Borst and G. E. Doe, all of whom have covered the subjects very well. However, after all, I think you will all agree that the answer made by Friend Williams not only traces the pathway as asked, but also rather fully explains the method of accomplishing that trick.

Evans and Rau did essentially the same stunt in the drawing, but used two drawings and did not draw in the line showing the mirror plane at that point, which must of course be exactly perpendicular (at right angles) to the optical axis of the mirror, assuming it to be a spherical mirror. If it were anything else, then the projectionist could not determine the plane of the surface at any point except by blacking its surface and making needle-like holes at different points on its surface. That is one point, not one of the huge "class" mentioned, though the question was asked in a way which invited notice of that point. Brother Williams says:



"In answering this question, I measured the diameter of a strong reflector arc mirror. The diameter was 8 inches, and the depth of maximum curvature (vertex), 1¼ inches. Using these measurements as a basis, I was able to determine the center of curvature of the mirror and trace the paths of the light rays in question. (See diagram.)

"This is the method I used. The measurements and angles may not be geometrically exact but I believe they give the information asked for. With thumb tacks, fasten a sheet of plain paper to a flat wood surface. About two inches from the left edge of the paper draw a vertical line. With three small dots 4 inches apart on the vertical line, mark the diameter and the optical axis of the mirror. A distance of 1¼ inches to the left of the center dot, place another dot which will be at the vertex of the mirror. Now draw a line exactly perpendicular to the vertical line, starting from the small dot representing the vertex of the mirror through to the right edge of the paper. This line represents the optical axis. Take a compass and set it so that with the pivot on the optical axis, the pencil will draw a curved line that will touch the dots marking the diameter and vertex of the mirror. This curved line will represent the minor surface. The radius of the compass will be $6\frac{15}{16}$ inches, forming a circle 13⅞ inches in diameter.

"To represent the arc crater or light source, draw a short vertical line through the optical axis 4.5 inches from the vertex of the mirror.

"To answer (a), draw a light line from the center of the curvature to the surface of the mirror one inch from the optical axis. This line is to enable you to get the plane of the mirror surface at that point which you now draw and from which the angle of incidence and angle of reflection can be determined.

"From the center of the crater draw a heavy line to the mirror surface at the point where the light line ends. This is the path of a light ray, and the angle at which it strikes the plane of the mirror at that point is the angle of incidence. The light ray is reflected back past the light source at an angle called the angle of reflection. This angle must now be drawn.

"The angle of reflection equals the angle of incidence. Therefore with the aid of a protractor, using the light line and the mirror plane line as a basis, the angle of reflection can be found. Draw a heavy line from the mirror surface to the optical axis at that angle.

"The answer to (b) may be found by the same method used to answer (a). Draw a line from the center of curvature to the edge of mirror surface, next draw the mirror surface plane line at that point, then the light ray line from that point to the crater, find the angle of incidence, and then draw the reflecting light ray line, which should meet the optical axis at the same point as ray (a). (See diagram.)"

81 of 777 Canadian Wired Houses Closed, Report Shows

Statistics have been forwarded to Toronto by the Canadian Film Boards of Trade regarding the number of wired theatres in the Dominion which are open or closed. The official summary shows that, out of the total of 777 wired theatres, 696 are in regular operation and 81 are dark, temporarily or otherwise.

The totals for the provinces of eastern Canada are very encouraging. In the five provinces of Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, there are 469 sound theatres, of which only 15 are closed. There are 308 wired houses in western Canada and 66 of these are closed. Out of the 81 dark theatres in Canada, 54 are located in the prairie provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. In other words, exactly two-thirds of the closed theatres are to be found in the wheat belt. Ontario, with 264 wired theatres, has only eight closed houses and four of these are in Toronto. In Quebec, four of the 128 wired theatres are closed.

New Eastman 16 mm. Camera

A new Eastman camera, the Cine-Kodak Eight—is announced to quadruple the number of images recorded on a given length of 16 mm. film. It gives a picture 8 mm. wide, holds 25 feet of film, but takes enough pictures on that length to run four minutes on the screen, Eastman says.

FINAL RESPONSIBILITY

ADVENTURE and experimentation are important elements of production in the amusement industry. The motion picture has developed and progressed only as it has ventured and dared, consciously and unconsciously. This is obviously true of many other important industries, too, but because of the fact that all motion picture experimentation must be carried on in the blazing glare of public attention, its various phenomena are considerably more conspicuous, and the channels of traffic in standardized, proven wares are made the testing tracks for unproven screen departures. This is in no wise to be discouraged, from any constructive viewpoint in the industry, but it is a process which calls for a much larger exercise of skill and discretion than routine operation if disastrous tangles in the main streams of traffic are to be avoided.

A case somewhat in point is afforded by the experiences of Ben Stein of Jacksonville, Florida, operating, among others, the Ritz Theatre at Valdosta, Georgia, where he found himself contractually committed to the presentation of M-G-M's "Freaks."

Now "Freaks" is to be deemed a daring, adventuresome product, and so much a departure from the norm that its public acceptance in any given community is not subject to the usual formulae of forecast. Regardless of what anyone's individual opinion about this picture may be, if the industry were not free to put it on the screen it would be a hamstrung art.

But having been thus adventuresomely, experimentally made, it would have been most properly set before the exhibitor and his public in the same spirit. But it just so chances that down in Valdosta, as a consequence of its exhibition there, the city has enacted a censorship ordinance. As all too often happens, a judgment has been passed upon the whole of the motion picture because of an opinion about one item of its product.

Some share of the responsibility for these not infrequent situations is to be attributed to confusion of concept about what is ownership and responsibility in the motion picture business. The producer and the distributor of motion pictures are never well established in the public mind as the owners of what they see on the screen. The film may belong to the producer-distributor, but that is not what the exhibitor delivers to his audience. He rents the film as a medium of making shadows which he sells. The shadows are his own and the public credits him with them, too. The exhibitor is the true publisher of the motion picture. The audience identifies the pictures it sees with his screen and his house and ten thousand times to one patrons tell him, not the producer, what they think of the wares offered. So he has to run the show in his town. His public is his—and it is always right.

WORDS AND PICTURES

THE announcement of Mr. Alfred E. Smith as editor of the New Outlook, through the proprietorship of Mr. Frank A. Tichenor, an alumnus of our industry, becomes a matter of motion picture interest, and mayhap, with the motion picture as a major industry becoming increasingly concerned with governments and administrations, a matter of no little importance.

In the kinship of the printed word and the screen as forms of publication there is an interest, too, in this renewed expression inspired by Mr. Tichenor, of a return to personality in journalism. Much of the pith, punch and savor has gone out of American journalism with the growth of its newspapers and magazines into vast machines, representing group interests and produced by group efforts. Like the motion picture, the typical American magazine has achieved a curiously impersonal perfection of technique and finish with, all too often, a resultant product as handsome as a Jacobean table from Grand Rapids, made of blue gum wood and machined to a mirror surface, handsome, flawless and unconvincing.

One important asset of Mr. Smith as an editor is his admitted refusal to read books. He prefers to listen and to talk, and likes to talk on paper. That's promising for an editor and contributor, because he may thus be freed from the curse of "the rehash." Professional writers include too many of that facile school who will write about anything, mistaking their capacity for word mongery and saying for the very different capacity of having something to say. If writers could be restrained and required to write only about that which they know there would be less and more important writing.

Both the motion picture and modern journalism had their beginnings and earlier successes in expressions strongly marked by personality. A Watterson editorial, a Brisbane blurb, a Bennett page one, were all individual. Also there was no mistaking a Griffith picture, the Tom Ince touch or a Sennett comedy, in those old days. Progress and expansion and volume production methods have lost to both page and screen most of such elements of quality. Further progress, specialization, the intelligent service of less than all the millions with the same pabulum can restore the individual in expression.

DARK AND SILENT

THE much heralded approaching solar eclipse is the subject of deep laid and secret plans among the newsreels. Every important telescope in the eclipse path is being besieged by cameramen. This will be the first important cosmic spectacle since the coming of the sound camera. Let us hope that it will not reveal that the music of the spheres is a carillon of dumbbells. We like our eclipses silent, but they'll all be lectured, and, probably, wisecracked.

¶ 'MOVING HAND WRITES AS IT WILL'

—THE REGISTER AT DANVILLE IN VIRGINIA

ARTERIOSCLEROSIS

When the censor board at DANVILLE in VIRGINIA resolved that unaccompanied children under 14 must be kept away from pictures "of gruesome types," the REGISTER took the board to task with this comment:

> Here we have an illustration of the inherent difficulties under which the producers labor. The writer is under no obligation to consider the law of average masses in penning his masterpiece. He does not have to remember that there will be young children who must not be frightened and graybeards in the last stages of arteriosclerosis in his audience. The moving hand writes what it will and, having writ, moves on—to write another masterpiece.
> The producers are people who aim to please. They have not as yet put on "The Adventures of Peter Rabbit," but they have staged many wholesome productions for young Americans. Considering the limitations their audience imposes upon them, they do a good job.

TEACHING

In the University of Chicago's plan to make twenty talking pictures for physical science instruction, the ITEM-TRIBUNE of NEW ORLEANS in LOUISIANA finds a basis for comment on the general subject of teaching pictures, as follows:

> There has been a great deal of talk about teaching by movie ever since the pioneer days of the silent screen, but not very much has come of it. . . . The accompanying lectures may prove quite as valuable as the pictures, particularly to the schools which buy the talkies. Almost none are financially able to employ as lecturers authorities on the subjects presented.

DESPITE GENESIS

The world "was not made in six days, despite Genesis," says ARTHUR G. STAPLES, editor of the EVENING JOURNAL of LEWISTON in MAINE, and applies that bit of philosophy to the motion picture in this wise:

> It has been only 10 years since the motion picture went along with the Will Hays idea of self-regulation. As we say, some of the productions make one smile at the proposition of morals; but just the same, there has been progress in that direction. Pictures are cleaner and less prurient. . . . The box office will kill itself if it fails to risk some loss for the sake of future gains. . . .

MIRE

Clean pictures present "the most promising pathway" to commercial success, says the DISPATCH of COLUMBUS in OHIO, the writer offering his views in these words:

> . . . Film producers and distributors could not find commercial success in catering exclusively to extremists either of the highbrow or the lowbrow variety, and it may be surmised that if they would get their less exalted pictures a little farther from the mire of gross sexualism, and give us a fairly balanced ration, ranging from sheer nonsense, that brings hearty laughter and mental relaxation without being dirty, up to the height even of classic drama, presented without being jazzed, they would find such a policy the most promising pathway to the retention of a widespread and commercially profitable interest in picture presentation. . . .
> Let our film producers rise to the level of giving us a picture program whose wit and gaiety are bright but unsoiled, and whose serious, thought-provoking parts are not dull and pessimistic, and they will soon find that in every city thousands who are now uninterested or antagonistic will soon become steady patrons and enthusiastic advocates of screen presentation.

WASHOUTS

Declaring a considerable number of pictures today are "best described as washouts" and voicing the hope that "responsible persons engaged in the motion picture business realize how terrible are some of the things they are offering the public," the editorial writer of the JOURNAL of SIOUX CITY in IOWA nevertheless recognizes the drawing power of the screen, thus:

> Life today without the screen would be unwelcome to hundreds of millions throughout the civilized world. For humanity has drawn from motion pictures more entertainment and information than from anything else of the kind. The stage has been far outclassed, which explains the popularity of the screen. . . .

TITLES

A hint that the industry is laying itself open to regulation from the outside because of suggestive titles is voiced by FRED M. WHITE of the OREGONIAN at PORTLAND in OREGON, when he says:

> . . . Under the present vogue of titles and exploitation there is no choosing. Clean, wholesome pictures like "Wayward" are put out with suggestive titles and advertised accordingly to draw sensation-seekers to the box office, while films reeking with vulgarity are labeled with innocent-sounding titles to catch the unwary. . . .
> Here is an opportunity for the Will Hays organization to do something worth while for the industry and the public. If something is not done within the motion picture business to promote truth in the labeling of canned entertainment, the people may find some way to regulate it from the outside, as they did in the matter of canned foods.

A tendency of the patron to "pan anything and everything on the program," says the STAR at LINCOLN in NEBRASKA, usually is prompted by failure to realize that "what he doesn't like may prove a source of keen enjoyment to others, and vice versa." To which the editorial writer adds:

> What the movie public seldom thinks about is the fact that a producer can never tell in advance what will "take" and what won't. He has to go it blind, not knowing whether the completed picture will turn out to be a dud or become one of the big hits on the screen. It takes mighty good judgment on his part to score a reasonable percentage of success over failures.

ALLIED EXTENDS AN OLIVE BRANCH TO MPTOA FOR A UNITED FRONT

Lightman Tells Steffes He Must First Consult Executive Committee on Proposal to Solve Problems of All Theatres

Allied States Association has extended the olive branch to the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, and if the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America accepts, these competitive associations will get together to discuss the problems and economic relationship of exhibitors with distributors. In this connection, it is their hope that plans will be formulated for the common good of all theatres.

After receiving recently an invitation extended by the MPTOA to participate in a joint conference of state leaders to discuss the 5-5-5 contract situation, directors of Allied, in special session at Chicago on Tuesday, passed a resolution authorizing its president, Al Steffes, to appoint a committee of six to meet with a committee of six to be selected from the MPTOA by its chairman, M. A. Lightman, to discuss not only the uniform contract, but the entire eight points which Allied, in convention in March, set up as representing the objectives in which they are immediately interested.

Lightman to Consult Leaders

The eight points of indictment are: Unreasonable protection forced upon independents by producers and circuits; unfair and unreasonable percentage policy and playing arrangements practiced by several major distributors; poor quality of product; elimination of distributors from exhibition; adverse legislation; compulsory block booking; double features and the music tax and copyright protection bureau.

Mr. Steffes immediately appointed Abram F. Myers, Sidney E. Samuelson, H. A. Cole, Glenn A. Cross, Nathan Yamins and himself to Allied's committee and from Chicago he communicated by telephone with Mr. Lightman at Memphis suggesting that the conference meet in Chicago on Tuesday next. Mr. Lightman informed Mr. Steffes that it would be necessary for him to consult with the executive committee.

Allied will immediately set about to campaign for a reduction in rentals. At the Chicago directors' conference it was decided to demand a general reduction of at least 25 per cent on all new contracts for film under last year's rental scale. In all "meritorious" cases, Allied will seek a similar adjustment on existing contracts. The directors agreed that there exist indications of a business revival, but they declared there is no evidence of such an upturn as would overcome in a single year the ravages allegedly made by the long depression. They claimed theatre owners must substantially cut overhead if they are to break even during the year and the brunt of this trimming, they pointed out, must come from reduction in film prices.

Another matter in the foreground at the meeting concerned percentage contracts. In this Allied leaders take the attitude that since only pictures of unusual drawing power can stimulate attendance, it becomes absolutely necessary that percentage contracts on selected pictures be eliminated. It was pointed out that such deals are accompanied by flat rentals on the balance of the product with little or no drawing power and that the inevitable result is an unprofitable deal and subsequent bankruptcy.

Will Analyze Sales Conditions

Selling conditions in each territory are to come in for careful analysis on new season deals. Sales policies of the various companies are to be checked in each territory under a plan worked out whereby every Allied regional chairman will report to the national organization every two weeks giving information and details as to the situation in his territory. This information will provide the basis of a series of bulletins to be issued from the national office.

Allied's directors also passed a resolution saying: "The efforts of Will H. Hays of the MPPDA and Louis B. Mayer of MGM in behalf of the Republican ticket, and the prominence of Jack Warner of Warner Brothers and Frank Walker of the Publix-Comerford circuit, in the Democratic National Committee, have given rise to much speculation as to the probable use of the screen as an agency for political propaganda during the coming (presidential) campaign." The resolution, which was aimed against any use of political propaganda on theatre screens, will be made public in Washington by Abram Myers.

Mr. Walker, on August 15, tendered his resignation as vice-president and general counsel of the MPTOA.

Sees 5-5-5 Cause Hopeless

In the meantime, it appears that Mr. Lightman agrees with Allied on the hopelessness of the cause of the 5-5-5 contract. "Inasmuch as distributors broke faith offering alternate use of the 5-5-5 agreement, we want a new deal now," he said the other day at Memphis, from which point he has been directing a vigorous campaign in an effort to force distributors to adopt the standard form this season. "We won't accept that form now," he continued. After repeated requests to distributors and to their attorneys, only Fox and Universal indicated a willingness to meet with MPTOA exhibitors and discuss adoption. Mr. Lightman said that he "received splendid response from exhibitor organizations" to meet to work out retaliatory measures against distributors because of their failure to adopt the contract. A buying "holiday" which was suggested a few weeks ago by Mr. Lightman has been practically abandoned.

Of his proposal to Mr. Lightman to have the MPTOA meet with Allied, Mr. Steffes said it was prompted "in an effort to seek common ground on which to work for the welfare of the exhibitors of the country." Mr. Steffes said that Allied's proposal was made in appreciation of the following statement in Mr. Lightman's original letter to Allied: "Our organization (MPTOA) is in accord with most of your contentions, but simply uses different methods in trying to produce results."

Sun Amusement Files New Suit

A second suit charging conspiracy to monopolize trade has been filed against large distributors by the Sun Amusement Company, of Lincoln, Neb., and asks $2,100,000 actual and punitive damages of the defendants.

A similar suit was brought in federal court at Omaha some time ago by the Sun Amusement Co., and was decided in favor of the distributors. The second suit is being brought in Nebraska district court at Lincoln under a state law prohibiting combinations and conspiracies to monopolize trade. The plaintiff seeks to recover actual damages threefold, and alleges that the defendants combined prior to June 8, 1929, to monopolize the distribution of films in the state and thereafter refused to carry out contracts with the plaintiff.

Named as defendants in the suit are MGM, Warner-F. N., Fox, Universal, United Artists, RKO Radio, Pathe, Educational, and the Omaha Film Board of Trade.

Cleveland Sees Upward Trend

The general upward trend of business in Cleveland definitely asserted as being appreciably visible in both manufacturing and retail enterprises, was evidenced further last week by an approximate 25 per cent increase in grosses at first-run downtown theatres.

Cleveland retail merchants have reported that business has been steadily gaining during the past two weeks. The rate of unemployment has been slightly reduced. Confidence is being gradually restored and local financiers have a feeling that money isn't so tight as it was earlier in the summer.

Zukor in Columbus Sept. 7

Adolph Zukor, president of Paramount, is scheduled to speak to exhibitors in Columbus on September 7. Plans are now being made for Mr. Zukor to be in Cleveland the following day. J. E. Fontaine, Paramount district manager, is awaiting final word before making preparations for the reception in Cleveland.

Shipment Rates Reduced

Motor trucks handling films in and out of Dallas have given a 50 per cent cut on return shipments coinciding with the recent Railroad Commission ruling on express shipments. Theatres will now realize a net saving of 25 per cent on their film shipments through the new order. The same carrier, however, must handle the film both ways in order to secure this saving.

ENGINEERS AND ACADEMY SET OUT TO STANDARDIZE FILM TECHNIQUE

Goldsmith Presents Problems to American Association; Uniform 16mm. Sound Film Decided on by Four Companies

Steps have been taken in the week individually by various agencies concerned with the technical advancement of the industry to effect national standards for the many and varied phases of equipment and mechanical operation of the motion picture.

Dr. Alfred N. Goldsmith, president of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, asked the American Standards Association to consider standardization in the motion picture industry, from the lighting and acoustics of studios to the projectors and screens of theatres.

The Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences launched its new Research Council to coordinate motion picture research and standardization efforts.

RCA Victor, Bell and Howell, International Projector and Eastman Kodak decided on a standardized form of 16 mm. film by eliminating one set of sprocket holes.

Larger studios in Hollywood began to work for standardized use of "split film."

Probably the most important move currently pointing toward complete uniformity of the industry's technical structure took place on Monday when Dr. Goldsmith, a vice-president of the Radio Corporation of America, filed a formal request with Dr. P. G. Agnew, secretary of the American Standards Association, for the development of uniform national standards in motion pictures with the aim in mind of avoiding the danger of confusion and waste resulting from the establishment of conflicting standards by different groups. If the request is approved, a technical committee representing all branches will be organized under the procedure of the American Standards Association, which has in its membership various governmental, technical and engineering bodies, including United States departments and bureaus, Bell Telephone, the American societies of civil, mechanical and sanitary engineers. Bell Telephone, Institute of Radio Engineers, National Board of Fire Underwriters and others in this field, National Safety Council, National Fire Protection Association and 33 additional important groups.

Redraft Terminology, Says Goldsmith

The industry also needs standardization of terminology, at present in a confused state, said Dr. Goldsmith.

Among the needed standards for equipment and methods, he declared, are film sizes, acoustics of both studios and theatres, amplifying equipment, recording equipment, camera silencing enclosures, re-recording equipment for modifying sound effects, photographic printing equipment, cameras and laboratory processes.

"Such fields as color photography also require study," Dr. Goldsmith stated. "The various processes have never been satisfactorily defined, nor have the various forms of cameras, lenses, processing equipment, and projectors been put on a suitably precise basis. Three-dimensional pictures require definition. Frequency systems which give perspective impressions are classified as three-dimensional or 'pseudostereoscopic'."

The new "split film," which is 17½ mm. wide, is said to reduce studio film costs 35 per cent. It is just half the width of the "sight" film (left). Helen Hayes and Gary Cooper are studying the recording with the new film in Paramount's "A Farewell to Arms."

The complete scope of the standardization movement which Dr. Goldsmith suggested be given attention includes:

Eleven Phases Listed by Goldsmith

DEFINITIONS. Terminology is confused. Such terms as "blimp," "zoom," "pan," "tilt," "projection angle," "wow," or "flutter," are used without official recognition.

FILM. Measurement of characteristics of the base, dimensions and perforations, study of shrinkage and permissible maximum shrinkage, photographic sensitometric tests, measurement and specifications of "safety film," standard width of various types, standard containers for storage and transportation, together with methods of preservation of films (for archives, etc.).

STUDIO. Acoustic treatment and illuminating methods doubtless would permit of a considerable degree of standardization in nomenclature, measurement and specifications. Great varieties of lamps are used. Light-diffusing media used are known by a variety of colloquial terms. Acoustic characteristics of studios have not as yet been specified in any precise form in many instances, nor has measuring equipment been adequately considered.

CAMERAS. Amount of significant noise produced in these devices at certain definite distances and in certain definite directions (in free space), tolerances in dimensions of various working parts, tensions and pressures, dimensions of magazines and hubs, the take-up tension, require study for possible standardization. The mode of mounting lenses, possibility of standardizing focal lengths, apertures, definition of tripod arrangements and nomenclature for devices permitting moving shots require consideration. Measurement of effectiveness of camera-silencing inclosures is required.

Larger Studios Undertake Use of "Split" Film to Reduce Costs; Academy Research Council Begins Uniformity Studies

RECORDING EQUIPMENT. Microphones, amplifiers, acoustic reflectors, recording equipment, and sound track measuring equipment fall under this heading. Numerous characteristics are measurable, might be specified to advantage, and may ultimately be suitable for standardization.

RE-RECORDERS. Used for introduction of modification of sound effects, and are rapidly becoming an important part of studio technic. They are used for recording from 35 mm. to 35 mm. film; from 35 mm. to 16 mm. film. Over-all frequency and volume characteristics, amount of acoustic distortion factors are of major importance.

PHOTOGRAPHIC PRINTING EQUIPMENT. Classification of types of equipment (continuous and step printers, optical reduction printers, contact printers). Permissible speed variation. Definition of maximum desirable operating speed. Specification of illumination of printing surface.

LABORATORY PROCESSES. Development of film is now carried out in various ways by automatic machinery. Terminology requires study and certain processes require precision measurement and definition: measurements of effectiveness of processes for "hardening," or otherwise preserving film.

EXCHANGE EQUIPMENT. Dimensions and mechanical specifications, as well as strength tests of reels and containers, require consideration, both for nitrate and safety stock.

THEATRE EQUIPMENT. Projector tension and pressure at various points of the mechanism, magazine dimensions, safety devices, contrivances to protect the projectionists' eyes, may all be considered for standardization. Screens (both continuous type and perforated "sound-transmitting" type) merit standardization of reflection characteristics and specifications thereof. The re-surfacing of screens as they become warped brings up a similar series of problems. Amplifying and loud speaking equipment gives rise to the usual electro-acoustic standardization problems ending with the frequency characteristic, distortion characteristic, and space distribution of output of the loudspeaker system.

MISCELLANEOUS. Such fields as color photography require study. The various processes have never been satisfactorily defined, nor have the various forms of cameras, lenses, processing equipment, and projectors been put on a suitably precise basis. Three-dimensional pictures require definition. Frequency systems which give perspective impressions are classified as three-dimensional or "pseudo-stereoscopic."

A few days preceding Dr. Goldsmith's presentation of mechanical difficulties before the American Standards Association, representatives of the larger studios in Hollywood and of various other member branches belonging to the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, met on the

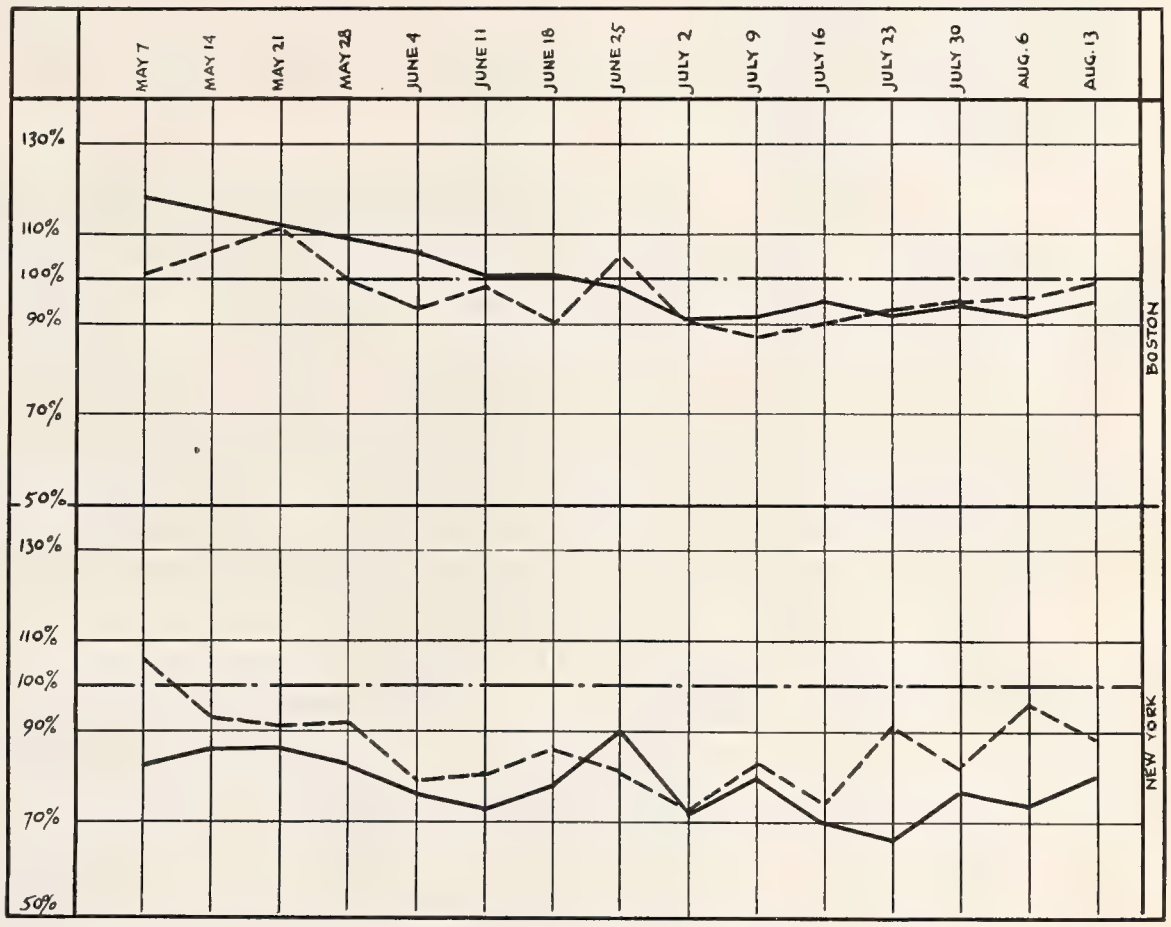
60,000 TEACHERS TO PARTICIPATE IN APPLYING NEW PREVIEW SERVICE

National Council of English Instructors Will Have Committees Functioning on Both Coasts in Selections and Tests

The National Council of Teachers of English will inaugurate motion picture previewing activities this fall and their lists of recommended pictures will be distributed to 60,000 teachers of English throughout the United States.

Details of the Council's plans will be formulated immediately after the reopening of schools in September, at which time, it is expected, previewing committees will be appointed either by officials of the national council or by officers of the New York and Los Angeles units. It is believed that the lists of recommended pictures will be disseminated to the 60,000 teachers through "The English Journal," official publication of the National Council. W. Wilbur Hatfield and John J. De Boer, editors of the publication, together with William Lewin, New York educator, are expected to play prominent parts in the movement.



Through the activities of this organization it is hoped that a threefold objective will be realized, with resultant advantages to both the industry and the schools. The objectives, as set forth by Carl E. Milliken, of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, which has offered cooperation to the teachers' organization, are: to create a larger market for better films by encouraging patronage for them; to effect legitimate and approved tieups and contacts for exhibitors with schools, and to acquaint teachers and classes with the existence of pictures which are of value to them.

The English teachers' council was chosen to do the previewing work because it offered the greatest number of advantages for accomplishment of the desired objectives. It was felt that members of this pedagogic group were best fitted to recognize meritorious renditions of classics into motion pictures, and readily to identify examples of artistic merit in motion pictures.

Two Previewing Committees

The council will have two previewing committees, one functioning in New York and the other in Hollywood. In addition to its work of picture selecting, the organization will sponsor scientific tests to be conducted in the schools to ascertain the tastes in motion pictures of children having guidance in their photoplay selections and the tastes of those without guidance. The correlation between the rankings of the "best" pictures by the groups, it is hoped, will afford a measure of the effectiveness of instruction in matters leading to appreciation of the art of the screen.

Mr. Milliken was instrumental in obtaining approval of the National Education Association for a previewing organization within the schools. In addressing a recent convention of the association, Mr. Milliken urged teachers to give their aid in creating a demand and in enlisting support for better pictures. He urged them at the time to make use of the School and Screen department of Motion Picture Herald as an aid and guide in previewing and recommending pictures.

The graph, based upon MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S weekly compilation of box office receipts, presents a comparison of 1931 and 1932 returns to theatres of New York and Boston, for the period May 7 to August 13. The solid lines represent the receipts for the period in 1932; the broken lines, for the period last year. The 100 per cent lines show the average weekly gross in each city during the entire year 1931.

"The industry," Mr. Milliken said, "will be glad to have you join in this (previewing) enterprise and will make available to you the same facilities now enjoyed by other groups. To aid further in relating the current picture to the classroom, the Motion Picture Herald, a magazine of the industry, has established the School and Screen. Through this department it hopes to bring to the attention of teachers each week current motion pictures which have educational significance. The thought is to utilize the entertainment screen as an outside aid to pupils in their classroom work. This work has been particularly valuable in view of the number of recent pictures which have lent themselves to the service—pictures like 'With Byrd at the South Pole,' 'Abraham Lincoln,' 'Skippy,' 'Cimarron,' 'A Connecticut Yankee,' 'Trader Horn,' 'Seas Beneath,' 'Dirigible,' 'Great Meadow,' 'Rango,' and 'Painted Desert'."

"With the coming of 'Cimarron'," Mr. Milliken continued, "more definite steps were taken under the influence of School and Screen to bring the classroom into association with the picture. A questionnaire regarding the film and its historical significance was prepared for use by the teachers and in a number of communities actual theatre parties were planned and carried through with children from history rooms attending in bodies.

"Purposes of the School and Screen department as set forth by Mrs. Thomas A. McGoldrick, who conducts it, are: (1) To encourage children to see the best things of the screen, thereby leaving them less time and less money for the poorer things; (2) To have the entertainment screen contribute directly and constructively to their education; (3) To encourage producers to make more high type pictures by winning support for those already released."

"Increasing interest," Mr. Milliken concluded, "is being shown by teachers, parent-teachers' association groups, as well as by producers and theatre managers. Motion Picture Herald has offered to send reprints of the service periodically, without cost or other obligations, to those persons who wish to make definite contacts between the school and the theatre."

The invitation to have the National Council of Teachers of English sponsor this previewing activity followed shortly after Mr. Milliken's address, and was accepted by the council. The organization is the twelfth important group to participate in the previewing of motion pictures and the distribution of lists of recommended films on a national basis.

SUITS BY BLUMENTHAL ADVANCED IN COURTS

Judges Take Up Actions Against Paramount and Fox Theatres Corporation; Producer Sued by Stage Show Investor

Legal actions against Paramount and Fox Theatres Corporation inaugurated by A. C. Blumenthal, financier and theatrical producer were advanced in New York courts during the past seven days. Concurrently, a new action to obtain a share of the profits of the stage musical production, "Girl Crazy," was filed against Mr. Blumenthal by Albert M. Greenfield of Philadelphia, an investor in the show.

In the Paramount action, a motion by Nathan Burkan, counsel for Mr. Blumenthal, to have eleven banks joined as defendants with Paramount Publix and Paramount officers and directors was granted by the court. This action seeks to have set aside a recent credit transaction between Paramount Publix and the eleven banks. A first hearing of the Fox Theatres action, involving a motion to have set aside the equity receivership of the corporation, slated for this week, was put over to September 6.

Charges Collusion

In his action against Fox Theatres Corporation Mr. Blumenthal charges that the receivership entered into by the corporation last June was the result of collusion between it and the Chicago Title and Trust Company and asked, therefore, that the receivership be vacated and the equity suit brought by the Chicago company be dismissed.

Mr. Blumenthal alleges that Fox Theatres Corporation owes him $350,000, the balance of a note for $520,000 given him by the corporation some time ago as the result of an agreement reached on payment for Mr. Blumenthal's services as an agent for the corporation on various occasions. He sets forth that a weekly schedule of payments in accordance with the agreement was made to him from January 6, last, until the time of the receivership, which, he says, had the effect of making it impossible for him to enter judgment against Fox Theatres Corporation for the balance of the note. The action says that "according to information and belief" the Chicago Title and Trust Company was induced by William E. Atkinson, newly elected president of Fox Theatres, and by the corporation itself, to begin "a friendly action" against the corporation for an equity receivership.

The Blumenthal papers further charge that "serious, multifarious changes in the assets and properties of the corporation" were made in order "to make it appear that the defendant was unable to meet its obligations and was constrained to seek an equity receivership, and for the specific purpose of rendering it difficult or impossible for the deponent (Blumenthal) to collect from the defendant the amount of money which was and is justly due."

Among the changes referred to in assets and properties of the corporation were, "according to information and belief, the disposal of Fox Theatre Corporation's theatres previously owned in Washington and in San Francisco, and also the outright leases or other disposition of the Poli Circuit of Theatres."

Asks Agreement Set Aside

Mr. Blumenthal's action against Paramount Publix seeks to have the agreement between the corporation and the bankers set aside and the newly formed Film Corporation dissolved in order that the assets of Paramount Publix may be returned to the status in which they stood before they were pledged for the loans consummated by Paramount several months ago.

The banks joined as defendants under the ruling by Supreme Court Justice Samuel I. Rosenman are the Bankers Trust Co., Central Hanover Bank and Trust Co., Commercial Bank and Trust Co., County Trust Co., Empire Trust Co., Manufacturers' Trust Co., National City Bank, the First National Bank of Chicago, the Continental Illinois Bank and Trust Co., the Commercial National Bank and Trust Co., and the Tradesmen's National Bank and Trust Co.

Previously named as defendants besides Paramount Publix Corporation were the Chemical National Bank, Chase National Bank, Adolph Zukor, John D. Hertz, Emanuel Cohen, Sam Katz, Ralph A. Kohn, Gilbert W. Kahn, Frank Bailey, Casimir I. Stralem, Austin C. Keough, William Wiseman, Jules E. Brulatour, Eugene Zukor, and Paramount Publix Film Productions Corp.

In another action, the Albert Company, an investment concern of Philadelphia, applied in the supreme court at New York for a summary judgment against Mr. Blumenthal for $4,485, said to be due on an investment in the musical comedy, "Girl Crazy," financed by the defendant.

Albert M. Greenfield, president of the company, said that he invested $5,000 and that he is still entitled to profits in the possession of Mr. Blumenthal. He contends that there is no valid defense to the suit. In an examination before trial, Mr. Blumenthal said he permitted the investment to be made because Mr. Greenfield wanted to make it after seeing the production as Mr. Blumenthal's guest.

Four Groups Seek Uniform Technique

Coast and under the chairmanship of Darryl Zanuck, Warner production executive, launched a Research Council to coordinate film research and standardization efforts and to function as a central bureau for exchange of technical and artistic information.

Technicians appointed to head sub-committees of the Research Council are:

Virgil Miller, development of a noiseless camera for recording sound pictures; Carl Dreher, standardization of set and costume tints; John Nickolaus, uniform release print practice; W. C. Harcus, release print film processing investigation; C. Roy Hunter, film preservatives investigation; Douglas Shearer, screen quality study; E. H. Hansen, split film recording investigation.

Apparently the SMPE group, headed by Dr. Goldsmith, and the Academy's Research Council, are working individually on efforts to harmonize the industry's mechanical aspects.

The Council will hold quarterly meetings to review technical and artistic problems. Subcommittees will give immediate attention to exchange and theatre projection practices to eliminate mutilation of release prints; research toward development of a practical silent camera so that cumbersome "blimps" may be eliminated; coordination of research in the new technique of "split film" recording; standardization of tints for costumes and settings to avoid halation in photography, and study of factors entering into the brightness of pictures on theatre screens to determine a uniformly "pleasing standard."

Standardization Set on 16mm. Film

Another development is the decision of RCA Victor Company, Bell & Howell, International Projector Company and Eastman Kodak Company to maintain the present standard size 16 mm. film in the production of sound-on-film, eliminating one of the two rows of sprocket holes and utilizing the space thus acquired for the sound track.

The dimensions of the picture on the film remain the same. Present stocks of silent film can be run on sound projectors for the new film. The center line of the sound track is located centrally in the space between the picture and the edge of the film. The space thus available permits a sound track .065 inch in width and suitable margins on each side of the sound track.

The standard speed of 16 mm. sound film is 24 frames a second and the lead of the sound with respect to the picture is 25 frames in advance.

It thus becomes unnecessary to change the projector lens, to shift the projector, or to increase the candle power of the projector lamp.

Following three years of experimentation and decision by the Academy last week to take up the study further with a thought to standardizing, Paramount this week adopted the use of "split film," a new system whereby motion picture studio film costs are said to be reduced 35 per cent. MGM has been using "split film" recording for some time.

The new film, used only on films on which sound is recorded, is exactly half the size of standard 35 mm. film. The first Paramount production on which it is being used is "A Farewell to Arms." New equipment to handle the narrow film is being installed in all film-cutting rooms, so that within a week all productions will be using the narrow film. Only the film used in the studio for editing purposes will be affected, it was explained. Film used by theatres will not be changed.

In editing film, the pictured action is on one strip of film and the sound on another. Thus, says Paramount, the cost of sound track film is cut in half and, since more sound track is needed in editing than action, the saving on all work prints will amount to a large sum annually.

The split film is 17½ mm. wide, with sprocket holes on one side only. In film laboratories, the sound is printed one side of standard film and down the other. A special dividing machine then splits the film, and splits the cost at the same time.

THE CAMERA REPORTS

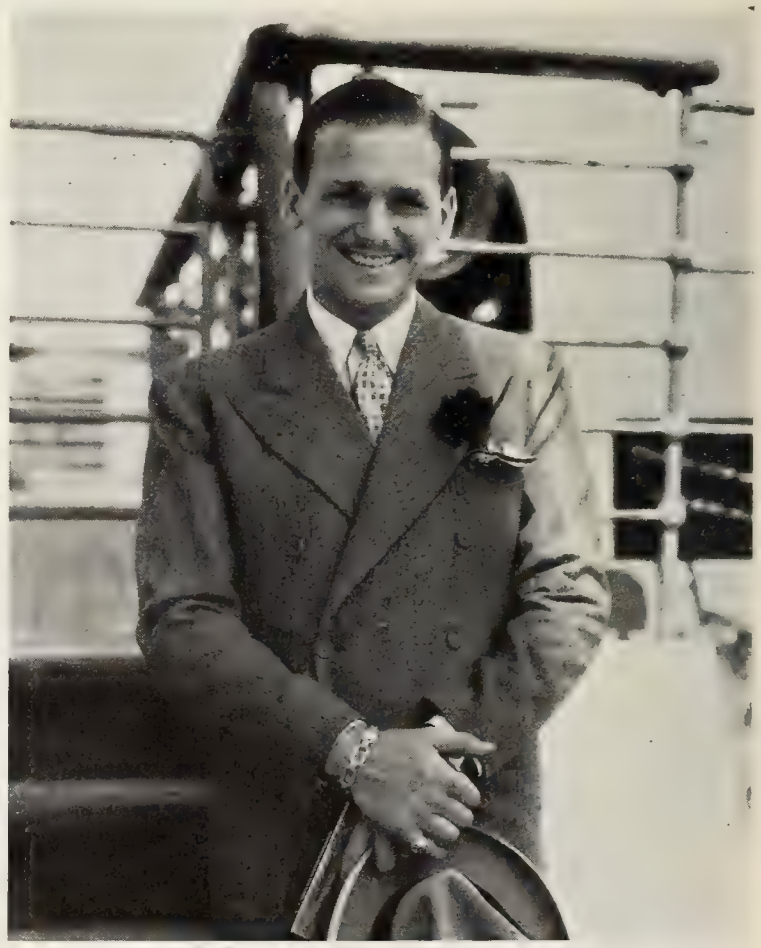
SERIAL HEROINE. (Above) Cecelia Parker, who has a prominent role in Universal's serial, "Jungle Mystery," and is scheduled to follow with "The Lost Special."

AT HOME. (Below) Paul Bern, MGM executive, and his bride, Jean Harlow, MGM star, recently married, in the garden of their home.

SHADOWS. (Below) Mystery emphasized by pictorial contrasts, and the ominous symbolism of the spider. A dramatization of the theme of the "shocker" melodrama, "The Limping Man," a Powers Production, with Percy Parsons in the title role. The story is by Will Scott.

PUBLISHER. (Above) Kathryn Dougherty, "K. D." of Photoplay Magazine fame, elected head of that periodical, succeeding the late James R. Quirk.

DANSEUSE. (Below) Patricia Bowman, former ballet leader at the Roxy theatre, New York, who is scheduled to dance at Radio City.



MERMAIDS. In the modern manner. A parting salute to summer, and an overture to fall—despite both aspects of this aquatic scene, a lovely picture withal, featuring a lucky seven of the young women who continue in the traditions of the famed Hal Roach bathing beauties, fetching elements of the Roach-MGM comedies.

AVOCATION. As an artist, many a man is a good actor. But Jean Hersholt can qualify for both. Here the MGM featured player is shown practicing his hobby at his California home, while his son, Allen, looks admiringly on.

MYSTERY PLAY. Looks it, doesn't it? Here the still camera has caught the spirit of the event, as it records Fox artists and technicians filming a scene for "Chandu the Magician." Marcel Varnel and William Cameron Menzies are shown at right directing, while James Wong Howe is chief cameraman.

BACK HOME AGAIN. Following a short trip abroad, Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., Warner Brothers star, is shown on the Europa arriving in New York from Europe, where he and his wife, Joan Crawford, have been spending a vacation.

ARCHWAY. Unless you're superstitious. At any rate, a novel pose for Lorena Layson, who, as a stand-in girl, has been "discovered," and now holds a Warner Brothers contract as a player. Her first role is in "Silver Dollar."

DREAM OF FAIR WOMEN. And not such a dream, when one considers that they achieve a vivid reality in the motion picture production, "Thirteen Women," by RKO Radio. They are Julie Haydon, Mary Duncan, Harriet Hagman, Irene Dunne, Myrna Loy, Kay Entwistle—and all of them featured.

TRIPLE EXPOSURE. And surely such popularity must be deserved. More than enough is hardly sufficient in this case, in which Karen Morely, MGM featured player, economizes on photographic plates. She was in "Washington Masquerade."

WATCHING 'EM MAKE MOVIES. For scenes of "The Night of June 12," Paramount had to go to Ontario, Cal., and, of course, the whole town turned out. Work was interfered with until Director Stephen Roberts persuaded the kids to watch from the roof. Gene Raymond and Frances Dee are the players shown.

HOT OFF THE GRIDDLE

Adventure, Preachment and Melodrama Are Served on the Week's Menus of the Studios

by LEO MEEHAN
Hollywood Staff Correspondent

Chief interest last week among the Hollywood previewers was in the latest adventure film from Douglas Fairbanks, "Mr. Robinson Crusoe." Doug followed the Hollywood custom of ballyhooing the affair, with high-powered lights, a big crowd of rubbernecks, and a full house at the Ritz, a neighborhood house on Wilshire.

Combining the usual pancreatic activities of the star with glamorous backgrounds and music of the South Seas, it becomes both colorful and lively, and no doubt will be pleasing entertainment to those who enjoy the Fairbanksian style of film fare. There are antics from a monkey, from a parrot and from natives to supplement those of Douglas, and there is a light but amusing romance between him and Maria Alba, altogether very charming as a native girl fascinated by the visitor. It is a pleasure to see Bill Farnum again, too.

Adventure and Fun

The story concerns a bet made by Doug with a party of friends sailing the South Seas (the yacht used was Joe Schenck's, by the way), that he can go ashore and in three months' time have a penthouse and all the usual luxuries of civilization. His adventures, the winning of the bet, follow. He can't marry the native girl, so he hops off for New York to put her in the Follies. It's all very amusing for youngsters from eight to eighty.

Heaviest fare of the week was Radio's bloody revelation of conditions supposed to exist in prison road camps, much publicized of late through the horrors which took place in Florida. Writing in the Los Angeles Times, the veteran critic, Edwin Schallert, observed that "Hell's Highway" could hardly be called entertainment, to which we are agreed. It is too brutal in concept and execution, but as a preachment against practices we are led to believe exist at least in some states among convicts, it might very well arouse public opinion to a pitch which would eliminate such abuses forever. Naturally, there always is a question how far the screen should go in the use of propaganda on any subject.

Richard Dix does a splendid piece of work as the ringleader of the rebellious convicts. He gives it all a most compelling realism, and fine support is rendered by Tom Brown as his brother. This is very vigorous drama, very strikingly done.

Unusual Melodrama

Radio also previewed the final edition of "The Most Dangerous Game," the unusual melodrama produced by Merian C. Cooper and Ernest B. Schoedsack, noted for such productions as "Grass" and "Chang." James Creelman has built a striking screen play from Richard Connell's story of a maniacal Russian big game hunter who, surfeited with the killing of beasts, goes to an island in the South Seas, where he amuses himself trapping, hunting and killing human beings. It may therefore be classed among the shocker pictures, though it is radically different from any of the others in conception and backgrounds. It is distinguished by an exceptional performance from Leslie Banks, noted English stage star, in the role of the man killer. Supporting him with equally brilliant performances are Joel McCrea, Fay Wray, Robert Armstrong and others. A pack of Great Dane dogs, a thrilling chase through foggy swamp, hand-to-hand encounters, these and many other exciting things give the film the feeling of an oldtime serial, all boiled down and packed into one feature film. Action, suspense, thrills—aplenty.

J. G. Bachmann has finished the first of his independently made pictures for RKO Radio release. It is called "Strange Justice," and while it is pretty slow getting under way, the finish carries plenty of punch. The whole picture is done expertly, and though the story material is somewhat trite, it has plenty of salable hokum and an interesting cast headed by Reginald Denny, Marian Marsh, Richard Bennett, Norman Foster and Irving Pichel. There is high suspense created in the old but ever new situation of a last-minute rescue from the electric chair.

Projectionist Ordinance Debated at Utica, N. Y.

Controversy has been aroused at Utica, N. Y., by passage of an ordinance providing that each motion picture theatre shall employ a projectionist of at least five years' experience for each machine used. The ordinance, introduced as a safety measure, specifies penalties ranging from $25 to $200 for violations, plus cancellation of license.

Independent theatre owners, through their attorney, W. R. Goldbas, questioned the legality of the ordinance and asked that action be deferred until September 7.

Glenn H. Humphrey, business representative of the Projectionists' Union, denied that the measure was "railroaded" through the council and declared the aim of the ordinance is to minimize the danger of fire for protection of the machine operators and the audience. Other speakers for the measure were Michael Walsh of the Utica Trades Assembly and James Thomas of the Electricians' Union.

RKO Executive Group Departs

Harold B. Franklin, S. L. Rothafel, Martin Beck, Robert F. Sisk and Phil Reisman, of RKO's home office executive staff, left New York on Monday for a tour of company theatre properties which will take them to the Coast. They will return in two weeks.

Bill Would Repeal Blue Law

A bill has been introduced at the special session now being held at Alabama which, would repeal the state blue laws.

Admission Taxes Below Estimates

Initial returns from miscellaneous taxes of the 1932 revenue act, covering the period from June 21 to 30, indicate that the new admission tax of 10 per cent upon tickets in excess of 40 cents will fall far short of estimates made in Congress.

Admission tax collections for all of July totaled $343,691 against $197,072 in the corresponding month last year. Allowing for a decline of one-third in business, as indicated by figures of the Internal Revenue Bureau for the fiscal year ended with June, it is estimated that collections for the last 10 days of the month amounted to $250,000, or at the rate of $750,000 a month. This would bring collections, at the present level of business, to less than $10,000,000 a year as compared with estimates of $40,000,000.

Figures just compiled by the Bureau show total admission tax collections for the fiscal year ended June 30, all of which was under the $3 exemption, as $1,858,605, a decline of $920,258, or approximately one-third, from the $2,778,864 collected during the preceding fiscal year.

Even with collections from the new taxes, amounting to some $2,650,000 for the part-month, July revenue receipts amounted to only $61,686,467, a loss of some $12,500,000 from the revenues of the corresponding month last year.

Heath Becomes Associate Producer

Percy Heath, who has been in charge of the writing department at the Paramount coast studios, Tuesday was elevated to the position of an associate producer by Emanuel Cohen, vice president in charge of production, for the company. Heath's former post has been assigned to Merritt Hulburd, until recently in an editorial capacity on the Saturday Evening Post, and for several months on Paramount's editorial board in Hollywood and New York.

Carl Winston, a member of the studio editorial board until today, will be Heath's assistant.

Fairbanks Off on Another Trip

Douglas Fairbanks departed Thursday for Japan, China and Manchuria on a big-game hunt for the long-haired tiger. Doug and his party will go first to Japan and China and then will penetrate Manchuria and probably sections of Mongolia, following which they may go through Siberia into Europe, ending up in Paris. Mary Pickford may meet her husband in Europe on the return trip. Chuck Lewis, Doug's production manager, accompanied him. New members of the party were Ken Davenport and Allan Boone, who are bringing along the cameras. The star may bring another batch of adventure to the screen.

Silver Leaving Van Beuren

Milton Silver, director of advertising, publicity and exploitation for Van Beuren Corporation, having completed his special assignment for that company on "Bring 'Em Back Alive," leaves that company September 1. Mr. Silver was formerly director of advertising for Universal Pictures. No plans announced for the future.

Charges Against Hanson by Union Head Are Denied

A sensation was caused in motion picture circles of Toronto when W. P. Covert, international vice-president of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employes, and representative of the Toronto Operators' Local, made a personal attack upon Oscar R. Hanson, general manager of Allied Exhibitors of Ontario, at a meeting of the Toronto Allied Trades Association.

Covert is reported to have said that Ontario Allied had brought in Mr. Hanson from the United States for the purpose of breaking up the operators' union and to have referred to Hanson as "a high-pressure American." Covert is alleged to have suggested that "it may be necessary to ask the Immigration Department to have this man deported."

The attack was made shortly after Hanson had left Toronto for a vacation in the wilds of northern Ontario and out of reach of any means of communication except by courier. However, N. A. Taylor, an executive official of the Allied organization, took up the matter. In a statement, denial was made of the Covert charges, and it was added that Mr. Hanson was a property-owner in Canada and had been general manager of a Canadian film exchange at Toronto for years.

Mr. Taylor pointed out that Mr. Hanson had no quarrel with members of the union but was opposed to the Ontario Government regulation requiring two licensed operators in a theatre booth as being unnecessary for public safety and as being an unrequired expense under present business conditions. According to Mr. Taylor, some operators were enjoying a larger income than the theatre owner himself.

Hays Organization Expands Script Division on Coast

Geoffrey M. Shurlock, formerly scenario editor at Paramount studio, has been appointed assistant to Col. Jason Joy in the Hollywood branch of the MPPDA. With Lamar Trotti and John Wilson, they will analyze scripts submitted by producer members under the Production Code. The expansion is the result of an increase in the number of scripts being filed under code requirements.

Cleveland Exhibitors Hear Report on Protection Friday

The Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association will hold a meeting Friday to hear the final report of their protection committee on the settlement of the monopoly suit in which the independent exhibitors charged the distributors with restraint of trade by reason of unfair protection. Myer Fine is chairman of the committee.

George Neville, Actor, Dies

George Neville, actor for 44 years on the legitimate stage and in vaudeville, died Monday in New York.

Frank A. Tichenor, publisher, this week announced Alfred E. Smith, New York's former governor, as editor of The New Outlook. Governor Smith's first issue of the new publication, a monthly, will appear September 25, in a format about the shape of Motion Picture Herald and with a black and white cover bearing the legend of the contents.

Mr. Tichenor, whose recent acquisition of the Outlook was recorded in these pages, was for many years active in various phases of motion picture work beginning with a slide concern and graduating ultimately as the last president of the famous General Film Company, the merchandise arm of the Motion Picture Patents Company.

While retaining various motion picture interests and contacts Mr. Tichenor has in more recent years been successfully engaged in periodical publication, including in his list the often quoted Aero Digest. His new enterprise in the rehabilitation of the Outlook seats Mr. Smith at the editorial desk honored by great names, including Henry Ward Beecher, Lyman Abbott and Theodore Roosevelt.

RKO-NBC TO TEST VALUES OF RADIO-FILMS HOOKUP

Aylesworth Will Use Facilities of 58 Stations in Experiment with Weekly Episodic Story of "The Phantom of Crestwood"

M. H. Aylesworth, president of RKO Radio Pictures and of National Broadcasting Company, will test the success of combining the facilities of the motion picture theatre and the radio, when, late this month, the entire facilities of NBC will be made available for acquainting the public with the story of "The Phantom of Crestwood," a forthcoming RKO production. Mr. Aylesworth expects the nationwide test to determine the value of close relationship and harmony between the two leading entertainment media.

Beginning August 26, and continuing weekly until September 30, the story of the "Phantom" will be told in episodes over 58 National Broadcasting stations. The story will be halted when the next to last episode is told. Then a contest begins, with radio listeners invited to give their idea of the solution of the mystery which, of course, will be withheld from the air.

The motion picture advance campaign will emphasize the radio series at the same time it advertises the picture in fan magazines which reach nearly 20,000,000 persons and in key city daily newspapers. Not a single phase of the entire radio broadcast will work for the independent good either of the picture or the radio. Mr. Aylesworth is basing the twofold campaign on the assumption that there is no fine division between the radio public and the theatre audience.

When Mr. Aylesworth assumed the presidency of RKO some few months ago, also continuing in charge of NBC, he announced tween the radio and film divisions of RCA.

The cast for the radio production has been chosen on the basis of experience, ability and the players' approximation of the voices of the screen players whose parts they will duplicate. The role of Gary Curtis, to be played on the screen by Ricardo Cortez will be played by Richard Gordon; Pauline Frederick's by Marion Barney; Gavin Gordon's by Allyn Joslyn; Aileen Pringle's by Helen Lowell; Anita Louise's by Eunice Howard; Skeets Gallagher's by John McGovern; Mary Duncan's by Elsie Hitz; Sam Hardy's by John McBride.

William Hanley directs the radio broadcast, which was adapted by Finis Farr, leading NBC script writer, from the story by Bartlett Cormack and J. Walter Ruben.

AUSTRALIA GETS TASTE OF CENSORS' VAGARIES

Chief Censor Indorses "Frankenstein" for All Australia. The Lesser Body Prohibits Showing in Southern District

by CLIFF HOLT
Sydney Correspondent

While extensive newspaper space is used complaining of the severity of the chief censor's judgment, quite as much censorship damage in Australia seems to be done by less notorious authorities. As an example of this, the South Australian censor board, consisting of nine persons, has taken objection to "Frankenstein," declaring its exhibition definitely forbidden as far as that state is concerned. So that now, if a South Australian wishes to see this picture, he must first cross the border into Victoria!

How long is this farce to be allowed to continue? While Cresswell O'Reilly, the chief censor, indorses a film for the whole of Australia, some other body, with supposedly less powerful jurisdiction, can override him.

If there must be a censorship system in Australia, it must at least be uniform. If you have a censor censoring for Australia, finish there. No others are necessary. Why have one official undoing the work of another?

The Adelaide censors have no reasons for banning "Frankenstein," or at all events, they have kept them dark. The motion picture business could do nothing better than organize a sustained campaign against this idea of many censors for the one people.

Greater U. T. Likes Product

Executives of Greater Union Theatres are plainly pleased with themselves over the way their first feature production, "On Our Selection," has turned out. It is understood that Greater U. T. is planning a regular production schedule for the next twelve months, and that large sums will be spent upon the studio, bringing it right up to date. The unit will not immediately be worried for stories. Australasian Films, the producing company of Greater U. T., holds the right to several stories which have been successfully used on the Australian stage and on Australian screens in the past, and these probably will be availed of first. "The Term of His Natural Life"—a great hit in this country when released as a silent—"Adorable Outcast" and "Pioneers" are the three most important.

It was thought some months ago that Stuart F. Doyle, head of Greater Union Theatres, who for the last three years has also been managing director of the Australian Broadcasting Company, would obtain a seat on the Broadcasting Commission, which, under a new policy, succeeds the former concern. That idea had dwindled more recently, however, and it was no surprise that Doyle's name was omitted when the personnel was announced.

The Commission is comprised of five persons—four men and a woman. Of the five, best known to the amusement industry is Professor Wallace, who was chief censor out here for a few years. The others, in no way connected with the entertainment world, are C. Lloyd Jones (Chairman), Herbert Brookes, formerly Australian commissioner general to the United States, R. B. Orchard, and Mrs. Claude Couchman.

Report Radio Circuit Plan

Despite his omission from the radio board, it is unlikely that Doyle will be satisfied to stay off the air completely. It is already rumored, in fact, that the A.B.C., of which he is boss, will take advantage of its experience in operating the national network, by inaugurating a circuit of B-class stations, to operate in conjunction with the joint businesses of the companies forming the A.B.C.—Greater Union Theatres, Fullers Theatres, Ltd., and Albert and Son, music publishers. There would be much to be gained by such a move, so valuable are the three companies' facilities for broadcasting work.

Another important piece of work completed by Greater Union Theatres is that which gives them, by purchase, the Theatre Royal, Melbourne. The theatre has housed stage productions for many years under the proprietorship of J. C. Williamson. Now Greater U. T. will demolish it, and probably erect a theatre in its place similar to the Prince Edward, Sydney. It is intended that it will run extended season attractions, including British films.

Compared with the previous year, the amount of revenue derived in 1930-31 from amusement taxation dropped practically 46 per cent in respect of films, and 59 per cent in the case of legitimate theatres. During 1930-31, amusement taxation revenue totaled $933,305 contrasting with $1,581,105 in 1929-30, and $1,793,485 in 1928-29.

Paramount Plans Exclusive Sales

The Paramount theatre at Atlanta is the first of several situations in which Paramount Publix is expected to develop exclusive-run distribution of the new season's product.

In Atlanta, said George J. Schaifer, general sales manager, "there are four or five theatres surrounding the Paramount that get as low as 10 cents. We consider those houses are hurting our first-run revenue in that pictures the Paramount plays later reach those theatres. Therefore no other account than our own operation will be sold in Atlanta."

Mr. Schaifer declined to say in how many situations the new policy would be applied, but it is understood that the exclusive sales will not be limited to Publix houses.

Kosch Gets $150,000 for Roxy Operation

An order was signed the other day in New York by U. S. District Judge Patterson authorizing Harry G. Kosch, receiver for the Roxy theatre, to issue receivers' certificates in the sum of $150,000. The Empire Trust Company immediately accepted the certificates, thereby enriching the theatre's operating funds by that amount.

Receiver Kosch will continue to operate the Roxy for the security holders in association with Spyros Skouras and Fox Film.

Century Circuit Plans To Build Four Theatres

The Century Circuit, operating 26 theatres in Brooklyn and elsewhere on Long Island, is planning to build four new theatres, branching out into new centers. First will be a 1,350-seat house at Baldwin, L. I., construction starting next month. All four are to be completed within a year.

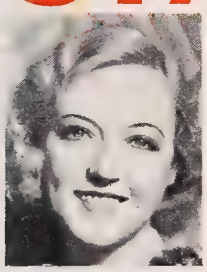
The Miracle Studio of M-G-M in Culver City, California

When all the shouting is over, when all the adjectives have been spilled and all the great promises forgotten—at the end of each year the showmen of America recognize again the unfailing dependability of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

THE REASONS FOR M-G-M's SUCCESS:

AN ORGANIZATION that works smoothly together, in its Studio, in its Home Office, in its vast field force, with the same loyal personnel it has had from the start!



M-G-M's REFUSAL to rest on its laurels. We have profited by the history of this industry and we know the only way to hold on to the Top position is to fight for it continuously with new ideas and new aggressiveness. The Young Blood philosophy of M-G-M is as alive and ambitious today as it was in our beginning.

STAR POWER! It was our policy from the first day of our existence. It is our policy now! We have built up a roster of electric light names unparalleled in all amusement history—and each year we add to that Galaxy of Stars.

GRAND HOTEL

No previous attraction ever came to the fans of America with such a background of advance promotion. 700 Road-shows at $1.50 admission have played throughout the country spreading the fame of "Grand Hotel" to every town and hamlet of the United States. In this nation of 100 million, the surface has barely been touched among potential ticket buyers of "Grand Hotel" who will see it now at popular prices!

STRANGE INTERLUDE

Shown only thus far at Grauman's Chinese Theatre, "Strange Interlude" has stimulated an advance interest in America comparable to that which sent "Grand Hotel" forward to phenomenal success. At the Chinese Theatre "Strange Interlude" is doing "Grand Hotel" business. Its reception by both press and public assures M-G-M its second Road-show triumph of the year!

REUNION IN VIENNA—The robust Viennese romance by Robert E. Sherwood, this year's biggest Theatre Guild success. It has John and Lionel Barrymore and Diana Wynyard in the cast!

SMILIN' THROUGH—Norma Shearer, Frederick March, Leslie Howard, Ralph Forbes, O. P. Heggie and more great personalities. A brilliant cast for this perfect screen romance, directed by the skillful Sidney Franklin.

RASPUTIN, THE MAD MONK—The entire amusement world awaits the first screen appearance of John, Ethel and Lionel Barrymore, together! M-G-M's ambitious spectacular drama, directed by Charles Brabin is one of the biggest entertainments undertaken by this studio in many months.

PAYMENT DEFERRED—Now the entire country will know why Charles Laughton became the overnight sensation of Broadway in this powerful stage success. Lothar Mendes directing. Cast includes Maureen O'Sullivan, Verree Teasdale.

RED DUST—Great news for box-offices, Clark Gable and Jean Harlow together! The most inflammable combination in pictures! Watch our "Red Dust"! By Wilson Collison. Directed by Victor Fleming.

PROSPERITY—"Caught Short," "Reducing," "Politics"—and now Marie Dressler, Polly Moran follow through with a comedy that promises to top their entire past record-wrecking career!

FLESH—Wallace Beery at the height of his popularity, with "The Champ" and "Hell Divers" to his credit during the past year now stars in an absorbing drama "Flesh."

MASK OF FU MANCHU—Boris Karloff's fame as "Frankenstein" won him the leading role in this All-Star thriller. In the cast: Jean Hersholt, Myrna Loy, David Torrence. This Sax Rohmer serial from Collier's is the masterpiece of the famed writer of mystery stories.

THE GOOD EARTH—M-G-M is proud to have been chosen to bring Pearl Buck's glorious novel to the screen. Still in the best seller class in its 2nd year!

ESKIMO—W. S. (Tarzan) Van Dyke is in the Artic with a large company. He will bring back a great picture just as he did when he returned from previous expeditions with "Pagan," "White Shadows in the South Seas" and "Trader Horn."

PACK UP YOUR TROUBLES—Laurel-Hardy's new feature-length comedy will beat the box-office marks they set with "Pardon Us." Watch!

TARZAN AND HIS MATE—Edgar Rice Burroughs has written a new Tarzan romantic action picture for the second appearance of Johnny Weissmuller whose public eagerly awaits him!

THE DEVIL PASSES—A great property is this Broadway stage success by Benn W. Levy, the young playwright whose succession of hits have made him the outstanding name in the current theatre.

THE PAINTED VEIL—Somerset Maugham's most thrilling narrative since "The Letter" and "Rain."

THE EDUCATION OF A PRINCESS—A remarkable human document, a current best-seller by Duchess Marie of Russia that is a proud addition to M-G-M's story properties.

LOST—Joan Crawford and Jackie Cooper in a story by Edmund Goulding, directed by Clarence Brown. There's a combination of talents that will bear watching!

THE WHITE SISTER—An inspiration to bring this glorious romance to talkies! Helen Hayes in the title role.

TINFOIL—Tallulah Bankhead comes to the M-G-M studios to appear in an absorbing story by Mildred Cram. Robert Montgomery co-stars. Count on a real hit!

MAN ON THE NILE—An original story by Edgar Selwyn, giving Ramon Novarro all the romantic opportunities that made his "Pagan" a remembered triumph!

THE OUTSIDER—The Broadway stage hit, produced in England and directed by Harry Lachman, associate of Rex Ingram, in the latter's greatest successes.

CHANGES IN 34 RKO THEATRES RAISE GROSS PROFIT 237 PER CENT

Vaudeville Withdrawn from 31 Houses and Added in Three Others; Overhead Reduced, Admission Charges Revised

Policy changes in 34 RKO theatres across the country resulted in increased gross profit of 237.59 per cent during comparative periods of from one to 14 weeks after the policies went into effect, it is revealed in a summary prepared by Harold B. Franklin, RKO theatre director.

The elimination of vaudeville from 31 theatres, and the addition of vaudeville to the programs of three theatres is regarded by RKO theatre executives as the primary policy change accomplished. In conjunction with this change, however, others were effected and involved virtually all phases of theatre operations, including personnel, admission schedules, advertising, number of daily performances, and a proportion of the savings effected by the entire RKO circuit in obtaining reductions of rentals and labor contracts. Total savings of $3,210,000 have been effected to date for the entire circuit on adjustments made on the two latter costs, alone.

Studied in Four Groups

For the purposes of the study, the 34 theatres were divided into four groups, of which the first included 20 theatres; the second, seven; the third, four, and the fourth, three. Each group represented a particular variety of theatres, locations and financial conditions.

Of the 34 theatres, 17 were operating at a profit prior to the changes in policy, but showed improvements of from 33 per cent to 1,352 per cent following the changes. Of the remaining 17 theatres, all of which were operating at a loss prior to the policy changes, eight overcame their losses and showed a profit; seven reduced their losses appreciably, and two incurred further losses.

In Group A, comprising 20 theatres, a three months improvement of $65,000 was noted over the preceding three months peperiod. One year ago the same theatres showed a considerable loss in the second period as compared with the first.

In Group B, comprising seven theatres, there was a $29,000 improvement in the second period of three months this year over the first period. Last year, this group registered a decline in profits of $111,000 in the second period as compared with the first.

Erase First Period Loss

In Group C, comprising four theatres, a $25,000 improvement was shown in the first three months over the second, this year; erasing a first period loss of $10,000 to show a profit of $15,000 in the second period. Last year, this group showed a loss of $50,000 in the first period and $29,000 in the second. In Group D, comprising three theatres, an $8,000 improvement was made in the second three months over the first. The same theatres last year showed a decrease of $42,000 in the second period as compared with the first.

These summaries represent averages for each of the four groups based on performances following the withdrawal of vaudeville from 31 theatres, comprising Groups A, B and C, and the addition of vaudeville to the three theatres of Group D. The comparative periods of three months are selected arbitrarily as the maximum period during which the policy changes have been in effect in any of the theatres. In many instances, the changes were in effect only from one to five weeks when the financial summary was drawn. In this respect, Mr. Franklin notes "the policies have been in effect too short a time to be conclusive."

Percentage Summaries

Following is a percentage summary of the results obtained from the policy changes in the 34 individual theatre locations. In every instance in this summary, the comparative periods used are the actual number of weeks the changes were in effect and the same number of weeks immediately preceding the changes.

GROUP A

(Twenty theatres showing vaudeville and pictures in the first period showed a gross profit rise of 167.31 per cent in the second period when changed to policy of pictures only.)

Akron—One theatre in the 10 weeks following the policy change showed an improvement of 142.92 per cent over the 10 weeks preceding, although operating at a profit prior to the change.

Brooklyn—Theatre operating at profit showed improvement of 59.58 per cent in 10 weeks over same period prior to change.

Flushing, N. Y.—Theatre operating at profit showed increase of 62.16 per cent in 11 weeks over same period prior to change.

Lowell, Mass.—Theatre reduced a loss of 99.79 per cent sustained in two weeks prior to change to a loss of 50.09 per cent in two weeks following change.

Milwaukee—Theatre operating at a loss for 14 weeks prior to change reduced its loss 100 per cent in 14 weeks following change.

Newark—Theatre operating at a loss for three weeks prior to change overcame the loss and showed a large profit during the three weeks following change.

New York—Policies changed at five theatres, all operating at a profit. One increased its profit 171.58 per cent in 12 weeks over same period preceding change; one increased its profit 42.94 per cent in 11 weeks following change over figure for same period immediately preceding, and in a 10-week period three theatres showed profit increases of 177.33 per cent, 274.32 per cent and 121.10 per cent over the figure for the same period preceding the change.

Portland—Theatre operating at a loss overcame the loss and showed a profit during the two weeks following the change.

Rockford, Ill.—Theatre operating at a loss showed a further loss of 492.05 per cent during the eight weeks following the change.

Salt Lake City—Theatre operating at a loss for 12 weeks preceding change overcame the loss and showed a profit during the 12 weeks following the change.

Syracuse—Theatre showing a large loss for three weeks preceding the change overcame the loss and showed a profit during the three weeks following.

17 Houses Operating at Profit Before Revision Show Improvement of from 33 to 1,352 Per Cent in Periods

Tacoma—Theatre operating at a loss of 69.96 per cent for two weeks preceding change reduced the loss to 8.78 per cent during the two weeks following.

Toledo—Theatre operating at a loss for nine weeks prior to change reduced its loss 76.07 per cent during the nine weeks following.

Troy—Theatre operating at a loss of 46.18 per cent for two weeks prior to change reduced its loss to 33.23 per cent during two weeks following.

Yonkers, N. Y.—Theatre operating at a loss for five weeks prior to change, overcame loss and showed a profit for five weeks following.

Youngstown—Theatre operating at a loss for 10 weeks prior to change reduced its loss 64.39 per cent in 10 weeks following.

GROUP B

(Seven theatres showing vaudeville and pictures in the first period showed a gross profit increase of 386.38 per cent in the second period when the policy was changed to pictures only.)

Columbus—Theatre operating at a profit for five weeks prior to change showed increase of 346.09 per cent in five weeks following.

Dayton—Theatre operating at a profit for 11 weeks preceding change increased its profit 100.89 per cent in 11 weeks following.

Detroit—Theatre operating at a loss for eight weeks prior to change showed a further loss of 79.51 per cent during eight weeks following.

Grand Rapids—Theatre operating at a loss for six weeks prior to change reduced its loss 75.01 per cent during six weeks following.

Pittsburgh—Theatre operating at a loss for six weeks prior to change reduced its loss 69.73 per cent during six weeks following.

Spokane—Theatre operating at a profit for five weeks prior to change increased its profit 586.16 per cent in five weeks following.

Washington—Theatre operating at a profit for 13 weeks prior to change increased its profit 386.38 per cent in 13 weeks following.

GROUP C

(Four theatres operating at a loss in the first period on a vaudeville and picture policy made a 251 per cent improvement and showed a profit in the second period when the policy was changed to pictures only.)

Dallas—Theatre operating at a big loss for eight weeks prior to change overcame its loss and showed a good profit for the eight weeks following.

Fort Wayne—Theatre operating at a profit for the five weeks preceding change increased its profit 97 per cent during the five weeks following.

San Antonio—Theatre operating at a big loss for seven weeks prior to change overcame its loss and showed a percentage profit equal to its former percentage of loss dur-

WHEN THE LAMPS ROCK

Then Exhibitors in Mexico Leap From Their Beds and Taxi to Theatres for Quake Inspection

by JAMES LOCKHART
Mexico City Correspondent

While exhibitors in Mexico City and many other towns throughout this Republic don't take earthquakes as jokes, they are not panicked by such phenomena. Of course, whenever the crazy dancing of electric chandeliers and drop lamps proves to him that the queer, rolling feeling is more than the effects of an extra cup of strong coffee, the exhibitor, like a true captain, is here and there in his theatre figuring out ways and means of getting the patrons to safety and hoping that nothing will happen to the house, and if it's at night he leaps out of bed and taxies to his establishment to satisfy himself that all's well. Whenever things begin to jump and jerk here, you study chandeliers and drop lights. If these are steady there is no temblor. But if they are moving, even slightly, you know that Old Mother Earth is not quite herself. Down here, laymen accept such illumination appliances as earth shock indicators; it is only temblors that can set them dancing and swaying as though they had gone loco.

Nevertheless, the worst fears of exhibitors in regard to earthquakes have seldom if ever been realized in Mexico City and many other other parts of this land. While the temblors throw a big scare into everybody, rarely is there loss of life in the great centers of population and property damage there is negligible. Such has been the case in recent years. Not since Guadalajara, capital of Jalisco state and Mexico's second largest city, a town of about 200,000 inhabitants, was practically razed by a series of severe temblors just twenty years ago this month, has the earth acted up so disastrously in the large Mexican cities. True, in such places as Oaxaca City, Manzanillo and Colima City, earthquakes of late have done considerable damage. But these places are comparatively small, buildings there are rather flimsy and old-fashioned, and they are a great distance from the sites of the larger communities of the republic.

But earthquakes in Mexico City in recent times have only made the picture houses dance. Not even visible cracks have been wrought by them in the first line establishments and no damage worth mentioning has been occasioned in the neighborhoods. This happy circumstance is attributed to the structure of the houses (architects here figure clever constructions that can withstand a good shaking) and the Mexico City terrain. The Mexican capital is built largely upon a filled-in lake which gives the soil a sogginess and elasticity which serves well when earth shocks come. Furthermore, practically all earthquakes here have been oscillatory instead of vibratory.

Independent Union's Future Now a Question

Now that a satisfactory settlement has been reached between the independent exhibitors and operators' local 327 in Cincinnati, the question arises as to the future activities of the Projectionists Union of America, which had its inception in Cincinnati in the way of an operators' school established and operated by R. A. Rheinhardt. In some quarters it is said that the union was sponsored by independent exhibitors in anticipation of differences which might arise with the union.

Rheinhardt's plan was to enroll students at a specified tuition with promise of converting the raw recruit into a finished operator, including a diploma at the end ot the term, plus a further promise of employment, when, as and if. When the independents refused to renew their contract with the operators' local last August, Rheinhardt inaugurated the Movie Projectionists Union of America. The operators thus employed now will be replaced with men from Local 327.

Several of Rheinhardt's graduate students still are on the unemployment waiting list.

Ban on Dual Bills Sept. 1

All Detroit exhibitors have been advised by H. M. Richey, manager of Allied, that the ban on double billing goes into effect September 1. More than 120 of 139 theatres have joined in the agreement, the violator's bookings to be set back 28 days.

Allied Retains Attorneys In Louisiana Restraint Suit

The New Orleans law firm of Long and Wilkinson, which numbers in its partnership United States Senator Huey P. Long and James P. Wilkinson, Jr., has been retained by Allied Theatre Owners of Louisiana, Inc., to assist the United States Government in its restraint of trade suit against United Theatres, Inc., circuit of subsequent-run houses. Co-defendants include the exchanges of Paramount Publix, Fox, RKO Pathe, First National, Vitagraph, Warner Bros., Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, United Artists and Universal. The suit is based on present protection granted United Theatres, which the Government asserts is such as to be a practical restraint of trade.

Whether the United States will accept the assistance of the law firm is not yet known. It is understood that a member of the district attorney's office here would welcome the assistance, but that the matter rests finally with Albert J. Law, special assistant to the attorney general, who will prosecute the case.

United and its co-defendants have been granted additional time in which to file their answer.

Frank Gecks, Musician, Dead

Funeral services were held in St. Louis Friday for Frank Gecks, 66, veteran musician and for a number of years president of the Musicians' Mutual Benefit Association. He died Wednesday.

Policy Changes in RKO Houses Bring Gross Profit Rise

ing the seven weeks following the change.

Schenectady—Theatre operating at a profit for four weeks prior to change increased its profit 1,352.72 per cent during the four weeks following.

GROUP D

(Three theatres operating at a profit with pictures only during first period showed a gross profit increase of 145.66 per cent during the second period on a policy of pictures and vaudeville.)

Boston—Theatre operating at a profit for eight weeks prior to change increased its profit 128.94 per cent during eight weeks following.

Brooklyn—Theatre operating at a loss for one week preceding change showed a profit equivalent to that loss on the first week following the change.

Chicago—Theatre operating at a profit for the week preceding change showed an increase in profit of 488.50 per cent for the week following the change.

The RKO theatre summary also reveals that the Palace theatre, New York, showed a profit for the first time in 15 weeks when pictures were added to the house vaudeville programs.

Ten RKO theatres, now dark, are to play legitimate next season, under an agreement made between Harold B. Franklin, R. Victor Leighton and George Loeffler. The theatres are: Proctor, Albany; Palace, Trenton; Palace, Toledo; Keith, Grand Rapids, Mich.; State and Strand, Dayton, O.; Palace, Fort Wayne, Ind.; Orpheum, Champaign, Ill.; Parkway, Madison, Wis.; Majestic, Fort Worth.

MGM Will Protest German Quota Law

M-G-M will make formal protest to the state department at Washington, and probably to President Hoover, against Germany's revised kontingent law restricting film imports. Arthur Loew, head of the foreign department, said this week that M-G-M will demand a free market in Germany on the ground that the company should not be forced to produce abroad in order to do business in Germany.

Wilton Lackaye Dead; 40 Years on the Stage

Wilton Lackaye, romantic actor, whose triumphs on the American and Continental stage span four decades, died Sunday night in New York. His 70th birthday would have fallen on September 30. He first appeared at the Star theatre in 1883 as Lucentio in "Francesca da Rimini." He last appeared in New York two seasons ago in an adaptation from the French, "The Monkey Talks."

Mr. Lackaye was actively interested in the Lambs Club and the Catholic Actors' Guild of America, of which he was a founder and an officer. He helped organize the Actors' Equity Association.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

A graveyard of lost ships, seldom seen by men, was located and photographed by W. S. Van Dyke and his polar expedition now filming "Eskimo" for Metro, according to wireless reports from the far North. It exists near the Bering Straits, on both the Alaskan and Siberian coasts, where in this icebound region dozens of ships have been caught, imprisoned for the winter and then hurled on the beaches by the terrific arctic gales. Their skeletons line both shores as ghastly souvenirs of the fury of the Arctic. The expedition was last heard from at Kotzebue Sound, some 800 miles from Point Barrow, northernmost point inhabited by men, whither they are bound.

The studio force and executives in Hollywood of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer are, like others, trying hard to break down the spy system which is working successfully whereby a crowd of preview sleuths gain admittance—uninvited and very much unwanted—to preview showings of new product which is screened in outlying districts of Hollywood in order to get audience reaction so that changes might be made before the negative leaves the Coast.

The utmost secrecy surrounds the preparation of films at the studio and a special ticket and seating system are used in an attempt to safeguard the intrusion of "outsiders," who, to date, appear to have hurdled all obstacles which have been set up against their admittance.

Terry Turner concludes RKO's latest "pep" message to theatre managers with this: "There are some spots where a good kick in the pants would cause a hectic flush if nothing else, but the general impression is that the majority are trying."

Regis Toomey, perspicacious young actor, has gone into the manufacturing business, after mature thought. Mr. Toomey is financing a small company that will confine itself exclusively to producing old horse-hair padded rocking chairs, of the type used in grandmother's days.

From Paramount we hear that Lionel Belmore the other day celebrated his 50th year as an actor by "accepting" the easiest job in Hollywood. Wearing a wreath of roses and lying on an overstuffed cushion while two slave girls ply him with fruit and drink, all the actor has to do is enjoy himself while watching festivities in Cecil B. DeMille's "The Sign of the Cross." The incident was far removed from the days, in August, 1882, when Mr. Belmore was struggling for a place with Sir Henry Irving at the Lyceum theatre in London.

Mr. DeMille revived an old film tradition the other day when he walked on the set with a megaphone under his arm and wearing riding breeches of the silent era.

Giannini, noted motion picture banker and financier, as the winner of the first leg. That was in 1928. No one has been selected since and we have a strong suspicion that someone has forgotten all about the trophy, for it now stands lonesome and tarnished in a dark corner of the lounge of the New York Motion Picture Club.

NEW CONTACT FOR U. S. WITH FOREIGN TALENT

David Diamond Organizes Guild to Provide Copies of Writings for European Production and Index of Players

In order to make the desirable facilities of European production of easier access to American producers, David Diamond, former vice-president and general manager of Tobis-Forenfilms, has organized the Continental Authors and Players Guild to function as the intermediary between the two continents in matters pertaining to all subjects of film production.

The Guild will make available to its American studio clients copies of all manuscripts and scenarios purchased for production by European studios, and, when the productions are completed, will have prints available for screenings in order that the European treatment of the stories' possibilities may be studied. Heretofore, Mr. Diamond pointed out, American producers have had to visualize the production possibilities of European stories in which they were interested.

In addition, the Guild will maintain in New York for its American subscribers a complete photographic and biographical index of qualified players, directors, writers, composers and scenarists in England, Germany, France and Hungary, who are deemed to meet American studio requirements. The Guild will also act as agent for American producers in obtaining the services of foreign talent in which they are interested.

Mr. Diamond said that this service would afford American producers full information on foreign players, particularly as to "types," pictures in which they have played, characterizations they prefer to play, and salaries.

"It is the custom when a foreign player is approached with an offer by an American studio," he said, "that the player demands a salary double or treble that which he or she is receiving abroad. Representatives of the Guild will know the exact amount each player is being paid abroad, and will know how much each should receive from an American studio. Any player making a salary demand out of proportion to current earnings will be dropped from our lists."

Foreign players selected for American availability lists, Mr. Diamond said, must be "types," must know the English language and must have a record of success or unusual promise. Screen tests of all selected players are made by casting them in brief playlets, which, he said, will afford casting directors the best possible idea of the capabilities of each.

Mr. Diamond believes that readier availability of European scenarios, made possible by the Guild's service, may effect a reduction or elimination of the occurrence of picture "cycles" in America, by making available a widely diversified supply of stories and plots.

"The 250 pictures made annually in Germany," he said, "differ in story. With variety of this magnitude made available here, I think that present picture cycles could be avoided."

Mr. Diamond said that seven large producers were definitely interested in the services offered by the Guild, and he expects that contracts will be made with them in the near future. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer has signed with the Guild for the service.

Motion Picture Film Exports Decrease

American exports of sound and silent motion pictures for the first six months of 1932 amounted to 80,596,502 linear feet, having a declared value of $2,176,923, as against 100,239,557 feet, valued at $2,801,426, for the same period of 1931, according to preliminary figures.

The greater part of this decrease is found in the exports of silent positive film, which totaled 5,715,075 feet, valued at $140.384, as compared with 17,413,718 feet, with a value of $409,689.

Positive sound film also decreased to 66,986,478 linear feet, valued at $1,498,691, from 76,323,458 feet, with a value of $1,782,833. However, negative sound film exports increased by 1,000,000 feet, or to 6,556,734 feet, from 5,488,917 feet.

Circuits Lining Up Emergency Operators

Efforts have been made by important theatre circuits at Dallas to line up 100 non-union projectionists to man their projectors in case an unmendable breach comes between the unions and the circuits. It is probable that the unions will work out a satisfactory working agreement and wage scale, but this time theatre circuits and individual theatre owners are going to be prepared.

MALIGNERS OF SCREEN DISAPPEAR WHEN BRITISH EXHIBITORS UNITE

Cinematograph Association Forms Own Defense Committee Only to Find That Enemy Has Folded Tent and Fled

by BERNARD CHARMAN
of London Correspondent Staff

For so long has the cinema been the butt of abuse by all the kill-joys, puritans and narrow-minded reformers in England that it comes as a shock to realize that all of a sudden the picture theatre is being severely left alone. The cannonade has ceased, the barrage has lifted, and the erstwhile victims are left like stout Cortez and his men in Keats' poem—looking "at each other with a wild surmise"—wondering what this sudden relief portends.

The average English showman has lived too long to imagine even momentarily that the battle is over; he is like the old soldier who knows to prepare for attack when the fury of the enemy's guns is lulled. Or he is like the wretched chap in the pillory, who knows when the rain of vegetables ceases that the only explanation of the respite is that his tormentors have gone away for more ammunition. He is certainly far too suspicious to attribute his salvation to the fact that his traducers have retired in the face of the overwhelming defense organized against them.

But is that the reason?

The Fad of Rabid Critics

For years it has been a matter of the utmost simplicity for the rabid critic to hurl his accusations at the motion picture theatre without fear of being expected to substantiate or give chapter and verse for his statements. He could make the most outrageous suggestions, safe in the knowledge that he would not be contradicted and that he probably would get a good "press" on the strength of his attacks. And so from pulpit, public platform, the columns of newspapers and magazines, came the stream of gibes and jeers.

And then the fountainhead of British showman interests, the Cinematograph Exhibitors Association, began to perceive the extent of the damage being done by the storm troops of the anti-cinema brigade. Exhibitors began to press for some form of retaliation or at least self-defense, and there was much talk of setting up a bureau to represent all sides of the industry, which would disseminate pro-cinema propaganda as well as rebutting attacks. For a variety of reasons this course was decided against, and the C.E.A. thereupon decided to establish its own Propaganda Committee. Which it did.

This committee placed itself at the disposal of every branch of the association. Formulated plans included a press campaign of rebuttal in organs reporting speeches bearing an anti-cinema bias, as well as the sending of speakers to areas in which defense of the picture theatre was required. The plan of action was admirably conceived, but, curiously enough, hardly had the Committee begun its functions before it was realized that there was little or no ill-considered criticism to rebut! As if the critics of the cinema had decided in the dead of night to "fold up their tents like the Arabs, and as silently steal away."

There have naturally been a few occasions in recent months when the committee has found it necessary to raise its voice, and, apart from one cause celebre, which has not yet been finally disposed of, there has not been one of these occasions when the retort has proved ineffectual. The antis were not prepared to have their utterances thrown in their teeth; the counter-attack has left them without courage to stand to their guns.

Apart from these instances, however, it was confusing to find the disease cured before the first dose of medicine had been made up from the doctor's prescription. If it has been cured, that is. If so, what has brought about the miracle?

Irresponsible Element

The great strength of the antis lies among the irresponsible element of reformers and self-styled welfare workers, who are not to be confused with organized public welfare bodies, such as the National Council of Women and the Mothers' Union. National groups like these have in the last few years been interesting themselves in the cinema as a social problem, and it is illuminating to find they have a great deal to say in its favor. In any case, where they do criticize it is in a constructive manner. No doubt this attitude on their part has helped to place the cinema in a more favorable light in the eyes of the sober public, and the platform ranter has found he is not receiving his former sympathetic hearing.

Again, the home secretary made an important pronouncement in Parliament earlier in the year, during the discussion on the Sunday opening bill. He said: "My very expert and experienced advisers at the home office are of the opinion that on the whole the cinema conduces more to the prevention of crime than its commission. In general, the home office opinion is that if the cinemas had never existed there would probably be more crime than there is, rather than less. . . ."

Seconded by Police

That official statement reflecting the public attitude is seconded frequently by the attitude of the police in areas where Sunday opening is in question. Almost without exception the local chief constable pronounces in favor of the practice, asserting that the young people are a far sight better off in the cinema on a Sunday evening than walking the streets.

It would appear, therefore, that both in official circles and among the public, opinion has veered towards rather than away from the cinema. Attacks on the picture theatres do not meet with popular approval, and that, no doubt, is the prime reason for the decrease of irresponsible abuse.

It is not too much to hope that the British exhibitor, having once revealed a backbone, will maintain his new-found attitude of defiance and insure that society shall preserve the fair opinion of the cinema that that indispensable institution deserves.

OYSTERS ON THE MONEY

The Indians of America used the Wampum Belt in lieu of a money of which they knew nothing. The natives of Tenino, in Washington, recently used wooden money in lieu of the cash of which they saw little. The latest, however, is the "oyster money" evolved in Raymond, also in Washington, for the purpose of relieving the cash shortage brought about by the closing of the city's sole bank. Printed on cardboard, the "coin" derives its name from the photograph of the shell-fish imprinted in the foreground. The motion picture theatres of the town, incidentally, appear only too happy to accept it.

Speaking of oysters, and the apparently major place they have assumed in the economic scheme of things, this press dispatch, from Leonardtown, Md., and the United Press, is "peculiarly" pertinent:

"Found: A profitable use for worn out automobile tires. An old tire thrown into the Patuxent River three years ago was pulled out by a fisherman. Three hundred oysters were clinging to the casing."

New Ohio Company Plans Unusual Fashion Films

The Geographic Film Corporation, a closed corporation, has been incorporated at Columbus, Ohio, to produce and distribute what is claimed to be a new type of fashion film, heretofore used only in France. Most of the films will be taken in Paris, and will feature advance fashions, with authoritative descriptions by professional models. Travel films also will be produced.

Headquarters will be maintained at Columbus. National distribution through branch exchanges to be established in important key centers throughout the country, is planned. J. Philips Parr, New York, is president, and H. S. Antrim, Jr., New York, secretary and treasurer. Mr. Parr is leaving for Paris to begin production on the initial fashion film.

Mullin Promoted to Sales Manager

J. M. Mullin of the RCA Photophone New York home office, has been appointed sales manager in Cleveland, succeeding Van Wyck Benner, resigned.

Putnam Enroute to New York

George Palmer Putnam, chairman of the editorial board of Paramount, is enroute to New York from Hollywood by air after conferring with production executives.

Segal Buys Majestic, Principal Franchises

Majestic Pictures, formed by Morris Segal at Cincinnati to distribute Majestic pictures in Ohio and Kentucky, has also arranged for distribution of Principal pictures in the same territory. Segal has opened exchanges in Cincinnati and Cleveland, with Fred Strief manager in Cincinnati and Maurice Lebensburger manager in Cleveland.

Ezell Opens New Exchange

Claude C. Ezell has opened a new independent film exchange in Dallas known as the Independent Film Distributors, Inc. Lloyd Rust has been appointed office manager. The new exchange will distribute Hoot Gibson westerns and other features made by Hoffman, all of the Monogram product for 1932-33 and Principal pictures made by Sol Lesser.

Dietrich Film Rights Sold

Stanley Distributing Corporation has made the following territorial sales of franchises on Marlene Dietrich's "I Kiss Your Hand, Madame," Greater New York, Capital Film Exchange; New England, American Pictures, Inc., of Boston; Philadelphia and Washington, Gold Medal Film Company, Philadelphia.

Sees Rare Books Copied on Films

Motion pictures are expected to solve two of the greatest problems now confronting the country's largest libraries, according to Professor Edward A. Henry, director of libraries of the University of Cincinnati. These solutions consist of reproduction of valuable books and manuscript on film, and the reduction of space now necessary to store such literature.

"At present, research scholars undertaking certain lines of study have been compelled to travel to the great library centers of America and Europe to consult original sources and precious manuscripts which were not permitted to circulate, but the film reproductions will make the majority of this material available to savants everywhere. Thus rare and inaccessible literature and documents from all sources of the world can be put into general circulation and be on file in the form of filmed books in the larger American research libraries," Professor Henry said in an address before the university faculty recently.

According to Professor Henry, the scholar desiring to use a filmed book will come to the charging desk of the library and ask for a certain manuscript. He will receive a number of small spools, each containing about five feet of film. He also will be given a small projector which can be used at a study table in an ordinary general reading room even in broad daylight, or he may be directed to a special reading room equipped with projectors. The picture will be projected on a screen about one foot square in the center of a table. When a professor desires to use the document on a larger scale, a darkened classroom will be employed. A 1,500-foot film can be stored in two circular tin boxes about two inches square and a foot in diameter, the professor pointed out. The Library of Congress, Yale University library and the Huntington University library in California now are prepared to copy books and manuscripts on film, it is understood.

Screencraft Uses Fox Studio

Screencraft's first picture, "Hotel Variety," will be made at the Fox Movietone Studio in New York, Charles Kranz, president, announced. Raymond Cannon is directing from Arthur Hoerl's story.

37 Featured in "I Am a Fugitive"

SPECIAL TAX ON NON-EMPIRE FILMS IS UP TO DOMINIONS' GOVERNMENTS

Exemption of Commonwealth Pictures Would Mean Assessment on U. S. Product Passed On to Exhibitors

Recommendation that a special levy be placed upon the rental value of all foreign pictures exhibited in the British Empire has been passed on for the consideration of the governments of British countries. The proposal was one of the suggestions in the report of the subcommittee on films to the committee on methods of economic cooperation at the Imperial Economic Conference at Ottawa.

Other clauses provide for close liaison in censorship to insure a minimum of revision throughout the Empire; the free entry of one positive print of Commonwealth films into all British countries for a period of 30 days for trade inspection; and encouragement of the film industry throughout the Empire. Bare mention is made of a suggested quota system but the committee made no recommendation in this respect.

The report was as follows:

1. In view of the far-reaching influence exercised through the film, the subcommittee urges the committee to recommend that the Imperial Economic Conference take special notice of the need for continued development of film facilities throughout the Commonwealth. We desire to emphasize the connection of this form of instruction and entertainment not only with the commercial development but with the cultural development and the general outlook of the peoples of the Commonwealth.

2. The end to be sought is not merely the development of cinematograph film production in the United Kingdom alone, but its development in all parts of the Commonwealth. The quality of Commonwealth films has shown a marked improvement in recent years and their competitive value has been strengthened accordingly; but it has been suggested to us that prior developments and financial arrangements give an advantage to other productions, and encouragement is required to insure the development of the film industry throughout the Commonwealth.

3. The subcommittee draws attention to the resolution adopted by the Imperial Conference of 1926 which reads:

"The Imperial Conference, recognizing that it is of the greatest importance that a larger and increasing proportion of the films exhibited throughout the Empire should be of Empire production, commends the matter and the remedial measures proposed to the consideration of the governments of the various parts of the Empire with a view to such early and effective action to deal with the serious situation now existing as they may severally find possible."

4. The subcommittee is gratified to note the substantial progress that has been made in the exhibition of Commonwealth films. This is mainly due to their improved quality and, in some parts of the Commonwealth, progress is ascribed to the quota system which requires that a stipulated proportion of such films be exhibited.

5. It has been suggested that aid might be given to the distribution of Commonwealth films and, at the same time, revenue might be derived by the imposition, in addition to the footage customs duties now in force, of a special levy upon the value of all foreign films displayed, this levy being based on the value of such films for renting purpose, while Commonwealth films are exempted from the levy. We appreciate that, in practice, the collection of the levy could not be made at the moment of entry because the actual value on which it should be assessed might not be ascertainable until renting contracts are made.

6. We have had under consideration the different methods of censorship in various parts of the Commonwealth. Clearly the extent and method of censorship is a matter entirely within the authority and discretion of each country; it is, however, plainly in the interests of the distribution of Commonwealth films and in the interest of producers of these films that they should be acquainted with the conditions of censorship obtaining in each part, and that films distributed in the different parts should be of a character and form requiring the minimum of censorship and consequent mutilation. The evidence produced to us shows that difficulties in this regard have been largely overcome of late but we would recommend that, in order to obviate any difficulties in the future, closer contact should be maintained between Commonwealth producers and the censorship authorities in the different countries. In particular, it would be convenient if close liaison of this kind could be maintained in London between the high commissioner's offices and the board of film censors.

7. The subcommittee agreed to refer to the committee on methods of economic cooperation for consideration a proposal that those dominions which levy a duty on films should consider the possibility of admitting a single positive of each Commonwealth film without payment of duty, under bond for exportation within 30 days, in order to afford exhibitors an opportunity of viewing the film without the payment of duty upon those films which prove unsuitable for display.

This subcommittee report was accepted by the main committee and was presented to the Conference as a whole. The next step will be the consideration of the proposals by the Parliaments of the respective countries of the Empire and the enactment of laws in the event that the recommendations are found acceptable.

The proposal for a special levy on foreign films means a tax on film rentals that undoubtedly would be passed on to the exhibitors. Productions of the United States are principally affected, but the tax would also apply to German, French, Russian and other films of foreign origin.

The chairman of the film subcommittee was Rt. Hon. J. G. Coates of New Zealand.

DANCING MASTERS ELECT ROXY MEMBER

Honorary member of the Dancing Masters of America is the new title conferred upon S. L. (Roxy) Rothafel.

Walter U. Soby, secretary and treasurer of the organization, writing Mr. Rothafel of the action, said:

"In appreciation of your efforts and interest in elevating the art of dancing and in recognition of your future plans at Radio City, the Dancing Masters of America now holding their annual convention at the Royal York hotel, Toronto, have unanimously elected you to honorary membership in our organization."

Ottawa Conference Subcommittee Proposes Free Entry of One Positive of Commonwealth Films for Thirty Days

British Films on Par, Says Toronto Paper

The Toronto Telegram has taken up the cudgels in behalf of British films. Under the heading of "Equal Opportunity for British Pictures," it says in part:

What the Government has been seeking to do, and with the concurrence of public opinion, is to secure equality of opportunity in the matter of exhibition facilities for the splendid pictures which are now being produced in Britain. If this opportunity is provided there will be no need for what is described as a quota.

"British pictures that have been shown in Toronto recently are at least as good as those emanating from Hollywood and some of them are much better. But the number of British-made films exhibited in Canada this year so far totals only thirty-two."

Would Force Inferior Films on Public, Is View

British audiences prefer American films because they are better and the movement for a protective tax on foreign films is a misdirected effort, in the view of the Kansas City Star, which says editorially:

"Apparently British film producers assume that the empire audiences for some curious and whimsical reason insist on having American pictures when they might as well have British. This unreasoning preference should be frustrated, the Britishers say, by a tax which will force the audiences to forego American films and enjoy British films.

"But why are American films popular? Not because of any whim on the part of audiences, but because they are better. . . . Baldly it is proposed that British audiences be forced to accept inferior films in order to sustain an uneconomic industry in the British empire."

Hollywood Studio in Canada

Certain unnamed Hollywood interests are allied in plans for establishment of a studio in Vancouver, B. C., announced by Capt. J. W. Hobbs, head of a Vancouver syndicate. He said that the move was in anticipation of a decision of the British Imperial Economic Conference at Ottawa to give British pictures an advantage through free duties and free censorship.

MICKEY GOES COLOR

Producer of "Silly Symphonies" for Disney Will Do Ten in Technicolor as Cartoon Innovation

by LEO MEEHAN
Hollywood Staff Correspondent

One of the world's foremost motion picture producers—himself a famous star, as well—renounces the conventional black-and-white in favor of color. And there is great rejoicing in Hollywood among the advocates of multi-hued screen entertainment.

Mickey Mouse, producer for Walt Disney of the "Silly Symphonies," announces the next ten subjects of this series will be done in Technicolor. This decision was reached as a result of the enthusiastic acclaim which has greeted the experimental subject, "Flowers and Trees," now being shown in connection with the two-a-day "Strange Interlude" show at the Chinese in Hollywood. The reception has been little short of sensational. The cartoon, resplendent in brilliant colorations, attracts almost as much comment as the feature.

Finds Artists Think in Color

It just goes to show what a producer with real imagination can do. Not so long ago Walt Disney listened to the repeated appeals of Mickey Mouse that he be given an opportunity to produce, as well as to act. Heeding the disastrous experiences of some stars, however, who tried to become producer-stars, Disney concluded it would be better for Mickey Mouse to produce pictures in which he himself had no role. So he gave Mickey a chance to present the "Silly Symphonies."

Bouncing around among the sixty or seventy artists on the studio staff, Mickey discovered that an artist thinks in terms of color. Well, then, why not allow them to work in color? Quietly, he consulted the color experts at the Technicolor plant. Secretly, tests were made. Wow, how these cartoons stuck out when the artists had a chance to express themselves in color! So Mickey induced the Disney boys to give him a chance to make a subject in color. Artists are enthusiastic, the distributors raved, Sid Grauman gave the job a place of honor on his big bill, and the public fell for the innovation like a ton of brick.

Production of the cartoons in color involves no special problems. The artists, in making up their drawings, of which there are more than 11,000 in a single subject, simply add the color. And they enjoy doing so, for they feel they can add expressiveness by the interpretative use of color, which has a definite sensitory response upon the observer. Technicolor experts find it an easy matter to produce very fine color results from these cartoons, for the reason that they have absolute control over lighting and photography, a condition not always happily present in shooting pictures with sets and actors.

Shot Just as Fast

Technicolor photography in regular dramatic production still involves care and time in the shooting which is likely to add to the expense. Not so with the cartoon. It is understood the first of the "Symphonies" was shot as quickly, if not more quickly, than the ordinary black and white subject. Hence, the only additional expense is in the printing. Color prints, naturally, are more expensive than the regular ones. But so much seems to be added to the comedy values, in addition to the added appeal to the eye, that the color cartoon looks like the coming thing.

Score a hit for Mickey Mouse, therefore, as a producer. Will that little fellow's triumphs never cease? Asked if his own pictures, the "Mickey Mouse" series, would also appear in color, Mickey winked slyly, referred the matter to Boss Disney. The latter said that as yet no plans had been made to extend the use of color to the Mickey Mouse productions. Mickey is doing pretty well "as is," thank you.

United Artists to Handle British and Dominion Product

Hubert T. Marsh, managing director of British and Dominions Film Corporation, London, and Joseph M. Schenck, president of United Artists, announced Tuesday that United will release B. & D. pictures in Great Britain, Canada, Australia and India and that a supplementary agreement ultimately will extend the contract to include all countries of the world.

Thus British pictures, which heretofore have been limited to distribution within the United Kingdom, will now receive world-wide circulation.

Nicholas to Civic Theatre

Ted I. Nicholas, former publicity and advertising department head of Skouras-Publix theatres in Indianapolis, has become publicity director of the Indianapolis Civic Theatre, local dramatic organization. He was at one time motion picture editor of the Indianapolis News.

Named Circuit Executive

D. L. Hill, for five years manager of the San Diego, Cal., district for Pacific National Theatres, has been named general manager of the company, with headquarters in Los Angeles. He will be in charge of the 11 theatres in the circuit.

Chosen for Command Performances

United Artists in India has been chosen as "supplier of cinematograph films" by the Earl of Willingdon, viceroy and governor-general, to supervise command performances at the Vice-Regal Lodge in Simla and other official headquarters.

Asks Partnership Dissolved

Gray S. Ervin of Lincoln, Maine, has brought a bill in equity seeking to have the court order dissolution of the partnership between himself and Laurence R. McLeod. They own the Paramount theatres in Lincoln and Danforth.

Story "Trends" Called a Menace

by HOWARD ESTABROOK

Scenario Writer and Winner of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences Award for the Best Scenario Written During 1931

Change of pace, freshness, newness, originality, vitality and genuine value are the prime requisites of a picture.

Socalled "story trends" draw audiences in during the first part of the trend and drive them out during the latter part. In fact, carried beyond a certain point, a trend becomes a menace. Too much thought is given to scrutinizing the current "trend," instead of endeavoring to create fresh angles that will lead the next trend.

The vitality which initiates a "story trend" fades with repetition and leads to the trivial and cheap.

The Boston News Bureau reports that trivial books and those cheap in content are at a discount. But a publishing concern noted for its serious offerings reports a record year.

Audiences are demanding genuine value in addition to entertainment, and are entitled to have it. Pictures that will attain conspicuous success in the future are those which give audiences something to think about, as well as something to see and hear, but such pictures will be successfully cloaked in entertainment qualities and will leave the nothing-to-think-about pictures in the shade.

Often the only criticism which can be levelled at a certain picture is that it should not have been produced at all; the acting may be fine, the direction excellent, the photography perfect, the dialogue delightful; but if the idea behind the picture is mediocre, the production is swiftly forgotten in the whirl of the passing months and amounts to no more than the proverbial hole in the water after the finger is withdrawn.

In the future, more and more original stories will be written directly for the screen; in this thought lies the principal hope for the solution of our story difficulties.

Delivery Service Sells Branch

Exhibitors Film Delivery and Service Company of Kansas City has sold its Denver branch. Joe Rosenberg, former film salesman who has been in charge at Denver, has returned to Kansas City and will contact exhibitors in the territory.

Screencraft Starts Production

Screencraft Attractions, Inc., begins production this week on the first of its 12 features, "Hotel Variety." Arthur Hoerl will supervise. Charles Kranz is president of the new organization.

WARNER "NEW MODEL" FILMS GIVEN COAST TO COAST TRADE SHOWINGS

First 12 Features of Season and Short Subjects Are Screened in Two Days in Key Cities; State Officials Cooperate

Warner Brothers Pictures this week made a bid for nationwide and concentrated exhibitor attention by means of a transcontinental trade showing of a group of "new model" features, which will be staged hereafter at the beginning of each new season. The merchandising of motion pictures to the trade thereby was placed in a class with automobiles, motor boats and radios, which are presented yearly in a similar setting of a glorified trade showing. Warner, too, will follow up with a vigorous newspaper campaign.

In every one of the 31 key cities where Warner has a branch office, the first 12 features of the season and various short subjects were screened on Monday and Tuesday for independent and circuit theatre owners and film buyers. In many cases newspapers, chambers of commerce, state and municipal officials cooperated. Luncheons and banquets were held for the buyers and reduced rates obtained at hotels for the several thousand who traveled to the nearest key point. It was one of the most ambitious efforts ever staged nationally by a distributor to obtain bookings and served a double purpose in bringing the company long columns of space in newspapers of the country.

The idea was conceived at a home office sales conference some time ago, attended by A. W. Smith, Eastern-Canadian sales manager; Gradwell Sears, in charge in the West and South; Norman Moray, Vitaphone short subject sales director; Dan Michalove, assistant to Major Albert Warner, and S. Charles Einfeld, director of advertising and publicity.

In Toronto the exhibit will be held for the entire week of August 30. At Boston it ran from Monday to Friday. In each city, the Warner-First National branch manager followed a comprehensive plan drawn up at the home office. Invitations were sent exhibitors, critics and local celebrities, an official hotel was designated, and in some places governors, mayors and newspaper publishers took part in the welcoming of the exhibitors. Pictures screened included "Life Begins," "A Successful Calamity," "Blessed Event," "Tiger Shark," "One Way Passage," "Two Against the World," "The Crash," "Scarlet Dawn," "Cabin in the Cotton," "Crooner," "Three On a Match" and "They Call It Sin." It was estimated by Warner that 50,000 witnessed the screenings, including exhibitors, managers, buyers and others connected with the industry.

At Philadelphia, 350 theatre owners attended an opening luncheon at the Bellevue Stratford on Monday, presided over by Richard Beamish, secretary of state of Pennsylvania, and Justice Kephart, of the Pennsylvania supreme court. Guests included the state board of censors, Kern Dodge, director of public safety, and Clinton Woodruff, director of public welfare. Nine women's clubs were represented and following the luncheon 1,200 attended the showing.

In New York, 1,000 were welcomed by Joe Vergesslich and Sam Lefkowitz, branch managers. They attended the Strand, Winter Garden and Hollywood theatres and made headquarters at the Park Central. Seven hundred owners attended at Los Angeles, in charge of Harry Lustig, who reported 1,300 additional guests in the persons of studio and civic celebrities.

New England exhibitors, numbering 800, gathered for the entire week at Boston. R. T. Smith, manager at Milwaukee, reported 900 were welcomed by the chamber of commerce and local merchants, headed by the mayor. A buffet luncheon was given. With 900 at Indianapolis, likewise in cooperation with the chamber of commerce and the mayor, and 400 at New Haven, other cities reported sizeable gatherings, including Denver, where the governor cooperated; Albany, showing to 400; Buffalo, 750; New Orleans, 700; Omaha, 650; Kansas City, 600; San Francisco, 850, with a welcome by city officials. Pittsburgh had 600; Salt Lake City, 250; St. Louis, 500; Des Moines, 220; Minneapolis, 550; Seattle, 500, and Memphis, 230. Several thousand additional guests attended, including friends of exhibitors, local and state dignitaries and newspaper writers and editors.

New Skouras St. Louis Action

The legal tangle involving the tangled affairs of the St. Louis motion picture theatres formerly controlled by the Brothers Skouras was further complicated when a suit seeking to set aside the transfer of an interest in the Ambassador and New Grand Central theatres and to have a receiver appointed to take active charge of the management of the amusement palaces was filed in St. Louis circuit court. H. Laurence Miller and M. Laphan, who filed the action, identified themselves as the holders of bonds issued by the Central Properties Corporation and secured by a deed of trust on the two theatres and their equipment.

RCA Announces New Microphone

Development of a new kind of microphone, which RCA Victor promises, will bring about revolutionary improvements in the quality and technique of sound, was announced last week from the Victor laboratories at Camden, N. J.

The new microphone is said to reproduce sound with a new fidelity, and, in addition, embody technical advantages which will solve studio problems, according to the company. Unlike existing types, which utilize diaphragms, the new "velocity" microphone utilizes a sensitive ribbon of duralumin, the heart of the mechanism, which vibrates exactly with the minute variations of the air particles set in motion by the sound waves. It is said to respond uniformly to the entire audible range of sound from zero to 14,000 cycles and over.

Another advantage claimed is its "positive directional characteristics." In radio and in recording work this means that it will no longer be necessary to crowd entertainers on one side of the microphone. Performers may speak their lines while facing each other on opposite sides of the microphone and large orchestras may be more advantageously placed for best ensemble effects. It also simplifies the problem of studio acoustics, because reverberation pickup may be varied simply by adjusting the angle of the microphone. In sound motion picture recording, it is possible to place the camera at absolute right angles to either sensitive side of the microphone where sound pickup is almost down to zero and eliminate entirely the noise of the camera grinding, and even permit whispered directions to performers which this microphone will not transmit, according to the announcement.

YOUR PUBLIC

by RITA C. McGOLDRICK

We have heard a good deal lately about the encroaching daring and evil of motion picture production. Studio release sheets announce risque themes, disbarred subjects. But suddenly, out of a somewhat heavy and cloudy sky, the sun has come through with that welcome and warming light that recreates discouraged things.

An exact survey of the reviews of the national groups engaged in classifying films tells us statistically the story of the past six months of motion pictures. These groups are the General Federation of Women's Clubs with its aggregate membership of more than three million club women; the Daughters of the American Revolution; the International Federation of Catholic Alumnae; the Y. M. C. A.; the University Women; the Parent-Teachers' Association; the Boy Scouts and the American Library Association. These groups cover, in preview, practically every picture released by the industry in this country as well as every picture that comes into New York from abroad. The compiled figures of their combined reviews for the past six months are as follows:

FEATURES

Feature Pictures Reviewed	194
Recommended for adults	103
Family Audience pictures, including 26 juvenile films	56
Not recommended	35
Percentage of endorsements	82%

SHORT SUBJECTS

Short Subjects reviewed	322
Recommended for family audiences	242
Recommended for adults	31.
Not recommended	49.
Percentage of endorsement	84.8

For those who would indict the makers of motion pictures for lewdness, immorality, vulgarity, these figures are an important defense. In fact, there is more to be said on the subject than the figures imply. During the past year several important adult pictures have come to the screen. We have had cinema's version of "The American Tragedy," "Grand Hotel," "The Guardsman," "As You Desire Me," "Back Street" and "Strange Interlude." These are outstanding examples of adult audience entertainment. The producing companies have made no claim that this type of picture is suitable for the juvenile or the adolescent. But there is place on the program of adult entertainment for the strong, bitter plot produced with respect for moral values and common decency.

There is no better example, in this group of frank pictures, than Universal's "Back Street." This is the filmed interpretation of Fannie Hurst's important but sordid story of a woman who lives a pitiable life of sin because she loves deeply, irrevocably. The book offered unlimited opportunities for sensational picturization. Universal made the picture a great human document. The International Federation of Catholic Alumnae has written a formal letter to Universal complimenting the company on the restraint, dignity and moral value of "Back Street" as it has come to the screen.

In every instance these same strong stories presented on the legitimate stage were more frankly suggestive, more damaging than on the screen. Very many adults were unable to attend the stage presentation of these subjects. The screen has offered them a better and a less expensive choice.

Editorial Sanity

Gradually, throughout the newspapers of the nation, there is a growing understanding that the adult has a right to adult entertainment, and that the child is entitled to an intelligent direction in the choice of his entertainment. For there are two classes of pictures and the parent is directly responsible for the selection that the child may make.

The Augusta (Ga.) Chronicle, discussing a recent survey of the New Haven Council of Churches, says in part:

"The point about the whole thing, of course, is that motion pictures are not supposed to be good for children. One would scarcely think of giving, say, so sophisticated a book to them as Cabell's 'Jurgen.' It is not necessarily better, nor even anywhere as good as a child's book, or an adult's book, as 'Gulliver's Travels' or 'Alice in Wonderland.' It is obvious that we should have pictures addressed to adults and others especially addressed to children. . . .

"It is undoubtedly true that situations developed through the conflict of criminals with the police, and the racy sex action of the movies, are not for the young. It is possible to provide pictures which may be stirring tales of adventure, or broad comedy which may be wholesome, but not dull.

The Worcester (Mass.) Telegram, offering its viewpoint on this subject, says:

"Many pictures are not suitable for children and in this instance the producers should not be accused of failing to do their duty toward the public. It thinks 'certain foods are not good for very young people.' But nobody suggests that all the farmers and producers and manufacturers in the land should refrain from putting on the market anything not proper for an infant to eat. The producers are in the business of producing and selling entertainment for adults. There is no good reason for compelling the producers to think mainly of children.

"If motion pictures are destroying the home and causing divorces, as the reformers allege, it would seem that Reno is working against its best interest through the Better Films Committee of that community. The committee may be accused of 'uplifting' divorces, but it is functioning in a straightforward and clear manner in behalf of the best achievements of the motion picture."

50 AUTHORS ON PARAMOUNT STORY

Paramount has asked more than 50 noted authors to submit short stories for selection as episodes to be incorporated in the picture, "If I Had a Million." Only five of the stories submitted will be selected, the five to be developed into the screen story centering about the lives of five persons suddenly willed $1,000,000 each through the whim of a millionaire.

Sees Toronto Most Solid City on The American Continent

Declaring that he looked over the returns from 1,600 theatres each week, J. J. Fitzgibbons, director of theatre operations for Famous Players Canadian Corporation, in a Toronto interview recently on the theatre situation generally, said: "I have the whole picture and I am inclined to think of each theatre as a barometer of the state of business of its locality. Judged by this standard, Toronto is, without a doubt, the most prosperous and solid city in North America right now. Throughout Canada as a whole there is a quicker response to a really good picture than in any other district I know.

"We believe that our business will be better than the railroad business, the mercantile business or most industries if we can only get the right formula to draw the public and we think we can," said Fitzgibbons. The executive asserted that some difficulty had been experienced with organized labor "because they do not seem to understand there is a depression and that it does really change a lot of things." In this quarter alone, however, the Canadian company had reduced its weekly payroll by about $5,500. There had been reductions in wages and salaries, a doubling up of work in some instances, elimination of overtime and a general consolidation of positions, while much statistical work, formerly considered necessary, had been eliminated, he said.

"In Canada, with the exception of a few cities, there is not nearly the same problem of over-seating as there is in the United States, and the Canadian circuit is, speaking generally, in excellent shape," he said. "The producer is getting away from sexy and gangster stories," said Fitzgibbons. "The public demands a better story. A certain number of best sellers will be filmed, but also original stories of a more human type that do not express depression."

Latvia Cancels Quota Law

The outstanding event of the year in the Latvian film market is the abolition of the contingent system (import quota). According to the new law, films can be imported into Latvia without restrictions; they are subject, however, to the usual censorship before showing. Most American sound films, now being shown in Latvia, are appearing with dialogue cut out entirely; only songs are reproduced. Titles must here after be in the Lithuanian language.

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 140.—(A) Just what, if any, relations are there between electricity and magnetism? (B) Explain just what polarity is. (C) Tell us, so far as you can, just how it is possible to obtain power from a machine called a motor at a point far distant from the electric generator. (Watch your step. There are several things this last question calls for an explanation of.)

Answer to Question No. 132

Bluebook School Question No. 132 was: (A) Is it essential to best results that condenser lenses have well polished, true, clean surfaces? (B) What will happen if the condenser lens be permitted to become clouded with fine dust? (C) What will happen if the condenser lens be not perfectly true as to its curved surfaces? (D) How may the projectionist demonstrate the fact that each pinpoint of the converging lens projects a pencil of light forward to its exact appointed location in the "spot"?

Frankly, Section D of the question was in the nature of a "catch." Just wanted to see how many of you would be able to catch the catch, which is that each point does not project a "pencil" of light, but a diverging beam or cone. Only five men, out of all the hundreds answering, made answers which I can class as correct, but of them two were rather in the nature of a sidestep. Brother Borst, however, while not noting the "pencil error," got by correctly, or near-correctly, by saying: "A small hole drilled in a metal plate placed against the face of the converging lens will prove that when light is projected through it, all rays travel a straight path from lens to spot." Those answering all other points and "getting by" on Section D were G. E. Doe, Lester Borst, Evans and Rau, and T. Van Vaulkenburg.

Those answering correctly on all other points were: S. G. Williams, John Wentworth, Bill Doe, Dan Holler, H. Edwards, N. Granby, D. Anderson, D. Lambert, H. L. Davis, S. Carroll, H. B. Coates, D. L. Sinklow, M. McGuire, D. Andrews, J. Abruzzo, B. L. Simpkins, S. Kay, J. L. Major and D. B. Bates, F. F. Franks, A. Bailey, A. Wells, B. Diglah, D. Emmerson, R. Singleton, F. D. Prinde, K. L. Knight, J. Rathburn and D. Little, H. D. Schofield, T. McGruder, D. L. Mason, B. E. Danning, A. Breaston and G. Lombard, P. O'Brien, C. Peters, J. Cermak, T. Murphy and L. Andrews, P. T. Garling, A. Zerach, G. Deckson and L. Cranlo, F. B. Gamble, P. L. Davis and J. Torr, J. Daniels, B. R. Compton, D. L. Simmons, R. Giddings, G. Tinlin, H. D. Cylor, W. Broadbent and J. Granby, A. Jones and L. T. Foley, G. Farmann, R. Pierce, J. Ahrenson, A. Ilks, T. Howard and D. L. Buckstein, D. V. Peterson, A. L. Howard, J. Granby, L. S. Marksley, R. Dwight and L. M. Dwight, H. L. Harvey, F. Ferguson, N. T. Potter, D. Golding, C. D. Donahue, P. H. Chiotis, S. Chesney and T. Lavery, L. D. Solomon, H. M. Evans and L. F. Bilven.

We will let G. E. Doe answer Section A of this one. He says:

"For best results any lens must have clean, polished, true surfaces. The ordinary condenser lens is a cheap product, having both the faults of chromatic and spherical aberration. In such a lens we may not expect perfection. However, since it is advantageous to have the image of the light source broken up, neither of the above named faults or slight inequalities in the lens surface have much importance, so long as all the light reaches the spot. Chromatic aberration is the most harmful of condenser faults.

"The condenser lens surface must, however, be kept free from dust and dirt if maximum excellence in results are to be expected, since any such accumulations would set up additional loss by reflection, and to a certain extent diffuse and misdirect light, all of which would mean inefficiency in operation."

We will let Lester Borst answer Section B. He says:

"Reflection losses are present with all lenses. Such losses are reduced to their minimum by keeping the lens surfaces perfectly clean and well polished. Permitting a lens surface to become fogged with dust or anything else will serve to increase surface reflection losses in proportion to the amount of the deposit and its character. Such losses may rise to a point where the loss is serious. Moreover, they may be of such nature that the light quality will suffer. It might be also said that deposits may be so slight as to be invisible to the eye when looking directly through the lens, and still reduce the efficiency of the lens to some extent."

There is such a wide divergence of opinion expressed in the various answers that I think I will answer Section C myself. While it is very true that, broadly speaking, every lens surface should have a perfectly true surface, still when a condenser lens is under consideration, there are arguments possible on this point. If it be the collector lens of a plano-convex condenser, then some slight lack of perfection in curvature or plane surface will do no practical harm, though theoretically it will make for unevenness of screen illumination.

When we consider the converging lens, we must remember that the light source is focused near the projector aperture plane, and the aperture plane is focused at the screen. We all know that no light source presents a perfectly even source of illumination. As a matter of fact, they come far from that, and if they were focused at the aperture the screen would look pretty terrible. We therefore focus the light source ahead of the aperture plane and the spherical aberration assists materially in breaking up and smoothing out the aforesaid inequalities. Is it not, then, reasonable to presume that some slight imperfections in the converging lens surfaces, provided they be not too great to misdirect light outside the spot, may serve to assist in this very necessary process. I am not myself prepared to express a positive opinion on this point, which has not heretofore been raised, but am inclined to believe slight faults of this kind may be more beneficial than otherwise. Glad to hear from our readers on this point.

Section D I shall also answer, since no one made an altogether satisfactory reply. The Bluebook tells you to cover the face of the converging lens with a thin metal plate in which tiny holes have been drilled. Since that book was written I have evolved a better method, as follows: Coat the convex surface of the converging lens with a mixture of lampblack dissolved in turpentine. Make the mixture fairly heavy. You can wash it off again and no injury will be done the lens. Coach-painters' black may also be used. Wash the surface perfectly clean with soap and water before you try to coat it. When the coat is dry, using a needle point, make a tiny hole in the coat and project the light through it. You will find, by blowing smoke into the air, that a cone of light will go forward to the fire shutter. By dabbing paint over the hole and making others at different distances from the lens center, you may observe exactly how each zone of the lens acts and how the "spot" is made up.

MEETINGS

MOTION PICTURE HERALD presents each week a calendar of events and meeting dates of exhibitor and production associations and other non-commercial organizations in the industry. The secretaries of all such associations are urged to forward to the editor necessary data for inclusion herein, of both regular and board of directors meetings.

SHOWMEN'S REVIEWS

This department deals with new product from the point of view of the exhibitor who is to purvey it to his own public

THE concept of this department is that the exhibitor is concerned not with any critic's idea of "how good?" or "how poor?" but rather with the question of precisely what the product is and what is to be done with it when and as it is played. The exhibitor, in general, is concerned with the special aspects of strength and of weakness in the product, its appeals and shortcomings, that he may adequately deal with it when he becomes its sponsor to his public. These "review" pages aim to aid the exhibitor as the retailer of the merchandise concerned.—THE EDITOR.

Once in a Lifetime

(Universal)

Satire and Comedy

One grand laugh from start to finish. It's theme is to satirize and ridicule almost everything that Hollywood holds holy. It pulls the curtains wide apart on a lot of inside stuff in picture making—handing out to fans the things they like to think are the things that make the wheels go round in a great big studio. But everything is done in fun. Where Hollywood pokes fun at itself, it is done for a laugh, and clocking the laughs in this one would produce about one every fifteen seconds.

Unlike "What Price Hollywood" and "Make Me A Star," it never attempts to become serious. Or if it does become serious that seriousness is only to accentuate the fun in the minds of your audiences. Though there is a hint at it, there is no real drama to speak of. In short it always stresses the absurdity of anyone trying to be serious in a place where the world refuses to believe anyone can be serious.

A detailed synopsis would require much more space than is permissible here. Suffice to say it relates the adventures of three stage actors who try to crash the gates of filmdom. They will see it played by actors who probably experienced it themselves when they were trying to make the grade themselves. Cast names you have in abundance and Jack Oakie, Aline McMahon, Louise Fazenda, Gregory Ratoff, Zasu Pitts, Robert McWade and Jobyna Howland are all synonymous with the word "comedy."

First get over the idea that it's a load of inside stuff on Hollywood—its people and its fads and foibles—that its a melange of racial foolishness, and that it's a masterpiece of satirical, ridiculing burlesque in which Hollywood has the courage to turn the laugh on itself.

Everything should be done to heighten the Hollywood atmosphere. Guarantee that they will get more fun out of this one than in any other picture in a long time. You don't have to worry about selling it to any type of audience and all ages from the youngest kids to the gray haired grandmas. In cities, where it appeared on the legitimate stage, theatres should have no difficulty in acquainting their patrons with "Once In A Life Time." But wherever the picture is played, it should be circused with smart showmanship, with everything from gagging a Hollywood opening night—search lights, radio, celebrities—down to any kind of an interest creating trick stunt.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Based on the stage play of the same title by Moss Hart and George Kaufman. Screen play by Seton I. Miller. Photographed by George Robinson. Directed by Russell Mack. Release date, Oct. 20, 1932. Running time, 75 minutes.

Strange Justice

(RKO Radio)

Drama

This picture, which was made by J. G. Bachmann for RKO Radio release, takes a rather long time to get under way, but when it does it hands out a punch. In the last reel and a half, it builds up powerful dramatic suspense.

Because of the slow beginning and despite the five big names in the cast, "Strange Justice" needs a strong supporting bill of short subjects to bolster up your program.

Tell your people that here is a picture wherein they will find a climax that makes the end worth while waiting for. Add a healthful plugging of the star names—Marsh, Denny, Bennett, Pichel and Norman Foster. Romance, drama and a little villainy crops out early in the picture.

After some time devoted to establishing the basis of the story, it is brought out by Richard Bennett, a shoddy looking old lawyer, that no man should be convicted on circumstantial evidence. Foster and Miss Marsh are in love and Marsh gets him a job with a banker friend, Denny, as chauffeur. Denny wants Miss Marsh, but his banking partner, Pichel, discovers that he has been embezzling bank funds and gives him the works.

Foster and Marsh are to be married. A flat is furnished on money that Foster is supposed to have won in a lottery, but which Pichel really plants on him. After giving Foster a diamond ring as a present for his bride, Denny is supposed to be killed.

With the money and ring in his possession, Foster, who has had a fight with Denny, is accused of the crime. Circumstantial evidence convicts him and then in the last reel or so comes the dramatic suspense as Foster waits to be electrocuted. The clock goes right up to twelve. The executioner's hand is on the switch as Miss Marsh and Bennett bring Denny to the prison. He has been wounded by Pichel, but before he dies he details the whole plot.

If you try to deal fairly with your patrons, it would seem helpful to make straight-from-the shoulder announcements that the final ten minutes of this picture will give them more of an emotional surge than is usually found in the entire length of a regular feature.

Build a good program of special shorts around "Strange Justice," using the title and cast names as strongly as you can and it should prove to be a midweek picture that would hold up to average business.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

A. J. G. Bachmann Production. Story and screen play by William A. Drake. Directed by Victor Schertzinger. Music by Victor Schertzinger. Photographed by Merritt Gerstad. Release date, Sept. 16, 1932. Running time, 74 minutes.

The Gorilla Ship

(Mayfair)

Romantic Drama

An effort has been made to cram so much drama, romance, intrigue, jealousy, lust, mutiny, retribution and action into "The Gorilla Ship," that the picture seems to miss its mark and your audiences may be inclined to titter where the theme of the story calls for them to be tremendously impressed with its power.

The story deals with the old triangle, to which another angle is added. Wells, jealous of his wife because he believes her to be in love with Burton, deliberately wrecks his yacht at sea. He is rescued by a boat of which Larson is the captain. Next day, Mrs. Wells and Burton are saved. Larson is all set to keep Mrs. Wells for his own. Then he learns the identity of the first man saved. Through a lot of brutality it is established that the crew hates its captain.

After hearing Wells' story, Larson keeps Burton locked up, but when he gets too friendly with Mrs. Wells, she smuggles a note to Burton. Then it develops that Larson and Burton are old pals. Larson wants to kill Wells, but is persuaded not to. This all opens the way for a mutiny, as Wells goes to work on the crew. The upshot is that Larson kills Wells and puts Burton and Mrs. Wells in a lifeboat to make their way back to land.

This picture was evidently made for those who like their entertainment in the raw. For that reason, particular care should be taken that no over-promising is done. Likewise, it would be wise to build a strong supporting program.

Your patrons know the type of actor that Ralph Ince is and the pictures in which he plays. Probably his name will be the best selling angle, inasmuch as he can portray ruthlessness and cruelty, but the finale of the picture paints him in the role of a romantic hero who knows the difference between right and wrong. Other than Ince, the only name that might help at the box office is Wheeler Oakman and that naturally should be used in houses where he is fairly well known.

Undoubtedly this picture was made to play in the smaller theatres. For that reason, it does not call for any extensive advertising campaign. It may be possible to build it up by surrounding the title and star names with catchlines that suggest the power of a ruthless sea captain to make his own laws and do as he likes

The Love Contract

(British & Dominions)

Comedy

This picture should make money for you . . . and you . . . yes, sir, and you, too! It's bright and snappy; it's got the players, the sets, the director. It's one of the brightest little shows that ever came out of an English studio.

It has for its heroine a little girl called Winifred Shotter, but a different Winifred from the one in the Walls-Lynn comedies. In those she never had a chance to do much more than look pretty and helpless, but in "The Love Contract" she comes into her own and proves that in her the British film industry has unknowingly possessed a star of first magnitude. You'll have to boost her as a British film find, tell your patrons plenty about her. She has the looks, the charm, the form, the voice and the personality—and she can act.

That's your big bet on this picture. You needn't be afraid, either, that the support is lacking, for the other principals jump into it with snap and vigor, so that the story advances at quick speed. For itself the story doesn't count for much, being the simplest of variations on an age-old theme. The wealthy Antoinette loses her money and becomes chauffeur to the man who unwittingly ruined her. She bets him she'll hold the job for three months, he to restore her property if she wins and she to marry him if she loses. They both win, after a series of escapades allowing ample opportunity for comedy and romance, all whipped up into a froth and served hot.

You have things to talk about like sumptuous sets, a couple of excellent tunes for plugging—"Antoinette" and "Automobile"—a prominent German director (Herbert Selpin) who has produced the film according to the best Continental traditions, and a chorus of bathing beauties who really have the goods.—Charman, London.

Produced by British & Dominions at Elstree, England. Directed by Herbert Selpin. Director of productions, Herbert Wilcox. Story by J. de Letraz, C. Desty and R. Blum. Adaptation by Miles Malleson. Music by Ralph Benatsky. Running time, 82 minutes.

Tiger Shark

(First National)

Undersea Drama

This picture is vividly different from the run of screen attractions, it is well acted, has a gripping story and dramatic spectacle.

The title is intriguing, and the showman should take full advantage of it as a "natural." As for names, Edward G. Robinson does an effective job, and so does Richard Arlen. But the actors with the thrill are the great groups of man-eating sharks. By underwater photography their ferocity is brought right up onto the screen.

The story, an epic of the Pacific Coast tuna-fisherman, concerns Mike (Robinson), who, when the captain of the boat falls overboard and is devoured by the sharks, assumes command. The dead man has left a daughter, Zita Johann, with whom Mike falls in love, but he has lost an arm in a battle with the big fish. A romance is growing between Zita and Pipes (Arlen), even though she marries Mike in respect to her father's wishes. Mike discovers their relations and throws Pipes overboard, but he himself goes over when his foot catches in a rope. Pipes is saved, but Mike, mangled by the sharks, dies.

"Tiger Shark" has about everything in the way of new and powerful entertainment, and it is handed out in a way that everyone can see and understand. It offers an unusual opportunity to build an "all-thrill" show, surrounding the feature picture with shorts of the Zane Grey type or some of those MGM-Pete Smith shorts. If you go in for special lobbies, tie-up with some museum or someone in your town who has a collection of sharks—either in picture or actual form. Undoubtedly the exchanges will have a raft of striking stills. Spot them around in different windows. But don't go in for any fish-market tie-ups unless the owner has some particularly unusual looking specimen. In your advertising stress the realistic novelty of the picture and get over the idea that there is no studio stuff in this one, that the sharks are real sharks and the danger is real danger. Top that off by telling them that you have Robinson in his best picture.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Story by Houston Branch. Screen play by Wells Root. Photographed by Tony Gaudio. Directed by Howard Hawks. Release date Sept. 24, 1932. Running time, 80 minutes.

CAST

The Limping Man

(Powers)

Mystery

Here is mystery of a sort, with the addition of a murder or two and the private detective who unravels the case, but there is little unusual, nothing particularly striking about performance, plot or the development. The film, however, has its moments, and selling of the picture must be based upon making the most of those moments and the several features which offer opportunity for showmanship.

The title may be utilized as the mainspring of the campaign. When tied with the thought of the mystery film, it has a definite implication of the mysterious, the vengeful.

Do not ignore any chance to instill that impression in the minds of the potential audience. Make them curious about that "limping man" and they may come around to discover what it is all about.

The exhibitor has comparatively little with which to work in the matter of cast, as far as widespread familiarity with the names is concerned. Perhaps the best performance is that of Franklin Dyall as the private detective, and Lester Matthews who, in a dual role of the two brothers, offers one of the leading roles in a satisfactory manner. In view of the weakness of name value in the cast, therefore, it might be best to omit the names from the marquee, with the exception of Dyall.

Stress the mystery and revenge elements of the story. The fact that it is a screen adaptation of a story by Will Scott may possibly have some value in the selling. The action takes place almost entirely in a country home, with the limping man, an ex-convict, on the vengeance trail of Matthews, whose squealing, we are given to understand, led to the jailbird's incarceration. Matthews temporarily does away with the brother he so closely resembles and poses in his stead. The detective deduces the impersonation to the satisfaction of all concerned, including the girl to whom the brother is engaged, and perhaps to the audience.

It will require real selling, and probably the aid of a contest of some sort for the best solution or the like, to put this film over to above ordinary business. Best played during the week, with nothing objectionable for the juvenile.—Aaronson.

Insult

(Paramount-British)

Drama

Here's a story with possibilities that has been impaired by the dialogue, casting and acting, a handicap to such a capable director as Harry Lachman.

The story comes within the Foreign Legion category, with plenty of well-suggested Arab atmosphere; there's the eternal triangle, with the local French civil representative, his wife, and a handsome young half-caste officer—half Arab, half French—at the corners; and an avenging fury in the form of an officer of the old school, looking severely down his nose at all Arabs and "dirty halfbreeds." Other ingredients include a friendly sheik, weird desert music, a faithful servant, and the romantically-minded old nurse (who supplies the comic relief).

In spite of that, it's not possible to make a great deal of it, with lagging action, the unconvincing performance of several of the principals and always that tedious and bookish dialogue. The film is colorful enough, the settings are all that could be desired and the crowd scenes bear sufficient suggestion of authenticity. In one brief sequence excitement is introduced by a series of flashes of tribesmen swooping down on the white battalion, and a showman might squeeze some satisfaction from this.
